PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 6, 1922.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 3, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reassembled.

REPORT OF CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., of Washington, D. C., transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of that company for the year 1921, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENT.

Mr. HALE (for Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN) presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY, New Jersey.

Concurrent resolution congratulating the President of the United States upon his achievement in the promotion of world peace by the calling of the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments.

Whereas the President of the United States has invited the chief nations of the earth to a Conference on the Limitation of Armaments; and

Whereas the said limitation of armaments is the most important problem now confronting the nations of the earth; and

Whereas the action of the President of the United States in assembling said conference entitles him to world-wide gratitude: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of assembly (the senate concurring), That we, the members of the One hundred and forty-sixth Legislature of New Jersey, do extend to the Hon. Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, our best wishes and cordial support in his noble and patriotic effort to achieve peace on earth and good will among the nations thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State, and to our Representatives and Members of Congress.

I hereby certify that this is a copy of a concurrent resolution adopted by the general assembly in session January 16, 1922.

T. HARRY ROWLAND,
Speaker of the General Assembly.

Attest:

UPTON S. JEFFERYS,
Clerk of the General Assembly.

I hereby certify that the concurrent resolution was concurred in by the senate in session January 23, 1922.

WILLIAM B. MACKAY, JR.,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

U. H. ALLRIGHT,
Secretary of the Senate.

PETITIONS.

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Willmar and Benson, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LADD presented 21 petitions of sundry citizens of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Slope Valley Farmers' Club, of New England, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation appropriating $5,000,000 for the relief of farmers in drought-stricken regions, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REMISSION OF DUTY ON CHURCH BELLS.

Mr. CURTIS. I report back favorably from the Committee on Finance, without amendment, the bill (S. 1610) to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass., and I submit a report (No. 481) thereon.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Kansas. It is a very small matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit free of duty a certain carillon of 25 bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLASSIFICATION OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, from the Committee on Civil Service I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services.

I desire to say in this connection that on to-morrow, or at the latest the next day, I expect to present a written report to accompany the bill.

Further, I may say that when the reclassification bill (S. 13), together with the Smoot reclassification bill, was referred to the Committee on Civil Service of the Senate it was with the understanding, and so stated in the motion, that when that bill or any bill was reported back from the Committee on Civil Service it should go to the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of considering the salary schedules provided for in the bill. So this bill will, I presume, take that course and be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for the consideration of salary schedules only.

I trust that the Committee on Appropriations will be able to give early consideration to the bill. It is an important bill and there is urgent need for the legislation proposed. I hope for an early report by the Appropriations Committee on the bill and that it may have the consideration of the Senate very soon after having been reported back from the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT OF PENAL LAWS.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2703) amending an act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 483) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALE (for Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN):

A bill (S. 3116) for the relief of James Kelly; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3117) to amend the act of April 16, 1906, and the act of February 24, 1911, relative to the lease of surplus electric power on Federal irrigation projects; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3118) for the relief of Herbert E. Meilstrup; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 3119) granting a pension to Mary Wotherspoon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3120) providing for the deportation of aliens convicted of unlawful possession of or traffic in drugs or narcotics; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. STANFIELD:

A bill (S. 3121) authorizing the exchange of lands within or contiguous to the Malheur National Forest, in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 3122) granting an increase of pension to Lola G. Crawford (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3123) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites," approved January 13, 1897, as amended; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ARTHUR G. REED.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That leave is hereby granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the affidavits of Barbara Reed and M. Newman and the certificates of Dr. A. S. Gish and Dr. Jerome Kidder, filed with S. 2032, granting a pension to Arthur G. Reed, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I move that the report of Secretary Weeks on the Muscle Shoals proposition which was sent to the House be printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that this matter may go over for the present, because a Senator spoke to me about it on Saturday, and I think he has a belief that the report ought to go to another committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if there will be any delay about it and when the Senator to whom he refers will return?

Mr. CURTIS. I think he will be here to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. With that understanding, I have no objection to the matter going over. I only wish to avoid any delay, and am anxious for the Senate to consider it and not wait until the House passes it. Secretary Weeks in his report urged prompt consideration. On Saturday I called up the Secretary's office to request that he also send the report to the Senate, but the Secretary was out of the city. I tried to reach him over the telephone this morning, but he was in conference.

PROPOSED LOAN TO HAITI.

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 233) was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the United States, through its naval forces and officials, acting under the direction of the State Department, is in control of Haiti and the Haitian Government; and
Whereas it is proposed that a loan of $14,000,000 be negotiated in behalf of Haiti, to be paid by the Haitian people; and
Whereas such a loan is not desired by the Haitian people and is believed by them to be unwarranted and illegal and contrary to the best interests, economically and politically, of Haiti and her people; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate by what authority such proposed loan is being negotiated, together with the terms and conditions thereof and the reasons; therefore be it further

Resolved, That no debt should be created by the United States or by persons representing it which would be a charge upon Haiti or the Haitian people or the Haitian Government.

NAVAL OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

Mr. KING. I submit another resolution, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 234) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish full and complete information to the Senate of all costs to the United States resulting from the naval occupation of Haiti and the Republic of Santo Domingo.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 482) thereon. I give notice that I expect to move to take up this bill for consideration by the Senate at as early a date as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The bill will be placed on the calendar.

AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2373) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	McKinley	Shields

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on business of the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate I pointed out that the only substantial difference between the House bill and the Senate bill arises over the question of whether the Congress should expressly authorize the establishment of monopolies under the protection of the statute which it is proposed to enact; also that a limitation of the scope of the act so as to exclude the organization of monopolies is a feature that is of no consequence whatever to the producer of the ordinary line of farm products. A provision of that kind could not possibly affect him in any way whatever. The grower of grain, the grower of cotton, and the producer of potatoes would look with entire indifference upon a provision of that character. It would affect only those articles which are not widespread in the territory in which they are produced; articles that are produced only within limited areas, like raisins, or commodities that will not stand shipment, like milk, that must be produced within a limited distance from the centers in which they are consumed. To those people and with reference to those products the provision which gives rise to the difference between the two Houses, the prohibition of monopoly, is a matter of very great consequence as, in my judgment, it is to the consumers of those products throughout the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not hear the Senator's statement in its entirety, and I am very much interested in the proposition whether, in the Senator's judgment, the Senate bill or the House bill would permit a combination of the creameries which are producing condensed milk?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no doubt it would; I have no doubt that both bills would authorize the organization of associations among farmers to make butter of their product or to make cheese of their product or to make condensed milk of their product, and to put the product on the market.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is what I had in mind. For instance, in the State of Washington we have condensed-milk creameries.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Producing a very excellent product, I am able to say.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but they are not farmers' associations; they are independent organizations; one might say they are manufacturing establishments. Now, what I was wondering was whether or not this proposed legislation would permit a combination of that kind?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should say not. The Senator from Washington will observe that under the provisions of both bills the organization authorized must be an organization of the producers themselves of the product of the farm. They may engage in marketing that product or they may engage in processing it for the purpose of putting it upon the market, but the proposed legislation would exclude a combination of producers of condensed milk who do not themselves produce it.

There is a further provision in both bills to the effect that the organization may deal not only in the products of their members but also in that product by whomsoever it may be produced. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] at the last session of the Senate inquired very pertinently whether that provision would not, for instance, permit Mr. Swift or Mr. Armour, or Mr. Wilson, each of whom, I undertake to say, owns a farm and raises hogs, for instance, to organize under this proposed act and deal in the products of their own farms, and also to buy extensively from other producers. I think that that could be accomplished under the House bill. Recognizing that there is an evil there, and that the act might easily be abused, the Senate bill provides that such organizations can not deal in products other than those produced by their members to an amount greater than the amount of the products which they get from their members. So that if the three gentlemen to whom I refer should organize an association under this proposed law, they could throw the product of their own farms into the association and could put just so much more into the business, but no more.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. This bill would not in any way affect organizations such as are mentioned by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if they were manufacturers. If they are now legal, this bill would not at all make them illegal.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly not. This bill does not attempt to make anything illegal which is now legal; the Senator is quite right about that.

Mr. KELLOGG. As to the second proposition, if the Senate should adopt it, the amendment suggested by the committee on page 5 of the bill, reading—

And provided further, That the association shall not deal in products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than such as are handled by it for members—would take care of the question suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think so.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Just before the recent colloquy began the Senator from Montana was discussing the question of the monopoly of farm products. That is a branch of this bill which interests me very much. Of course, if the Senator has in mind the monopolization of the entire grain product or cotton product or potato product, then I can understand the argument of the Senator; but on Saturday I called his attention to the second section of the Sherman antitrust law, from which I quote as follows:

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States—

The Congress at that time did not have in mind the monopolization of an entire product, but the monopolization of "any part" of it.

Now, to cite a case which naturally occurs to us, suppose there were an attempt to monopolize the entire milk product in the neighborhood of a great city such as New York or Cleveland. I confess I am very greatly puzzled as to what ought to be done in this matter. I am in entire sympathy with the general proposition of cooperative marketing, but it is possible, if I read this bill aright—and I am going to use an extreme and impossible case in order to illustrate what is in my mind—to raise the price of milk to 25 or 30 cents a quart under a combination. I am quite sure that neither the proponents of the House measure here nor the proponents of the Senate committee substitute want a situation like that to occur, and yet it is possible. We are seeking to legislate upon a very serious subject.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Has the question ever occurred to the Senator from Ohio, if a product becomes a complete monopoly so that only one concern or one combination is engaged in the trade in connection with it, by what means can the Secretary of Agriculture determine whether the price is too high or too low? There is nothing with which to compare it.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; we have things with which to compare it; we know whether a price of 10 cents a quart or 25 cents a quart for milk should prevail; the hungry children know that.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want the Senator to understand that I disagree with him.

Mr. POMERENE. I was quite sure the Senator did not, because I know how eminently fair he ordinarily is in all such matters.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I merely want to say in this connection that that feature of the matter I shall canvass a little later on.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so. I very much favor some remedial legislation; but, if the Senator will pardon me for a moment further, all of us realize, I think, the exactions to the so-called middleman; and when we are considering the question of food products we want to protect the farmer so that he may obtain a reasonable price and perhaps a little more than a reasonable price; but when we appreciate the fact that in the industrial centers there is now unemployment amounting to about 40 per cent, certainly we ought not to want the unemployed to be at the mercy of somebody who may organize an association for the purpose of exacting exorbitant prices. That is the matter which is uppermost in my mind and which gives me very great concern.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that is the matter to which I am endeavoring to challenge the attention of the Senate—the possibility of the organization of combinations under this bill, entirely monopolistic in character, which would exact such prices from the consumers, particularly of milk, as to bring the whole movement for cooperative marketing into disfavor and disrepute and have such a corrosive effect as to wipe out any statute that we may enact in relation to the subject.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that the only people who came before the committee in relation to this bill, other than the representatives of the farm organizations in the city, were representatives of the California Raisin Growers' Association, a confessed monopoly, and the representatives of the milk producers' associations, who frankly stated their purpose to set up a monopoly of the supply of milk to the great cities of the country under the provisions of this bill, if they shall be permitted so to do.

Mr. Lindsay, the attorney for the California Raisin Growers' Association, was one of the witnesses appearing before the committee, and I must say, in justice both to him and to the president of the association, that they came by the invitation of the committee and not on their own solicitation, and likewise that they exhibited in the discussion of the matter before the committee a fairness which was altogether commendable. The conclusions of the committee, as evidenced by the bill, were not in accord with their views of what ought to be done, but I feel that that much is due to them for the very gentlemanly manner in which they presented their case to the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to ask the Senator if in discussing that matter he will consider section 2 of the bill as it came from the House?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, I propose to discuss section 2 a little later on.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought perhaps section 2 might meet the difficulty in the mind of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think I shall be able to demonstrate to the complete satisfaction of the Senator from Florida that it does not at all, and that for all practical purposes we might just as well cut out section 2, as the Senate bill proposes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I would extend the criticism which the Senator has just made to both the original bill and the substitute, as I see it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was speaking of section 2.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I realize that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. During the course of the examination of Mr. Lindsay the following took place:

Mr. KELLOGG. What page, if the Senator please?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read from page 39 of the hearings:

Senator WALSH of Montana. Just before you go to that, Mr. Lindsay, will you give us some concrete case in which, in your judgment, it would be advisable in the public interest to permit the creation of a monopoly under this bill.

He was arguing that a monopolistic organization under this bill would be to the advantage of the general public.

Mr. LINDSAY. Well, yes. Of course, this is only my opinion, Senator.

Senator WALSH of Montana. That is what I am asking you for.

Mr. LINDSAY. I may be entirely wrong about it.

Senator WALSH of Montana. I want to get your view of it.
Mr. LINDSAY. Take, for instance, the milk producers of a certain district.

Senator WALSH of Montana. Take the country tributary to the city of Washington, for instance.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes; the country tributary to the city of Washington. Of course, there can be no object in people associating themselves together unless it is going to be in some way for their benefit. Suppose the milk producers of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, deeming it to be for their best interests and for their benefit, form themselves into an association in which they all join, in order to regulate, we will say, the milk industry here. I can not go into the details of how they would be benefited by different methods of regulation. It might have to do with the sanitary conditions surrounding the milk.

Senator WALSH of Montana. Let us take the thing in a practical way. The States tributary are Maryland and Virginia?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes.

Senator WALSH of Montana. We had a witness before us here who told us that the milk producers in Virginia marketing their product in Washington have an association. It is a mere voluntary association for consultation and conference. They do not handle their product at all. Each of them sells his product to distributors in the city here, of whom there are several. But let us assume that they do not like that system, and they extend their organization so that all of the milk producers over in Virginia may join in an association and they set up a central agency here for the distribution of their entire product and distribute the avails after the manner of your association or the California Fruit Growers' Association.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes, sir.

Senator WALSH of Montana. Over here in Maryland they have another organization of the same character, of the milk producers in Maryland marketing their product in the city of Washington. These two organizations are here competing in the District of Columbia; the Maryland organization has its central distributing point and the Virginia organization has its central distributing point, and the two are competing.

Now, however, they combine and eliminate all competition, so that the consumers of milk in the city of Washington have just one association from which they can supply themselves. What I want to know from you is how the public is benefited by permitting these two associations thus to combine.

Mr. LINDSAY. Unless the public may be benefited; and, of course, when we consider the benefit which is flowing to the public generally, we must consider the interests of the ultimate consumer—there is no question about that at all—as well as the interests of the producer. Yet, nevertheless, it is likewise the fact that the interest of the producer is a factor in the determination of the problem. Unless, in the wisdom of the Congress, the general interests of the public as a whole, both the producer and the consumer, may be advanced by the passage of a law like this, then it should not be passed.

And more like that which I do not read; the usual argument in favor of monopolistic organizations having been followed—namely, that they eliminate unnecessary duplication of distributing systems, establish economies, and so forth. It will be observed, however, that for the purpose of illustration he takes the case of the milk producers. We had the representatives of some of the milk-producers' organizations before the committee. One of these gentlemen was the president of the National Milk Producers' Association, an organization supplying in very large part the city of New York. Of the extent of his organization he tells us as follow in the testimony:

Let me understand—

Mr. Miller being on the stand—a little more about your organization. Is it a federation of milk producers?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, from what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read now from page 72.

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Senator WALSH of Montana. And these are local associations of milk producers?

Mr. MILLER. No, sir; the individual is the unit; all making up the one parent association. We are now reorganizing under a system by which the local will be a unit.

Senator WALSH of Montana. I do not understand. You have 60,000 members?

Mr. MILLER. We have about 90,000, but about 60,000 of them supply milk to the cities.

Senator WALSH of Montana. Are all these in one association?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The individual producers being the members of the association?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Senator WALSH of Montana. Is that a cooperative marketing association, or is that for general discussion?

Mr. MILLER. It is a cooperative marketing association. The old association is a mere bargaining agent, going out and bargaining with the middlemen, who are the distributors, and usually there is but one between the dairy farmer and the consumer.

Senator WALSH of Montana. How are you organized now?

Mr. MILLER. We are reorganizing now.

Senator WALSH of Montana. But let me get your present system first.

Mr. MILLER. At present we are operating under both systems. We are just in the middle of the change.

Sixty thousand milk producers supplying the great cities of the State of New York, including the metropolis of the State, organized in one association; and somewhere else in the testimony, as my recollection now serves me—and I shall be glad to be corrected if I am in error—it is stated that they now supply 60 per cent of all the milk consumed in the great city of New York. These gentlemen frankly assert that they want this bill passed so that they may be protected in the organization of such a monopoly as that, and they undertake to defend such a monopolistic organization as a great, beneficent institution.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator claim that the milk producers of the State of New York get an unreasonable price to-day?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, I waive that question. I remember hearing a distinguished Senator arguing in the Supreme Court of the United States the case of the International Harvester Co. for the defendant.

I heard him argue that that company never exacted unreasonable prices for its products of the farmers of the country. I do not know that any issue was taken upon that. It is not a question as to whether a particular corporation ever did or ever did not exact exorbitant prices. The question is, Shall we put it in their power to exact exorbitant prices; and more particularly, Mr. President, shall we trust to their own individual, unrestricted judgment as to what is or what is not a reasonable price to charge for their products?

I shall show presently, Mr. President, that in all time it has been regarded as an unwise thing to do to allow these organizations to exist, even if individual ones do not exact an unreasonable price for their product. Of course, I can not answer the question addressed to me by the Senator from Minnesota. I do not know whether this great organization does or does not charge unreasonable prices for milk in the city of New York; but I have here some information touching what is done in the city of Washington. I did not intend to devote myself to that feature of the matter at this time; but, inasmuch as it has been introduced, I read to you from an article appearing in the Washington Post of Friday, November 18, 1921, being a summary of testimony given before a committee of the House investigating the cost of milk in the District of Columbia. It is as follows:

MORE BIG SALARIES OF MILKMEN BARED.

The Lampert House District Subcommittee in its inquiry preliminary to drafting a pure-milk law for the District of Columbia, delved into the profits derived from the retail milk business in the District. Manager Brawner, of the Chestnut Farms Dairy, told the committee that his firm made a net profit of 2½ per cent on sales amounting to $2,700,000, or about $60,000. Mr. Brawner receives a salary of $15,000 a year.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask whether these profits were over and above the salaries which are spoken of?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suppose so. The company made that much profit, and they paid these salaries. That is the statement.

Raymond J. Wise, of the Chevy Chase Dairy Co., testified that last year his company made a net profit of $39,298, and that his salary is $7,000 a year.

Arthur L. Thompson, a milk distributor, who was previously a professor of farm management in Cornell University, said he made a profit of less than 1 cent a quart on his milk. He testified that in his opinion the producers of milk were not making more than a reasonable profit.

Earlier in the day W. A. Simpson stated that as a milk distributor he was making $200 a day net profit at the present time, and that his net profits for the first nine months of the year were $39,000. He and his family draw salaries aggregating $37,000 more a year.

During the hearing Representative MILLSPAUGH, of Missouri, sought to ascertain from witnesses the reason for the discrepancy of 3 cents between milk delivered for 12 cents a quart in Baltimore and 15 cents in Washington. The best he got from the dealers present was that it must cost less to produce the Baltimore milk.

Dr. William C. Fowler, District health officer, interposed to say that the requirements which milk must meet here in Washington are much higher than in Baltimore, but members of the subcommittee declared with vehemence that that could not account for a higher charge of 3 cents on every quart of milk sold here. During his examination by Representative HAMMER, of North Carolina, Mr. Brawner asked the Representative what he meant by profiteering.

"An unreasonable profit, such as we believe most of the milk distributors are making here in Washington," replied Representative HAMMER.

During his questioning of the witnesses Representative HAMMER developed the fact that none of the dealers were cooperating with the Maryland-Virginia Producers' Association, as had been previously alleged at the hearing.

You will observe that in the case of two of these, Mr. President, they are the managers of dairy farms. Of course, under the provisions of this bill the owners of those farms could consolidate and establish a single distributing system in the city of Washington. Most of them, however, are distributors of milk who buy from the producer; but the proposition advanced is that it would be an excellent thing for all of these farmers, as they are called, the Chestnut Farms and the Chevy Chase Dairy Farm and all other farmers to organize one association, all come into one association, establish a distributing system here in the city of Washington, and have absolutely no competition at all. I will show you how Mr. Miller undertakes to demonstrate that that would be a most excellent thing for the people of the city of Washington.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask the Senator if the statement which he has just read to us does not indicate that there is either a monopoly or some gentlemen's agreement which enables the distributors of milk in the city of Washington to keep up the present prices, and to make the large profits which he has just recounted to us?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I dare say it points to that conclusion. I refer to it simply for the purpose of showing what outrageous exactions might be made through the organization of such an association as the Senate substitute seeks to prevent, and the advocates of the bill as it passed the House insist should be permitted to operate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If we are to pay high prices by the reason of a monopoly, would it not be better to let the producers have that monopoly than for mere distributors to have it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly; I agree with that. If we are going to have a monopoly at all, I would rather have a monopoly of producers than a monopoly of middlemen.

In the course of the testimony given by Mr. Miller, he said as follows:

Senator WALSH, my attention was called yesterday to a question asked by you, and which I thought was so ably answered by Judge Lindsey, in relation to the combination of two associations delivering milk in Washington. Would it be entirely satisfactory to you if I should discuss that for a moment?

Senator WALSH of Montana. I shall be very glad to hear you, sir. Mr. MILLER. If I represented the consumers of Washington, and the consumers alone, with an intent and a sincere desire to insure to those consumers an adequate supply of milk at a reasonable price, I would lose no time in going to those two associations and saying: "Men, combine as quickly as you can combine." Why? Because it would stand for efficiency and economy, and the economics of the situation would be such that they could not ask an unreasonable price for milk to the people of the city of Washington. Why?

I do not know how far milk is brought into Washington now; probably not over 50 or 60 miles. It does not matter. Milk is brought in splendid condition into New York City for more than 500 miles. Assume that all the dairy farmers within the present radius that now supplies milk to Washington were in one closely knit organization, and they attempted to raise prices unduly. It would mean that milk from a little farther on would come in, because those other dairy farmers can comply with the same regulations—I refer to the city regulations—as do the present ones. No power on earth could keep that other milk from coming in here if by doing it they could get more than they could otherwise dispose of that milk for; and if they could not get more, it would show that the organization had not unduly raised the price. The economics of the whole industry would absolutely prevent any undue enhancement of prices.

But what are the economies that could be perfected? Let me say this to you: If the good people of the city of Washington are to have enough milk every day in the year, there must be more than enough milk every day in the year. Why? Because consumption is not uniform. Production is not uniform. Therefore, to see that the people of the city have enough milk at all times, production must be so adjusted that at all times there will be more than enough.

Now, that surplus must be manufactured into some of the various products of milk. This daily surplus during a part of the year is largely augmented by natural conditions which are largely beyond the control of man. Why? The peak of production this year in our New York territory came two weeks earlier than it generally does, because of the early pasture season. One of the distributing firms to which our organization sells milk from 9,000 farmers report to us, and we believe it to be true, that for the third week in May the average dairy supplying them delivered to them 60 pounds more per day than they did the same week a year ago, or 540,000 pounds a day added to the surplus which they had the year before.

There is also this significant thing. Statistics show that in that district 45 per cent of the milk that is produced throughout the year is produced in four months of the year. The remaining 55 per cent is produced in the other eight months. This daily surplus must be manufactured; this seasonal surplus must be manufactured. Now, what could these two organizations do if they combined? In fact, if I stood in the position which I illustrated a moment ago, I think I would travel over to Baltimore and study the question to see if there could not be further advantages from having the Baltimore organization join. Why? To efficiently manufacture that surplus milk requires expensive plants.

Having followed along in much the same line, he was asked:

Senator WALSH of Montana. I should like to ask you a question or two about that.

As I understand you, if a monopoly were organized consisting of all of the producers of milk within the region that under ordinary conditions supplies the city of Washington, that, I understand you to say, would be a beneficent thing so far as the consumers of milk in Washington were concerned; and, as I understand you, that monopoly could not exact excessive prices of the consumers in the city of Washington, because if they did so the area from which the city of Washington is ordinarily supplied would be expanded, and other milk would come in from the remoter regions?

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely. No power could prevent it.

Senator WALSH of Montana. Of course, that would necessarily involve the organization of another distributing agency within the city of Washington which would take the milk coming from the remoter sections in competition with the milk produced by the monopoly.

Mr. MILLER. Not necessarily. May I explain why?

Senator WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Senator, I could go out in the city of Washington. I assume—because we can do it in most of the cities—and in 24 hours I can arrange with delicatessen stores that will properly equip themselves and with other small retail stores to handle milk. And I can go out beyond the radius from whence now comes Washington milk and have the farmers supply cans and prepare their herds to pass the entire city inspection, and ship in that milk daily to 100 stores in Washington.

Senator WALSH of Montana. You would simply set up a competition, then?

Mr. MILLER. Exactly so; exactly so; and that competition—

Senator WALSH of Montana. So by that competition you would regulate the price?

Mr. MILLER. By the inevitable law. Why, for the milk of the city of Washington to be cornered, to get an undue price, there would have to be a stone wall erected around a circle 500 miles distant from Washington, and even it would not work.

Senator WALSH of Montana. Of course, that is figurative?

Mr. MILLER. It is figurative; and yet why is that so?

Senator WALSH of Montana. What is the fact? The situation as you present it to me is that a monopoly exists here. All the producers in this locality have their own distributing agency in the city of Washington. Instead of two, such as I suggested—one for Virginia and the other for Maryland—competing with each other, they are all now in one combination with one distributing agency, and they charge, we will say for the purpose of the discussion, an exorbitant price to the people of Washington. Your remedy would be—that is, the natural remedy, the way it would operate would be—that the area would be expanded and extended, and milk would come in from sections beyond the limits over which the monopoly could claim jurisdiction; but, of course, that contemplates the organization of some kind of a competing distributing system in the city of Washington. You would go about and organize that and get your orders from the delicatessen stores and other consumers of milk, and thus you would set up a competition, recognizing that the only true way to reach satisfactory results and bring down the price is by establishing a competitive agency of some kind or other. Now, if that is the case, and if you are correct in the contention you make about the beneficent operation of the thing, you must then abandon the idea of competition as a regulating factor.

Mr. MILLER. Not at all, Senator; I do not think so, for this reason. Assume that those two organizations combined had this efficient manufacturing plant—

Senator WALSH of Montana. If you will pardon me, I want to go a little further, if you please. Now, we have our competitive agency established. It brings its milk from a region beyond that which would ordinarily supply the city of Washington with milk. It can not get any within the natural area that would supply Washington with milk, and it must go beyond that. It does so, and it organizes its distributing agency. Then the monopoly is forced by the competition to come down to a reasonable price, and it gets its milk within a very restricted area here, and its competitors must go beyond the natural area and bring their milk from a distance, thereupon competing under disadvantageous conditions with the monopoly, and, of course, eventually being forced to the wall. Is not that the logical and necessary consequence?

Mr. MILLER. I do not think so at all, Senator, because the economics of the situation would prevent it.

Senator WALSH of Montana. What are those economics?

Mr. MILLER. The economics of the situation are simply these: First, your question assumes that the farmers who are combined into this one association which you are pleased to call a monopoly, would be blind to the experience of all history. It is to the advantage of those particular farmers to see that city consumers are supplied milk at a price that will not only keep up consumption but that will not make it attractive for this faraway milk to come in.

Senator WALSH of Montana. That is, to put the price as high as the traffic will bear? That is what you mean, is it not?

Mr. MILLER. No; that is not exactly what I mean. We must assume in all these discussions that these cooperative organizations will be managed by men of at least ordinary ability, foresight, and experience, and the course you mark out would be absolutely suicidal.

That is the argument, Mr. President, and the argument is just exactly the standard argument in favor of any monopoly, namely, that economies should be introduced, that efficiency would be promoted. The Standard Oil told us, in all the course of these discussions, that instead of enhancing the prices of its products, it had actually brought them down; that its great business organization, its great corps of experts, its huge distributing systems, had reduced the expense of handling the products, and that, as a matter of fact, the public were gainers by the monopoly rather than losers.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it is a fact, is it not, that that was not true; that the Standard Oil had not reduced the price, but had increased it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, they had not reduced it, and selfishness is a trait of human nature which finds lodgment in the breasts of farmers just exactly as it finds lodgment in the breasts of the rest of us. We are all of the same clay.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Rockefeller has been given credit for originating that argument, which we adopted and advanced with so much earnestness. The argument is about three hundred years older than Mr. Rockefeller. I find that in defending the Elizabethan monopolies Lord Bacon made the same argument in favor of royal monopolies in cards, glass, sea coal, hides, and 25 or 30 other commodities which were farmed out to governmental monopolies in the time of Queen Elizabeth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the argument has never found lodgment in the minds of the American people, and, for the matter of that, has never found lodgment in the minds of any people. The common law, which was nothing more nor less than the common sense of justice and of right, denounced monopolies generally, and particularly, Mr. President, monopolies in the necessities of life, and foodstuffs particularly.

I read from the second volume of Bishop's criminal law, section 230, as follows:

Competition in the various activities of life is one of the most beneficent forces among men. It strengthens the race and keeps individuals from mischief by stimulating activity; promotes the happiness of all; and prevents famine and other like suffering by causing the commodities to be in plentiful supply and at prices not unjust; and it preserves trade, labor, manufactures, finance, and all like things at an even and equitable balance. In the nature of affairs it is so seldom in the power of a single individual unaided to do any effectual act toward the destruction of competition that the common law has not heretofore very clearly and certainly defined any offense of this sort as committed by one, the facts not having furnished the needful cases.

But conspiracies to impair competition by monopolies and other like combinations have always been regarded as criminal. And when to this sort of conspiracy is added, as in the facts of most cases, some unlawful means, its indictability is beyond question.

Mr. President, long before the common law expressed the common conviction of the people, whose guard it was, the experience of mankind had denounced monopolies as injurious to the public interest and as criminal. Recently there has been dug up from the ruins of one of the ancient cities of Assyria the code of Hammurabi. It was an ancient compilation when Justinian gathered about him the jurists of the Roman Empire and gave to the world the works which have become the foundation of the jurisprudence of Europe. It denounced monopolizing the necessities of life.

In recent time monopolies have become so oppressive to the people that notwithstanding the Sherman law had been in existence for years and years both political parties have felt called upon in their platforms to denounce monopolies as things that can not be tolerated, much less authorized by law.

The Democratic platform in 1908 declared that—

A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable. We therefore favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal law against guilty trust magnates and officials—

And so forth.

The Republican platform in the same year declared that—

The Republican Party passed the Sherman antitrust law over Democratic opposition, and enforced it after Democratic dereliction. It has been a wholesome instrument for good in the hands of a wise and fearless administration; but experience has shown that its effectiveness can be strengthened and its real objects better obtained by such amendment as will give the Federal Government greater supervision and control over and greater publicity in the management in that class of corporations engaged in interstate commerce having power and opportunity to effect monopolies.

The Democratic platform in 1912 repeated the language of the platform of 1908 and declared that—

A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable.

The Republican platform of that year declared that—

The Republican Party is opposed to special privilege and to monopoly. It placed upon the statute book the interstate commerce act of 1887 and the important amendments thereto, and the antitrust act of 1890, and it has consistently and successfully enforced the provisions of these laws. It will take no backward step to permit the reestablishment in any degree of conditions which were intolerable.

I do not pause to consider or canvass how completely these declarations were justified by the acts of either party when it was in power, but I refer to these as declarations of the common conviction of our people with respect to these matters.

Mr. NORRIS. Those declarations were all "before taking."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; that is quite right.

I can not understand how any Member of the Senate, upon this side of the Chamber at least, after subscribing to these perfectly clear declarations of principle, can vote against a provision declaring that no such construction shall be given to the provisions of the bill as will authorize the creation of monopolies, the very purpose that those chiefly interested in urging it seek to accomplish.

Mr. President, having said so much concerning the general features of the bill, I desire to address myself to the particular provisions of the bill, and especially to the provisions of section 2 of the House bill which are not found in the Senate committee bill. I wish to call attention first to section 1 of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to that branch of the subject may I ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just called attention to this part of the Senate bill, which reads:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of or attempt to create a monopoly.

That, of course, refers to the provision of section 2 of the Sherman law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. POMERENE. How does the Senator from Montana differentiate between section 2 and section 1 of the Sherman Act? In other words, he wants to preserve the provisions of section 2 with respect to the monopolization of any part of the trade or commerce among the States. The first section, as the Senator knows, declares "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade" to be illegal. Is it the Senator's desire to preserve intact the provisions of section 1 of the Sherman law?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; it is my desire to get rid of it so far as farm marketing corporations are concerned. That is the answer I made to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who asked me what the Senate committee bill gives to the farmers that they have not now. It gives them immunity from section 1 of the Sherman Act and does not give them immunity from section 2 of that act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it is wise or just legislation to permit any group or class of our citizens—agricultural, industrial, manufacturing, or otherwise—to be immune from prosecution for conspiracies to restrain trade, which means conspiracies to destroy competition or to prevent the benefits that flow from the law of competition as it operates in our economic and industrial life?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator puts the question a little too broad for me. I can state my position without the slightest hesitancy or difficulty at all.

I do not believe that when Congress passed the Sherman antitrust law it had in contemplation at all associations of farmers or farmers assembling themselves together for the purpose of putting their products on the market. I do not recall, and I am sure history affords no evidence of, any grievous wrong ever done to the people of the country by associations or combinations of that kind. I believe that associations of that character stand upon an entirely different footing and that the legislation may be easily classified so that those associations should be dealt with upon one basis and according to one system of laws, and the ordinary business combination of non-producers, simply dealers in the products, upon an entirely different plane.

I will say to the Senator that that feature of the matter I shall canvass a little later, and perhaps my views will be elaborated for the information of the Senator at that time.

Mr. KING. Then I shall pretermit any further inquiry at this point.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to follow it if the Senator prefers to inquire of me now.

Mr. KING. I am sure I would prefer to follow the wishes of the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Section 1 of the bill is what may very properly be called the enacting provision. It authorizes the creation of these corporations. I read from the provisions of the bill as it passed the House:

That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of persons so engaged. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof, as such producers, and conform to one or both of the following requirements:

First. That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own, or,

Second. That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 per cent per annum.

That is what might be said to be the enabling section. The Senate bill is exactly the same except for the transposition of a single clause for the improvement of the literary construction, and by the addition of a further provision that, so far as they deal in the products of nonmembers, the amount shall not exceed the amount in which they deal in the products of their own members.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, when the Senator refers to the Senate bill, does he mean the amendment to the House bill as reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I refer to the substitute for the House bill. I use the expression for brevity.

Section 2 is a regulatory, a supervisory, a controlling section. In other words, section 2 limits the powers given by section 1, as follows:

SEC. 2. That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall have reason to believe that any such association monopolizes or restrains trade to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof, he shall serve upon such association a complaint stating his charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached, or contained therein, a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place not less than 30 days after the service thereof, requiring the association to show cause why an order should not be made directing it to cease and desist therefrom. An association so complained of may at the time and place so fixed show cause why such order should not be entered. The evidence given on such a hearing shall be reduced to writing and made a part of the record therein. If upon such hearing the Secretary of Agriculture shall be of the opinion that such association monopolizes or restrains trade to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced thereby, he shall issue and cause to be served upon the association an order reciting the facts found by him, directing such association to cease and desist therefrom.

Note, Senators, that he shall "cause to be served upon the association an order reciting the facts found by him, directing such association to cease and desist therefrom. That is to say, if it monopolizes or restrains trade to such an extent as to unduly enhance prices, the order shall direct the association to "cease and desist therefrom." I shall go back presently to canvass or review what "therefrom" refers to. I continue the reading of section 2:

On the request of such association or if such association fails or neglects for 30 days to obey such order, the Secretary of Agriculture shall file in the district court in the judicial district in which such association has its principal place of business a certified copy of the order and of all the records in the proceeding, together with a petition asking that the order be enforced, and shall give notice to the Attorney General and to said association of such filing. Such district court shall thereupon have jurisdiction to enter a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside said order, and may make rules as to pleadings and proceedings to be had in considering such order. The place of trial may, for cause or by consent of parties, be changed as in other causes.

Then there is a provision for a temporary injunction pending the appeal.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senators who are following the discussion will consider this provision, first, as it applies to the case of a monopoly; and, second, as it applies to undue restraint of trade, each of them enhancing prices. It will be observed that by the express terms of the bill the monopoly is entirely immune; it is allowed to go on without any let or hindrance at all unless it unduly enhances prices, in which case it may be haled before the Secretary of Agriculture. When it is brought before the Secretary of Agriculture, what does the Secretary of Agriculture do? He finds that it is a monopoly, we will say, for the purpose of the discussion, and he finds that it unduly enhances prices.

When the bill which originally came before the Senate was under consideration by the Judiciary Committee it was the opinion, I am very sure, of every member of that committee that that meant that if the Secretary of Agriculture found that a monopoly existed and that the monopoly was exacting exorbitant prices for its product, he could determine what would be a reasonable price to charge for the product, fix that price, and the association would be forbidden to charge a price greater than that amount.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the bill clearly state, in substance, that they shall cease and desist from all restraint of trade and monopoly? Is there any provision in the bill which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to fix prices?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Minnesota will be patient for a moment, I am going to try to find out, if I can, what it does mean.

Mr. President, when the subject of trusts and monopolies was a matter of public discussion in this country quite a good many years ago, it will be remembered that there were very able publicists and particularly business men who then insisted that the proper way to deal with the matter was to allow the great combinations and trusts to develop and grow as they saw fit, without let or hindrance, but that the Government ought to step in and fix the prices which they should charge. Indeed, Mr. President, that is all that can be done. Whenever a Government authorizes the existence of a monopoly there is nothing it can do—and it can do no less—but fix the prices which such monopoly may charge. That is what we do as to our public utilities. A public utility is a confessed monopoly; we authorize such monopolies; but in every case we repose in some commission or other body the power to fix the prices which that monopoly may charge.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the Senator's discussion. A moment ago the Senator said that he sought to relieve agricultural cooperative associations from the provisions of section 1 of the Sherman antitrust law, which declares:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of commerce among the States or with foreign nations is hereby declared to be illegal.

The Senator also is very careful in the substitute bill to preserve intact, as I understand his explanation, the antimonopoly provisions of section 2 of that act. Having done that as to the provisions of section 1 in reference to restraint of trade, suppose that the association does, in fact, enter into a conspiracy or combination in the form of a trust which does unduly enhance the price of milk—let us say, by way of illustration, that it makes the price of milk 25 cents a quart to the consumer—what remedy would exist if such a condition should prevail?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator from Ohio would have first to give me the facts. It could not possibly be a monopoly, because there is an express provision in the proposed act that it does not authorize the creation of a monopoly. If the absence of monopoly is admitted, then there is competition just exactly as there is now; the matter is regulated by competition. To illustrate the point, let me take the case of the Raisin Growers' Association, to which I have heretofore referred. That cooperative association undoubtedly has been a great thing for the growers of raisins in the State of California; and I do not undertake to say that it has not been a good thing for the growers of raisins throughout the United States.

I simply say that a power is placed in the hands of that association which ought to be reposed in no set of men, for at any time they may take advantage of the opportunity they have and exact exorbitant prices.

However, Mr. President, to illustrate, I see no reason at all, as I stated to the president of that association, why there should not be one cooperative association of raisin growers with their headquarters at Fresno, Calif., where the headquarters of his association were, another at Hanford, and a third at Sacramento, these cooperative raisin growers' associations all competing with each other. That is the idea that I have as to this bill, that there shall be created a number of cooperative associations and yet not destroy the benefit of the bill. In the case of the milk producers, my idea is that under the proposed law the milk producers in the State of Virginia, for instance, will organize themselves into one cooperative association; that the milk producers in the State of Maryland who supply the city of Washington will organize themselves into another cooperative association, and that they will both compete in supplying milk to the city of Washington.

What harm can come from such a situation as that? The only harm can come when there is a complete monopoly of the supply, and that is what the Senate bill is aimed at. I trust I make myself clear to the Senator from Ohio when I say I want to relieve these parties from any penalty whatever for combining for the purpose of carrying out their objects except that they must not carry the combination so far as to create a monopoly.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I regret that I am not able to follow the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am sure that is my fault.

Mr. POMERENE. No; that does not follow. I want to be able to have an understanding of the matter if I can. There may be a line of cleavage between the provisions of section 1 and of section 2 of the Sherman antitrust law which I am not able to perceive.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Ohio is not alone in that, because, although it has never been difficult for me at all, I observe that it is difficult for a great many people.

Mr. POMERENE. When the Senator says he does not want a monopoly in the production of milk he is speaking generally, but I am going to take it for granted that he means monopoly as defined in section 2 of the Sherman Act which prohibits the monopolization of "any part" of the trade or commerce. I think we understand that; but when it comes to section 1 the Senator says, "I want to relieve these organizations of any of the restrictions contained in that section," which declares illegal "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade."

Assume that there has been organized in the city of Washington an association among the milk producers of Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, under that organization the Senator desires to permit them to restrain trade. Of course, he means to a reasonable extent; but, if they are permitted to restrain trade, why are they not creating a monopoly of a part of the trade? That is the difficulty which presents itself to my mind.

I am a little fearful that while the Senator is trying to protect the buying public by the provision against monopoly at the same time he is placing them at the mercy of the producer when he permits associations to be formed in the way indicated. It seems to me that it is possible, even under the limitation which the Senator has placed in the substitute, for excessive prices to be charged. If we can do anything to minimize the cost of distribution to facilitate marketing I want to help to do that; but I have observed, it seems to me—I hope I am wrong about it—that in the discussion of both sides of the Chamber we are in a way shying at the fixing of prices. It appears to me that we are not quite candid on that subject. We talk about associations for the purpose of cooperative marketing, but would we not be franker and come closer to the truth if we should say "associations for cooperative marketing and for the fixing of prices to the consumer"?

Mr. KING. And which might stifle trade and competition.

Mr. POMERENE. Which, as the Senator from Utah suggests, might stifle trade and competition. I have not come to any conclusion about the matter, but I think I see very grave difficulties in the way. It seems to me, while I want to benefit the one element in society—and I realize what their troubles have been and what their burdens have been—I do not want unnecessarily to hamper the other element of society.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, this is a recurrence to a branch of the subject which I had left, but I am very glad to go back to it to clarify the situation if any words of mine can do so.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me for just a moment, I will yield to him in a few moments. If the Senator from Ohio will endeavor to place the proposition in some concrete form before me I am sure that I can give a very much more satisfactory answer to his question. My idea is to leave the provisions of section 2 of the Sherman Act intact, to make them applicable to associations organized under this bill as well as to all other associations and all other individuals.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Ohio will pardon me—

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We have the milk producers around the city of Washington; they have associated in some way or other, but they have not established a monopoly. Will the Senator stop to consider for a moment the milk producers utilizing this statute which we are to enact, and yet not having established a monopoly in the city of Washington, and point out the evil that he believes will ensue from it?

Let us suppose that the milk producers over in Virginia organize and they set up their distributing system here in the city of Washington, and yet they are not able to supply more than one-half of the milk necessary for the city of Washington. Private capital has a rival distributing system. There are two or three rival distributing systems. These systems get their milk from Maryland, we will say, or they get it from farther away; so that the association is organized under the provisions of this act, and yet it has not a monopoly. What is the evil that the Senator apprehends in that situation of affairs?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, both the Senator and I are laboring under this difficulty: We have a bill before us. We have not a given state of facts to which it is applied. We are bringing forward hypotheses, and perhaps not having before us all of the facts. One of the difficulties I see here is this, and I think it applies to both bills:

In the preparation of the House bill as well as in the preparation of the Senate bill, it has been sought to limit dividends to 8 per cent per annum on the stock or membership capital. It is an easy thing, of course, for those who want to enter into a conspiracy or combination to get around a provision of that kind. It is easy enough to say to the members: "We are limited in our profits which may be distributed by way of dividends to 8 per cent on the capital stock; but that is not going to prevent us from fixing the price which this association shall pay to the individual members so that you can get 20 or 25 cents a quart for your milk, and then you will be benefited in a dual capacity. You will have the exorbitant profit as an individual producer and seller to the association, and then you will have the profit derived from the dividends in the association up to 8 per cent."

That is one of the difficulties. If you can arrange some kind of an association here which is going to eliminate the expense, I am with you wholeheartedly in that matter. If it is really the intention of those who are sponsors for this bill to limit the profit to 8 per cent, I think I am wholeheartedly in favor of that provision; but I do not want to impose a limitation of that kind—in other words, close up one little place—and leave the door wide open so that there can be unlimited profits in fact when the profits as an individual are added to the profits of the association.

If I am wrong about that, I should like to have it pointed out to me. I have felt all the while that I wanted to favor this legislation if I could, and I want to do it yet; but it seems to me that we could improve this entire situation if we had some provision in the Senate substitute somewhat akin to that which is in the House bill, which apparently prohibits the undue enhancing of the prices.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was going to proceed now to discuss the reason why we did not put that provision in the Senate bill. Perhaps the Senator will agree with us when we get through.

I yield now to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the Senator gets away from this branch of the matter, I should like to know if I correctly understand what I think his construction of the bills is. Am I correct in understanding the Senator's construction of the Senate bill to be that it will permit a partial restraint of trade, even though undue enhancement of price follows therefrom, but will prohibit a monopoly?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator's position—and that, of course, is the foundation of the bill—is that the ordinary association of farmers in a marketing association is not an undue restraint of trade. We make a legislative declaration to that effect.

Mr. LENROOT. But if there be, as a matter of fact, an undue restraint of trade, short of a monopoly, will the Senate substitute prohibit it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senate substitute will not prohibit it, and neither will the House bill, as I shall show presently. My contention about the matter is, though, that there will be no undue enhancement if we eliminate the monopoly feature, because competition will take care of it then, just as it does now.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the Senator about that in just a moment, after I get his construction.

I understand the Senator's position, then, to be that if there be a partial restraint of trade, short of monopoly, and undue enhancement of prices results, such restraint is held to be legal, and there is no remedy, while the House bill permits not only partial restraint of trade but complete monopoly, but if there be undue enhancement of price in either case it is regulated, first, by the Secretary of Agriculture, and secondly, by the courts. Am I correct?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In a certain way the Senator is correct; but I propose to discuss the whole subject of section 2 and give you my views to the effect that the House provision is entirely unnecessary, in the first place, and is entirely nugatory, in the second place.

Mr. LENROOT. Just one other question, then, with reference to the Senator's statement, also made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], that if there be absence of monopoly, competition results.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not mean that competition in the sense of competition in price will result, or any danger of an undue enhancement in price will be avoided, if there be absence of monopoly?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not true that in the United States Steel Corporation case it was proven and practically admitted that the United States Steel Corporation made the prices, and was followed by its competitors, and the court held in that case that competition could not be forced, that the United States Steel Corporation was not a monopoly, and that even though there was an enhancement in price and the competitors of the United States Steel Corporation themselves chose to take advantage of that enhancement, there was no remedy?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator is able to extract any principle out of the decision in the Steel Corporation case, he can do better than I can. I can not. My understanding of the Steel case is that the court held that it was an unlawful combination from the beginning, but that by reason of the fact that it was not attacked for a great many years, and various interests had arisen and greatly disturbed the general condition of things, they concluded to let it stand and not enjoin it or dissolve it. That is my conclusion as to what the opinion of the Supreme Court means. I was not able to extract any principle from it.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not perhaps a little fairer to say that while they held, in effect, that it was an unlawful combination in the first instance, they also held that before the action was brought it abandoned its unlawful intent, and therefore—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As I say, I argued a trust case in the Supreme Court immediately following the decision in the Steel case, and I confess my inability to find it in any principle that would guide me in my case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I trouble the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am afraid that I am subjecting myself to criticism for covering the ground which I sought to refer to a moment ago, and the Senator said that he would discuss it later; but in view of the questions propounded by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and fearing that I have misapprehended the position of the Senator, I desire now to challenge his attention to some of his statements.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am glad to reply to the Senator.

Mr. KING. As I understood the Senator, he illustrated his construction of the bills before him by calling attention to an organization in Virginia for the control of the milk product of that State, and an organization of the milk producers in Maryland for the purpose of supplying milk to the city of Washington. I understood the Senator's position to be that if the milk producers of Virginia were able to keep out of Virginia milk from other sections, and the milk producers there formed such an association as is contemplated by the House bill, no matter how much they raised the price or stifled competition they could not be prosecuted, because across the line in Maryland or across the line in West Virginia there would be milk producers and there would be other associations; but those other associations and those other milk producers would not be competing with them in Virginia.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator misunderstood me altogether. I was not talking about an association of all milk producers in the State of Virginia at all, nor about any acts on their part to keep out milk from anywhere else. I never assumed any state of facts of that character at all. I simply assumed the case of the milk producers residing in the State of Virginia and selling their milk in Washington organizing themselves into an association with a distributing system in the city of Washington, and such of the milk producers in the State of Maryland as sell their milk in the city of Washington associating themselves under the bill and setting up a rival distributing system in the city of Washington, and the two operating in competition with each other in the city of Washington.

Of course, it might be assumed that other milk producers in the State of Virginia would associate themselves for the purpose of supplying the city of Richmond—those, we will say, north of the James River in one association and those south of the James River in another association, competing for the supply of milk to Richmond—and the milk producers in the State of Maryland and on the eastern shore of Virginia each having a separate association supplying the city of Baltimore. I assume the case of cooperative associations competing with each other.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is obvious that there would not be a monopoly in, perhaps, the technical sense if the milk producers of Maryland and the milk producers of Virginia were furnishing the city of Washington with milk and they combined, because there would be West Virginia and Pennsylvania and Ohio and other places remote from Washington to which resort might be had; but, of course, by the time they got the milk here it would make the price so high that it would give to the Virginia and the Maryland milk producers a monopoly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; and then a practical monopoly would exist, which would be in violation of the law. Of course, everybody will appreciate that as far as milk is concerned you can consider that there is a certain basin around each great center of population, from which basin the milk naturally flows into that center, and if you organize all the producers within that basin into one body, then you have a monopoly of the supply, even though by some extraordinary effort you can induce some of the farmers residing beyond that to bring their milk into the center which is thus monopolized. Of course, naturally they belong in the basin of some other city. They have their association there, and it would be difficult to break their business ties and business associations to bring them in. Mr. Miller suggested that it would flow in freely from the outside country. It will not flow in freely from the outside country, because they already have their business ties and business associations, which will prevent the flow.

Mr. KING. I confess that I am not quite able to understand the position of the Senator from Montana or the morals or the justice or the ethics of a position which calls for an abrogation of section 1 of the Sherman antitrust law so far as it relates to agricultural associations. It would mean that any of the organizations or associations authorized under the law—horticultural, agricultural, ranchmen, dairymen, milkmen, raisin men, what not—could conspire for the purpose of interfering with commerce, could conspire in restraint of trade, could conspire to stifle and destroy competition, and yet, unless that conspiracy, though it did stifle competition, though it was in restraint of trade, failed to eventuate into a complete monopoly, there would be immunity. I have such profound respect for the judgment of the Senator from Montana that I can not quite understand how he can justify a position of that kind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, "conspiracy" is rather an obnoxious term, and it may mean much or it may mean nothing. When the Senator refers to allowing these people to form conspiracies in restraint of trade, and so on, to get down to the cold facts, what is the conspiracy which it is supposed they are going to engage in? They are going to associate themselves and set up a distributing system in the city of Washington in competition with another system, either run by a rival cooperative association or run by private capital. Where is the conspiracy? Why should not half a dozen men in the State of the Senator from Utah gather together, and, when they want to ship their cattle, throw in together, charter a train, send one man to Chicago, and tell that one man to dispose of the whole number and divide the proceeds? Does the Senator find anything wrong about that?

Mr. KING. That can be done now, right in the face of the statute. That is not a conspiracy in restraint of trade at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course it is not. That is just exactly what we want to do by this. We want to allow a lot of farmers, instead of bringing their milk into a cheese factory run by private capital, selling their milk to the corporation which runs that cheese factory, to be permitted to associate themselves together—which, of course, would eliminate competition between themselves—build their own cheese factory, bring their milk to that cheese factory, sell the cheese, and divide the profits. That is what this bill is for. It is urged that you can not do that because Jones, who is now selling milk to the cheese factory owned by a private individual, competes with Smith, who sells his milk to the cheese factory, and competes with Robinson, who sells his milk to the cheese factory, and if these three men combine they eliminate competition between themselves, and therefore they fall under the condemnation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Does the Senator want to prevent them from doing that?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I thought not. There is talk about conspiracies in restraint of trade. Those three men have eliminated competition as among themselves, and to that extent they have restrained trade. There is a legislative declaration that the ordinary farm-marketing cooperation is not an undue restraint of trade and that it is not a conspiracy in undue restraint of trade. I trust I make my own position about the matter clear.

I have been diverted, and I want to go back to consider just exactly what section 2 of the bill does; first, with reference to a monopoly, and, second, with reference to a combination which is not a monopoly, but which exercises such restraint on trade as that prices are unduly enhanced.

Take the matter of monopoly first. The Secretary of Agriculture finds that a monopoly exists, and he finds that it has unduly enhanced prices, namely, that it is charging exorbitant prices for the product. What does he do? What kind of an order does he make? He orders that monopoly or association to "desist therefrom." From what? As I said when the bill was before the Judiciary Committee in its original form, we all thought that meant to desist from charging exorbitant prices, namely, that the Secretary of Agriculture should, as would of course be the case when a monopoly is permitted to exist, fix what is a reasonable price and forbid the corporation to exact any more; in other words, give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to fix the prices which the monopoly should charge. But our friends who are urging this legislation say, "That is not what it means, and if that is what it means, we do not want the bill; we do not want to give the Secretary of Agriculture any such power at all."

What power do they want to give him? You will search this record in vain for any explanation from any source as to what power they want to give the Secretary. The best you can get from any of them is that they want to give the Secretary power to say that a price charged is an unreasonable price, but not to say what is a reasonable price.

Take the case of milk. An association is charging 15 cents a quart for milk to the people of the city of Chicago, we will say, who protest against that and file an application insisting that that is an exorbitant price, we have a long hearing upon the matter, and eventually the Secretary of Agriculture finds that 15 cents is an unreasonable price; but that is all the power he has. They go back home and fix the price at 14½ cents a quart. Then another hearing can be had before the Secretary of Agriculture, and he finds that is an unreasonable price. And so these hearings go on, one after another, until finally you get the price down.

It will be remembered that we tried that system out with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Power was given to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the first place to declare that a rate charged by a railroad company was an unreasonable rate, but gave the commission no power to fix what was a reasonable rate, and Senators all know that the act was innocuous, and we were obliged to amend it so as to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix the rate which the corporation should charge.

As I have said, Senators do not want the Secretary of Agriculture to be invested with any such power, and they say that this bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture no such power, and I am rather inclined to think they are right about it. It says that whenever a monopoly exists which unduly enhances prices an order is to be made to desist therefrom, but what does "therefrom" mean?

Of course, monopolies as a usual thing are created by combinations, two or more or half a dozen corporations uniting in one, and they establish themselves as a monopoly by unfair methods of competition. Of course, if these associations shall practice unfair methods of competition for the purpose of driving their competitors out of business I daresay they would still be amenable to discipline under the Federal Trade Commission act; at least I hope so.

But, Mr. President, that is not the situation which presents itself at all. The Federal Trade Commission will take care of all these unfair methods of competition by its processes. But I want Senators to face the situation. Let us turn again to the milk producers in the State of Virginia and in the State of Maryland. They do not resort to any unfair practices at all. They simply organize themselves, and they all unite in one association under the protection of this act; they set up their own distributing system in the city of Washington.

Of course, the private distributors must go out of business. They can not any more get any milk from anybody, at least unless they go beyond the territory which would ordinarily supply the city of Washington, and, of course, they must compete under disadvantageous circumstances, and they would naturally fall. So the association does not resort to unfair practices at all, but it gets every man who is supplying milk naturally to the city of Washington into one association, and then it charges an unreasonable price, and the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the monopoly exists, and that it has unduly enhanced prices. What is he going to do? According to the contention they make he can not fix the price at which that association shall sell its milk. They are commanded to desist therefrom. What can he do?

Of course, if the association is doing something that was unfair, if it is engaged in unfair competition, it may be that this bill takes away from the Federal Trade Commission the disciplinary power and transfers it to the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not think so. But suppose, as I assume, they have not done a thing which is at all reprehensible. Take the Raisin Growers' Association out in the State of California. They are not accused of having done anything wrong to drive their competitors out of business, the commission men who have heretofore carried on the business and who bought the product of the farmers in that locality.

That association has been carried on and has been developed in a highly creditable way, and, as I believe, without a stain upon its record. But year by year, and day by day, and month by month, it has gone before the farmers of that locality, and has represented to the farmers that it is to their interest, that it would be wise for them to come into the association, to join with their fellows, and one by one they have come in, until now 93 per cent of the raisin growers in that locality belong to this association. The Secretary finds that it has not done a thing wrong, except that a monopoly exists, and that it is charging undue prices for its products. He can not put the price down, because that would be to give him the price-fixing power, and that is not given by the act. What can we do? We can not do anything. There is no relief in the different provisions of section 2. I shall be very glad to be interrupted at this point for any Senator to tell me what kind of an order the Secretary of Agriculture would possibly make in that kind of a case.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Secretary issues an order, and they make the price lower; then under another order they lower the price again, and so on. Does not the Senator think their lack of good faith would soon bring them into court, and under the amendment which has been offered a court of equity would have complete and full jurisdiction, the same as a court of equity has under the Sherman law now, if there were an absence of good faith?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know how to answer the Senator. I inquire what kind of order can the Secretary make?

Mr. LENROOT. He can make an order, under the Senator's construction, merely directing them to refrain from charging the duly enhanced price.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, the 16 cents.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, "hereafter refrain from charging 16 cents," and they accept that and go back home and fix a price of 15½ cents. Is it the Senator's view that that is the extent of the power of the Secretary?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; I do not think the bill is entirely clear as to whether the power of the Secretary is to issue an order to no longer monopolize, to no longer charge the enhanced price, or to dissolve the monopoly. I am very frank to say the bill is open to that construction.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I call the Senator's attention to the provision that the Secretary after this inquiry shall issue and cause to be served upon associations an order reciting the facts found by him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; and he recites in this instance that all the producers within the area which naturally supplies Washington with milk are in one association, and that association has a complete monopoly of the supply of milk to the city of Washington.

Mr. FLETCHER. After finding the facts and making the order they are all then submitted to the Department of Justice and the facts so found by the Secretary are to be considered prima facie evidence, and then it is for the Department of Justice to proceed to break up the monopoly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; the court merely reviews the order made by the Secretary; but I am trying to find out what kind of an order the Secretary makes. The court does not have anything at all to do with it except after the Secretary makes his order.

Mr. FLETCHER. He directs the association to cease and desist from this practice, which is a similar order to that made by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes; that is just the point. The language of the Federal Trade Commission act is applied here without any possible application. It is not appropriate to express the conditions as they exist. I trust the Senator from Florida, whose mind is always clear upon these matters, will address it to the case that I have supposed. The Secretary finds that all of these people are in the association, that it constitutes a monopoly, and that it charges 16 cents a quart for milk, which is an unreasonable price. What kind of an order under those circumstances does the Secretary make? There is no use talking about proceedings in court and about the Attorney General, and that kind of thing, because the court does not come into action until after the Secretary makes his order. We want to know what the Secretary can do. The court can revise or modify that order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that the Senator's construction of the power of the Secretary is correct, it would follow that he has no power whatever, and that the particular provision of the bill that attempts to give him some power is nugatory.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Absolutely.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be a construction that no court would put on it unless it were driven to it. It would not want to do that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the point I am making. What would the court be driven to?

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to the Senator's proposition as to what kind of order the Secretary could make, I wish to make this suggestion: In the case the Senator has used as an illustration the Secretary finds that the association is a monopoly and that it has unduly enhanced the price of milk. Would it not be perfectly proper and reasonable and legal for the Secretary to say that he finds, first, that it is a monopoly, which it is necessary to find, and then that it has unduly enhanced the price of milk from 10 cents, which is a reasonable price, to 16 cents, which is an unreasonable price? Would it not have the effect at least of putting the association on notice that it never would get by the Secretary until it reduced it down to the price he had fixed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What order would he make?

Mr. NORRIS. He would order them to desist therefrom.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. From what?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator suggests that they would desist from 16 cents and come back with a price of 15½ cents, but if the Secretary had already told them in his first order what he regarded as a reasonable price, even assuming that he has no more power than the Senator says he has, it seems to me the association would only take upon themselves a lot of unnecessary litigation and trouble, because they would know they would eventually be refused and the price set aside until they got down to the price the Secretary had fixed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator knows the experience we had with the railroad companies upon exactly the same kind of provision. It did not work at all. We were obliged to quit it. So in any case, even if the Senator is right about it, it does repose in the Secretary the power to fix the prices, does it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is by indirection.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think so. I think that is a fair construction.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And we have to come to that. We have to come to the proposition that it does give him power which the proponents of the bill declare they do not want to repose in him under any circumstances whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. If we assume for the sake of the argument that we have a monopoly, then it seems to me unless we are going to destroy the monopoly we must let somebody who represents the public, the producer as well as the consumer, have the power to fix the price.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator and I are agreed upon that. If we authorize a monopoly, there is nothing whatever to do except to repose somewhere the power to fix prices. Now, the question is presented as to whether we desire to repose in the Secretary of Agriculture the power to fix the prices of all agricultural products. We confront that proposition beyond any question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a moment further?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Technically I think the Senator is exactly right as to all agricultural products. As a matter of practice, however, the Secretary probably would never be called upon, as those who are behind the bill feel. In my judgment, with the exception of some illustration like the raisin growers or milk producers, he never would be called upon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator and I are agreed upon that.

Mr. NORRIS. So far as the wheat men, the cotton men, or the corn men are concerned, I am not at all alarmed about a monopoly being created, and if there is we will meet it when it arises.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator and I are agreed upon that, so why is there any harm in putting in the bill a provision that in reference to these matters concerning which a monopoly can be created it shall not be done? In other words, it does not do any harm to the general grain growers.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator will remember that in the hearings before the committee this question was very often propounded to the wheat producers, for instance, who have organized more or less and want to go further with their organization. It was said to them over and over again, "Go on just as far as you propose to organize and you have not violated the law." It is generally believed, at least by a great many people who are advocating the passage of the bill, that what has been done heretofore by those kinds of producers and what they propose to do is no violation of existing law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with that.

Mr. NORRIS. They want the law, however, because of the psychology that is in it, because they are afraid. They say, "We will be threatened, and because we are threatened and because we have not got it explicitly in black and white the farmers are afraid. The people in the business circulate propaganda and write letters, and so forth, and the farmers are afraid to come in." So that as a matter of fact as to the great bulk of the producers I am of the opinion that it is more a matter of psychology than anything else. I do not believe they violate law now when they organize.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator and I hold very much of the same view with respect to the matter. I am perfectly certain that if we relieve them from any peril of prosecution under section 1 of the Sherman Act that will be sufficient. In the first place, none of them has ever been prosecuted except the Raisin Growers' Association. Proceedings were instituted against the Raisin Growers' Association and the case was pending on demurrer, or rather the demurrer had been sustained and leave had been given to amend the bill of complaint. That is only one. That was upon the ground that it was an unlawful combination. If we relieve them from that we have gone as far as there is any occasion whatever to go with reference to the ordinary farm products.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has just said, and that is what I understand the fact to be, that none of these associations has ever been prosecuted. If that is so, then what is the necessity for the legislation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Just simply as the Senator from Nebraska said, that those who do not want the organization, the men who have the business now, the middlemen who are standing between the producer and the consumer and taking their toll, discourage the organization of these corporations or associations by the suggestion that they will be in violation of law.

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps nine-tenths of the organizations would not be amenable under the law in any event, because they would be doing an intrastate business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite right.

Mr. POMERENE. I would like to ask the Senator another question. The Senator has been discussing the price regulation features of the House bill. Of course, I think we must all concede that it is possible to charge the consumer excessive prices under either the House bill or the bill as reported from the Senate committee. Assume, for the sake of the argument, that these associations are organized and that excessive prices are charged to the consumer, what remedy is there?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My position with respect to the matter is that if we eliminate the monopoly feature we have exactly the protection that we have now, namely, the protection that comes from competition. We do not change the situation at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have been prompted for some minutes to ask the Senator from Montana with regard to the duty imposed upon the Secretary to ascertain, and then determine officially, whether or not the price of any agricultural product has been unduly advanced, I assume, by reason of the monopoly or by reason of the restraint of trade. What rule known to the law or prescribed in the statutes would be applied by the Secretary of Agriculture in determining whether or not the price had been unduly advanced?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no rule of law on that subject.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, in the case of railroad rates the rates charged by other public utilities form the basis of comparison.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, that is a matter of public utilities, and the law from time immemorial has contained the rule for the ascertainment of that matter. But so far as this private enterprise is concerned there is no rule of law that could be applied by the Secretary of Agriculture. For instance, suppose that during the year before the Secretary of Agriculture was called upon the producers had lost money. Would they be entitled to a price the succeeding year that would enable them to recoup their losses, or would he ascertain what it cost each individual producer to produce his commodity, whatever it might be, and then say that each individual producer was entitled to a fair profit after paying the cost of production? That is one of the difficulties which I see in connection with this provision in the House bill. I do not believe it is warranted by the Constitution unless we prescribe for the Secretary of Agriculture the rules which will enable him to determine whether the price had been or had not been unduly enhanced. Whether we can do that or not, I am not sure, but without that I can not conceive how the Secretary of Agriculture could reach a conclusion.

Then, how would he, how could he, undertake to determine whether the price had been enhanced by reason of the association and distinguish the influence of the association from the natural causes which determine under free competition the price of a commodity? I should like to have some light upon that subject before the Senator from Montana concludes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must say to the Senator that I do not feel able to afford him any light, as the same difficulties which have presented themselves to his mind, of course, have forced themselves upon my attention.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt unduly, but at that point I desire to suggest that even though we should supply the necessary legal machinery the forms by which the Secretary of Agriculture could act, it would be practically impossible to secure any definite or tangible result. The antitrust laws of Kentucky at one time provided a penalty for enhancing or depressing the price of any commodity above or below its fair market value by virtue of a monopoly. That, of course, involved the question of the cost of the production.

I tried a suit under that act to exclude the Imperial Tobacco Co. from operating in Kentucky. As the result of that suit their Kentucky charter was forfeited and they were forbidden to do business in that State. In that case, however, we had over 100 men, practical tobacco growers, summoned in a vain effort to determine the cost of producing a pound of tobacco.

Men living within a few miles of the courthouse varied from 10 to 15 cents in their sworn statements as to the cost of producing a pound of tobacco. It is manifestly evident to every man who will think about it that as to dairymen, tobacco growers, fruit growers, producers of all character of farm products under normal conditions, one man on 500 acres will become rich, while another man on an adjoining farm of the same size will go into bankruptcy producing the same commodities for the same market. It is practically impossible to reconcile the differences in the cost of the land, the cost and the efficiency of labor, knowledge of agriculture, and with the present system of bookkeeping, to ascertain with any degree of certainty what it costs to produce any of these commodities. All of the literature on this subject which has been prepared and issued by various bureaus and societies is in great part not dependable. Nobody knows exactly what it costs. The only thing that can determine a fair recompense for such products is the price they command in a fair and open market, where there is no element of monopoly either way.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Montana will again permit me, in this case there is no fair and open market. Such a market has been extinguished by the monopoly, and I think the Secretary of Agriculture could not possibly ascertain by reference to a fair and open and competitive market whether the price was an unduly high one.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, at that point, if I may be permitted to interrupt the Senator from Montana further, I desire to say that I am unalterably opposed to any form of monopoly. I believe if we can go back to the old basis and pass legislation here that will eliminate the "rule of reason" from the Sherman Antitrust Act and make criminal any act that directly interferes with the natural and free course of trade, we shall have put the ax at the root of the tree; and there is where we must go sooner or later for national relief.

Mr. CUMMINS. If I may say just a word more, I do not want my interruption to be misunderstood. I do not think there is any danger that the great agricultural products of the country can ever be monopolized. I would be glad to repeal the antitrust law, so far as agriculture as we generally understand it is concerned. That law never would have been passed if Agriculture alone were to be considered; but section 3 of the pending bill is utterly mysterious to me. I do not understand how it could be put into operation, or how it could afford the farmers of the country any relief whatsoever. May I say one word more?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not quite agree with the Senator from Montana in his construction of the order which may be entered by the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not think the order for which section 3 of the bill provides has anything whatever to do with the price.

The undue price is the thing that the Secretary of Agriculture must ascertain before he proceeds to enter his order; and when he comes to his order there is but one order he may enter, and that is that the association shall no longer maintain a monopoly or that it shall no longer restrain trade as it has theretofore maintained a monopoly or restrained trade. I think it would become an unlawful association from that moment on.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I must have expressed myself inaptly, because I fully agree with the Senator from Iowa that the word "therefrom" refers back not to enhancing prices but to restraining trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Some other Senator, then, expressed the other idea, and I have wrongly attributed it to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was the idea that I desired to express. Take the case of a monopoly; if it monopolizes to such an extent as that prices are unduly enhanced, the Secretary of Agriculture directs that it refrain "therefrom"; that is, of course, refrain from monopolizing; not from enhancing prices, but from monopolizing. Likewise, if he finds that it does not constitute a monopoly but that there is an undue restraint of trade, as a consequence of which prices are enhanced, he is commanded to order that it desist "therefrom"; that is to say, from restraining trade.

What does that mean. Suppose it does not constitute a monopoly? Referring back to the case of the Virginia farmers who unite in one association and have their distributing system in the city of Washington—they have not a monopoly at all, but, in some way or other, they have by thus uniting been enabled to exact undue prices for their milk. When the Secretary makes an order commanding them to "desist therefrom," from what are they commanded to desist? They have simply associated; that is all; and if it means anything, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, it means their existing as a monopoly or existing as an association, which association constitutes an undue restraint of trade.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Senator's interpretation of what the word "therefrom" refers to is reinforced by the use of the word "thereby" in the first line of page 3, where it refers to prices having been "unduly enhanced thereby"—by the organization and its operations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; by a monopoly or an undue restraint of trade. That is clearly the meaning of the language as it appears here.

So, Mr. President, the object which is sought to be secured by this legislation will not be attained; but there are practical difficulties in the way which would make the provisions nugatory even though they had the effect which it is believed by the proponents of the bill they would have.

The Secretary goes into an investigation upon a complaint of the citizens of the city of Chicago; a consumers' league, we will say, gets into action and complains to the Secretary of Agriculture about the price charged for milk in the city of Chicago. It is the middle of summer when milk is abundant, when pasturage is abundant, and the prices charged are unreasonable. It will, of course, take some months before a hearing can be had and a determination reached upon that matter, and in the meantime we have gone into the fall or winter, when the conditions are altogether different, so that a price which was exorbitant in the month of June or July, if persisted in, may be entirely reasonable in the month of December or in the month of January, and another hearing would have to be had.

So, Mr. President, during one season feed may be very abundant and inexpensive, while during the following season it may go to exorbitant figures. For instance, in my State we are very glad ordinarily if we can get $6 a ton for alfalfa hay, but a year or so ago it ran up to forty or sixty dollars a ton. Under such circumstances, even if the return of a reasonable profit upon the investment is made the test for the price, the different factors vary in such a way as that the remedy here sought to be provided is valueless.

Moreover, Mr. President, what real value to the people in the city of Chicago or Kansas City or Santa Fe, N. Mex., or elsewhere is it to go before the Secretary of Agriculture because associations in those localities are charging an exorbitant price for milk. Take the city of Schenectady, N. Y., or Boston, Mass. In the first place, an individual citizen could not act; it would be necessary to organize some kind of a citizens' association or consumers' league, or something of that kind, and test the matter out in that way, and the difficulties in the way would be so great and the result so doubtful that resort would not be made to the revisory provisions at all. So section 3 will be an absolute dead letter not only by reason of its intrinsic obscurity but by reason of the practical obstacles there are in the way of its operation, and it might just as well go out of the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under the Senator's proposed substitute, as I understand, no suit at all can be brought under the Sherman Act for undue restraint of trade. Is not that correct?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; not if it does not amount to a monopoly. In other words, if the Senator will pardon me, I want to leave that just exactly as it is now. A suit can not be brought now unless it is brought under the Sherman Act.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not agree with the Senator; but under the Senator's substitute a suit would have to be brought under the Sherman Act if there was a monopoly. Is not that true?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; that is true.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well. Under the House bill, if a suit is brought by the Secretary of Agriculture he can invoke every remedy that the Sherman Act provides for; can he not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think so.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator does not think so?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is a difference between the Senator and myself as to that. The bill, in section 1, authorizes the creation of these associations, and they are validated, and that is the very purpose of the bill. I shall speak, directly, of the only recourse there would be.

I had a very interesting visit a few days ago from Mr. Clifford Thorne, a lawyer of the State of Iowa, of very great eminence and just renown, who has demonstrated his attachment to the interests of the public, and is now the attorney for the National Grain Growers' Association. He called to talk with me about this measure, and advanced to me the idea that this bill, if it was intended to relieve farmers from the peril of prosecution under the Sherman Act, would not accomplish that purpose; that, engaging in these associations, they would still be subject to prosecution under the Sherman Act, his contention being that this bill would be merely supplementary, but would not operate to repeal in any sense the Sherman Act. I have not been able to accept that theory, but I tried to get the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to it a few days ago, though I fear rather unsuccessfully. I confess it has given me some concern.

There is another matter which Mr. Thorne advanced at the same time, to which I shall address myself a little later. The view expressed by him was that this bill was exactly the same as the Federal Trade Commission act; it was supplementary to the Sherman Act, not operating to repeal it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In referring to the association spoken of in the bill, I believe the Senator stated that the bill authorized those associations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator think that any substantial right is conferred by this bill upon the farmers' associations—anything of substance?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will say to the Senator with perfect frankness that it was my idea that this bill, being later than the Sherman Act, and authorizing these associations, and authorizing them to make the contracts necessary, operated of necessity, pro tanto, as a repeal of the Sherman Act. That was my theory about it, but I must confess that I have such deference to the opinion of Mr. Thorne with respect to matters of this kind that I am somewhat disturbed in my view about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not refer to that, although if this bill is not intended to exempt these associations from certain parts of the Sherman law at least, I can not see the object of passing the bill at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is not any. It would defeat their expectations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I agree entirely with the Senator about that, but that was not the point I had in mind.

The Senate bill says that persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, and so forth, may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively handling and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of the persons so engaged. Does the Senator think that this bill confers that right upon associations, or in any way authorizes the formation of such associations, or that the Congress can authorize the formation of such associations?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not think so. The bill contemplates that the associations will be organized, of course, under State laws; and this, to my mind, is intended simply to relieve them from any possible inhibition that there may be in the Federal law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is no inhibition in the Federal law at present, is there?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may say that perhaps, accurately speaking, the word "authorized" was not justified.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This bill says that persons engaged in these vocations may act together in associations. They can act together in associations now, can they not, if they are incorporated under the laws of their States?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They get plenty of power from the States to act together in associations for marketing their products, do they not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Federal Government does not and can not grant that substantive power to a set of men who want to organize, can it? Congress has no power to grant an act of incorporation to them, has it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, yes; we have just determined that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not agree with the Senator from Connecticut about that. We determined, I think, in the China trade act, that we could authorize the creation of corporations to engage in interstate commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In foreign commerce?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the Senator from Iowa will not want to get into that too closely.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt about that at all, any more than I have about our having the right to authorize them to incorporate to engage in foreign commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My view of the matter, I will say, if the Senator will permit me, is that the language I have read in this bill is just "hot air"; it is intended to be a blind and a sop to the farmers. They can do now, if they are organized into their associations, with or without capital stock, the things that this bill authorizes them to do, provided they do not violate the Sherman law; and the language of this bill seems to be designed to convey to the mind of the farmer the impression that Congress is authorizing him to associate, and that for the first time he has that right, whereas he has the right now, and he can organize under any State law for the purpose of transacting any lawful business, provided he does not commit the acts which the Sherman law denominates as crimes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment while I refer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it is rather fundamental, and I want to get my own mind fairly clear upon the subject.

The Senator from Minnesota suggested, as I recall his observation, that after the Secretary of Agriculture acted under section 3, the Sherman law would be in full force as to that corporation or association. I do not quite understand that. If I correctly interpret the decisions, as well as the law itself, restraint of trade is unlawful, no matter whether it increases or decreases prices. Monopoly is unlawful, no matter whether its effect may be to increase or to decrease prices. Does the Senator from Minnesota mean to say that the Sherman law, then, could be applied in its full force to a corporation condemned by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Or enter such other decree as the court may deem equitable.

I think that is what the bill means, anyway. In other words, the court would not be limited to compelling anybody to reduce a price.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator think the court could fix the price?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I have not said anything about the court fixing the price.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, it would not help the situation any.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it would.

Mr. CUMMINS. But does not the Senator from Minnesota understand that under section 2 a monopoly is unlawful only if it unduly enhances the price of the commodity in which it deals?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do; certainly. There would be no object in dissolving it if it did not do any harm.

Mr. CUMMINS. When the court comes to deal with it, it is the Senator's view that the court could dissolve the monopoly just as the court now dissolves a monopoly under the antitrust act?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it can, or it can restrain the acts of undue restraint of trade or any of the acts in which the corporation may be engaged which have unduly enhanced the price. For instance, the corporation may have made contracts with all of its customers or with all of its members that they would sell only at such a price. That price may constitute, with the other acts, a monopoly. The court may make an order against the contracts, or it may give any relief in the premises that it thinks proper.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator think the Secretary of Agriculture can do that also?

Mr. KELLOGG. The Secretary of Agriculture can make the order against it. He can not, of course, enforce it. The court must do that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think it perfectly clear that for all practical purposes there is not any relief at all in section 3. Even if the position taken by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is correct, after the Secretary makes the order, then he may begin a suit against the offending corporation—which, of course, is not an offending corporation unless it has unduly enhanced prices—and then you go through with the proceedings in court, and you finally find that it has enhanced prices, and the court so decides. What does the court do then? In the case that I suppose, the case of a monopolistic organization, there is only one thing it can do, and that is to dissolve the monopoly. Whatever the Secretary of Agriculture can do, everybody will agree that the court can not fix the price. The Senator from Minnesota, I take it, concedes that. That is an administrative act which is beyond the power of the court. There is only one thing it can do, and that is to dissolve the monopolistic organization, to declare that it has no existence, that it must get out of business, and that is what the law now provides shall be done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator, however, does not deny the indirect price-fixing power lodged in the Secretary of Agriculture under the House bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes; I do deny it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator believes that the Secretary of Agriculture would not have the power to actually control or fix the prices?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the language of it. Whether it could be strained out of its language to give the Secretary the power, not to direct that it desist from restraining trade, or that it desist from being a monopoly, and declare what the price shall be, I do not know; if so, then, of course, the indirect power to fix the price is given.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what I meant. I had gathered that that was probably the view of the Senator from Montana from the colloquy which took place between him and the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My view about the matter is that the proponents of the bill are correct in saying that it does not give to the Secretary the power to fix prices, but I submit to the judgment of the Senator that the court would try to get away from that and find that it does really mean something, and that it does give to the Secretary the power to fix prices; and that is what the proponents of the bill did not want.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The power to fix prices by indirection?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Either directly or by indirection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am convinced of it, and that is the very thing I do not want.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will allow me, in determining whether prices have been unduly enhanced in the investigation which shall be made under this law by the Secretary of Agriculture, of necessity must he not reach some point in the course of his investigation, and in pronouncing his judgment, beyond which he says that it is an undue enhancement of prices, and therefore, by indirection if not by direction, he does fix the prices beyond which they may not go, and therefore he does fix prices? So that he is constituted an arbiter to determine the prices of all commodities which may come within the purview of this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The conclusion I reach with respect to this matter is that the language of the bill is not expressive at all of any clear idea and that in operation it will be perfectly nugatory.

But, Mr. President, if we eliminate the feature of monopoly, why should we in the future any more than in the past give to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to fix prices or to control the thing at all? Competition has taken care of this thing in the past. No one has ever been obliged to complain about these matters. No suit has ever been instituted against any of these organizations upon the ground that they were inimical to the public welfare, and no one has insisted that their prices ought in any wise to be controlled. So if you simply eliminate the monopolistic feature, you do not need to repose in the Secretary of Agriculture or any other official or body any controlling or regulatory power at all. Let the ordinary rules and laws of trade govern and control the thing.

But we are not remediless even then, because if evils do flow from these organizations, they are still amenable to the local laws. My esteemed friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], told about the truck farmers out in Davis County, Utah, who supply the city of Salt Lake with garden products of one kind or another, and he told us that they have a kind of an organization, and the organization sends out word each day as to what the prices will be for carrots, for potatoes, for cabbages, and for other truck products of that character, and the members adhere to those prices. But I feel quite certain that those farmers are not getting very rich out of truck farming out there, that they are not robbing the public particularly. In other words, Mr. President, the public has never suffered from exactions of the truck farmers or other farmers in the matter of the sale of their products to such an extent that they have been called upon to come either to the State legislatures or to the National Legislature to get protection against exactions of that character. But if there are such, the Legislature of Utah will take care of it, will it not?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that we need not give ourselves very much concern about matters of that character, it seems to me. In other words, I insist, Mr. President, that there is no occasion whatever for reposing this extraordinary power, this unusual power, in the Secretary of Agriculture or in any other official or body. Just cut out the matter of monopoly and it will be taken care of. Let them organize and let them form their associations without any peril at all, just so long as they do not attempt to monopolize the products.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I hope that before the Senator concludes he will discuss the question of the advisability of committing to a Cabinet officer quasi judicial powers, or whatever powers are conferred by this bill, whether you denominate them administrative or quasi judicial. I suggest to the Senator that after a while those who are engaged in industry will want the Secretary of Commerce, rather than the courts, to pass upon their organizations; banks, if banks do confederate and combine, may want the Secretary of the Treasury to pass upon their alleged misdeeds; and those who may infract laws which might be indirectly related to the Labor Department will want the Secretary of Labor to pass upon their alleged violations of the law; so that instead of the courts or judicial bodies passing upon these questions we will farm out to the various departments and heads of departments and bureaus the question of whether or not laws have been violated and the rendering of judgments, decisions, and so forth, with respect to alleged infractions of the law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, another feature to which I desire to direct the attention of the Senate is the matter of trading with nonmembers. When the bill came before us in its original form it confined the trading to the members of the organization. I have before me the bill H. R. 13931, which passed the Senate December 16, 1920. If Senators who are following this will take the language of the pending bill, they will note where the difference comes in. I read from the older bill:

Persons engaged in the production of agricultural products, as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, or fruit growers, may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing for interstate and foreign commerce such products of their members.

That is changed in the pending bill to read: such products of persons so engaged.

Senators will observe that under the older bill the transactions were restricted to the marketing of products of their members. In the bill before us, they may market not only the products of their members, but they may go outside and buy similar products, produced by nonmembers, and carry on business of that character without limit.

I dare say that in order that these associations may successfully operate, it may be necessary to give them the power to buy outside commodities and deal in them, but manifestly if they are to be given this special exemption, they should not be permitted to engage in trade in unlimited amounts with those who are not members. If they were so authorized, Mr. President, I question very seriously whether the act could be justified under the Constitution.

That brings me to the consideration of another matter, which to me is one of very great importance, and I should like very much, indeed, to confer about it with the Senators who are actively supporting the bill as it passed the House. Of course, I understand perfectly well that I am "in bad." I am not at all in the counsels of the gentlemen who are supporting this bill. I am supposed to be antagonistic to the whole thing, and it is thought that I am merely standing up here pretending that my views are something quite different from what I really entertain, and that I am conducting quite an adroit opposition to the plan of farm marketing. I had a letter from a very esteemed constituent, one of the professors in our State agricultural college, who told me that that idea is being industriously circulated through my State. They are very fair people out there, and he wrote me for a statement of my views and my attitude with respect to the matter.

I would like to help prepare a bill, and I would like to point out to the gentlemen who are urging this measure the perils which I think confront us, and I would like to try with them to frame a bill which would be helpful and operative. I am afraid of this bill as it stands.

Mr. KELLOGG. As far as I am concerned, I have consulted with the Senator a good many times in regard to this bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I recall that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and I were in consultation about it, and we adjourned, as I understood, to resume our discussions, and to see if we could agree, when, much to my astonishment, the bill was called up for consideration in the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator was told we could not agree with him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may have misunderstood, but my impression was that at our last session we had agreed to meet again.

I am not to be credited with the matter which I am now presenting. It was likewise presented to me by Mr. Thorne. He took the position that the bill does not in its present form in any wise relieve the farmers' cooperative associations from peril of prosecution under the Sherman Act; that it is an act supplementary to the Federal Trade Commission act and not to be considered as repealing it at all; but he took the further position that if it is to be considered as repealing pro tanto the Sherman Act, so as to bring these associations out from under the operation of the act, it is violative of the Constitution, as laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Connolly against the Union Sewer Pipe Co. in One hundred and eighty-fourth United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator please read the provision of the Constitution under which that decision arose?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am going to present the whole thing as well as I can, and I am going to ask the views of the Senator and see what we can do about it.

I must confess that the decision in the case of Connolly against the Union Sewer Pipe Co. had not been in my mind, although it ought to have been, because the very same question came before the supreme court of our State, some time after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in some litigation in which I was concerned, so that my attention was called directly to it.

That case arose under a statute of the State of Illinois, which was a general trust statute, forbidding trusts and combinations, which contained the following clause:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to agricultural products or live stock while in the hands of the producer or raiser.

It was held by the Supreme Court that the whole trust statute was unconstitutional and invalid because of this section, and the decision was put upon the ground that by virtue of that section the law denied to citizens of the United States the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The opinion of the court is expressed in the following language:

Returning to the particular case before us, and repeating or summarizing some thoughts already expressed, it may be observed that if combinations of capital, skill, or acts, in respect of the sale or purchase of goods, merchandise, or commodities, whereby such combinations may, for their benefit exclusively, control or establish prices, are hurtful to the public interests and should be suppressed, it is impossible to perceive why like combinations in respect of agricultural products and live stock are not also hurtful. Two or more engaged in selling dry goods, or groceries, or meats, or fuel, or clothing, or medicines are, under the statute, criminals, and subject to a fine, if they combine their capital, skill, or acts for the purpose of establishing, controlling, increasing, or reducing prices, or of preventing free and unrestrained competition amongst themselves or others in the sale of their goods or merchandise; but their neighbors, who happen to be agriculturists and live-stock raisers, may make combinations of that character in reference to their grain or live stock without incurring the prescribed penalty. Under what rule of permissible classification can such legislation be sustained as consistent with the equal protection of the laws?

Again:

We conclude this part of the discussion by saying that to declare that some of the class engaged in domestic trade or commerce shall be deemed criminals if they violate the regulations prescribed by the State for the purpose of protecting the public against illegal combinations formed to destroy competition and to control prices, and that others of the same class shall not be bound to regard those regulations but may combine their capital, skill, or acts to destroy competition and to control prices for their special benefit is so manifestly a denial of the equal protection of the laws that further or extended arguments to establish that position would seem to be unnecessary.

The point decided in the case was subsequently expressed in Billings v. Illinois (188 U. S., 103), citing the case just referred to, as follows:

The power can not be exerted to forbid combinations among those who buy products and permit combinations among those who raise or grow products. Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. (184 U. S., 540).

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Has not the court since that time expressly upheld State legislation that prohibited combinations among sellers, but permitted combinations among buyers? I refer to the International Harvester case in Missouri.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, I think not. I have the International Harvester case here.

Mr. LENROOT. So have I.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I do not think that was the principle announced at all.

Mr. LENROOT. It was announced as a proper basis of classification.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Montana cite the case for the purpose of establishing a general principle or to show that making exceptions of agricultural products is not within the fair province of classification?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I cited the case simply to disclose the disturbed character of my mind concerning the sound basis for the pending legislation. My view about the matter was, as I have heretofore expressed it, that there is a perfectly sound basis for the classification, that these associations are so distinct from the ordinary business association as that a difference may be made in the law, that there are no perils. I do not agree with the argument in the main opinion here at all. However I may disagree with it, that appears to be what the Supreme Court has decided.

I was going to follow by referring to the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice McKenna in this matter, who unfortunately, so far as our present situation is concerned, expresses practically that view, that there is a just basis for the classification in the fact that the associations deal exclusively in agricultural products produced by their members.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have never doubted, whatever may be the operation of the fourteenth amendment, that Congress could originally have passed an antitrust law applicable only to manufacturers or to other organizations from which the people could reasonably expect injury to follow on account of monopoly or restraint of trade.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had much the same view. This is what Mr. Justice McKenna said in his dissenting opinion. I read this because the line of argument to be pursued seemed to me to afford justification for legislation such as we are considering here. He said:

The equality of operation which the Constitution requires in State legislation can not be construed, as we have seen, as demanding an absolute universality of operation, having no regard to the different capabilities, conditions, and relations of men. Classification, therefore, is necessary, but what are its limits? They are not easily defined, but the purview of the legislation should be regarded. A line must not be drawn which includes arbitrarily some persons who do and some persons who do not stand in the same relation to the purpose of the legislation. But a wide latitude of selection must be left to the legislature. It is only a palpable abuse of the power of selection which can be judicially reviewed, and the right of review is so delicate that even in its best exercises it may lead to challenge. At times, indeed, it must be exercised, but should always be exercised in view of the function and necessarily large powers of a legislature.

What was the purpose of the Illinois statute, and what were the relations of its classes to that purpose? The statute was the expression of the purpose of the State to suppress combinations to control the prices of commodities, not, however, in the hands of the producers, but in the hands of traders, persons, or corporations. Shall we say that such suppression must be universal or not at all? How can we? What knowledge have we of the condition in Illinois which invoked the legislation, or in what form and extent the evil of combinations to control prices appeared in that State? Indeed, whether such combinations are evils or blessings, or to what extent either, is not a judicial inquiry. If we can assume them to be evil because the statute does so, can we go beyond the statute and determine for ourselves the local conditions and condemn the legislation dependent thereon? But are there not, between the classes which the statute makes, distinctions which the legislature had a right to consider? Of whom are the classes composed? The excluded class is composed of farmers and stockraisers while holding the products or live stock produced or raised by them. The included class is composed of merchants, traders, manufacturers, all engaged in commercial transactions. That is, one class is composed of persons who are scattered on farms; the other class is composed of persons congregated in cities and towns, not only of natural persons but of corporate organizations. In the difference of these situations and in other differences which will occur to any re-fection, might not the legislature see difference in opportunities and powers between the classes in regard to the prohibited acts? That difference exist can not be denied. To describe and contrast them might be invidious. To consider their effect would take us from legal problems to economic ones, and this demonstrates to my mind how essentially any judgment or action, based upon those differences, is legislative and can not be reviewed by the judiciary.

That seems to me good logic, and it was upon that basis that I thought this legislation could be justified.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the Senator's position with reference to Congress being bound by this rule of classification that is applicable to the States? Does the Senator contend that Congress is bound by the same rule?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the point I was just going to make. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish to follow the other matter a little further. There is quite a distinction there to which I shall be glad to advert.

The subject is considered in a note found in the eleventh volume of American Law Reports Annotated, at page 1185, from which I read as follows:

The legislatures of the country which have attempted to regulate trusts and combinations have made a strong effort to except associations of farmers from the operation of the statutes. These efforts have, however, met with little success. Even the act of Congress, approved October 15, 1914, and known as the Clayton Act, had a provision that nothing contained in the antitrust laws should be construed to forbid the existence and operation of agricultural or horticultural organizations instituted for the purpose of mutual help and not having capital stock or conducted for profit. Nor should such organizations be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws. And the statutes of several of the States have similar provisions.

In United States v. King (1916: 250 Fed., 908) it was held that the provisions of the Clayton Act did not mean that farmers' organizations are privileged to adopt methods of carrying on their business which are not permitted to other lawful organizations.

In Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. (1902: 184 U. S., 540; 46 L. ed., 679; 22 Sup. Ct. Rep., 431, affirming 1900: 99 Fed., 354), an Illinois statute was held unconstitutional for attempting to exempt agricultural products and live stock in the hands of the producer or raiser from its operations. The court says—

The court then quotes the language which I have read from the opinion. Further on the court says:

The Alabama statute, passed in 1909, provides for the formation of cooperative associations, but to conform to it the association must not become a business association conducted for profit. (Baldwin County Producers' Corporation v. Frishkorn (1919), Ala. App., 81 So., 862.)

In Kentucky statutes making lawful combinations or pools among farmers for the purpose of disposing of their produce at a price not above the actual value were at first sustained. (Owen County Burley Tobacco Society v. Brumback (1908), 128 Ky., 137, 107 S. W., 710.)

And under these statutes a combination is lawful where organized for the expressed purpose of fostering and promoting the interest of growers of certain tobacco and to encourage the improvement of the quality, methods of growing and handling such tobacco, and to act as agents of the raisers thereof and of others in selling same and to assist them in securing remunerative prices. (Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Burley Tobacco Co. (1912), 147 Ky., 22, 143 S. W., 1040.)

The Kentucky cases cited are the cases to which reference was made by the Senator from Kentucky a few moments ago. Another case in Kentucky considered the same thing:

This ruling was, however, reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States in (1914) Two hundred and thirty-fourth United States, 216 (58 L. ed., 1284, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep., 853).

And the Kentucky courts then held that a statute conferring upon agriculturists the right to combine and pool their crops and sell the same as a whole for the purpose of obtaining a higher price than they could obtain if the crops were sold separately is invalid, as conferring special privileges and immunities. (Gay v. Brent (1915), 166 Ky., 833, 179 S. W., 1051.)

And the general rule now seems to be that the transactions of farmers' associations will be judged by the same standards which apply generally in the enforcement of antitrust laws and transactions in restraint of trade.

It may be possible to justify the legislation now before us upon two grounds, and I trust that we may find justification for it in that way. I am perfectly satisfied that the basis upon which I have been proceeding is not supported by the decision in the Connolly case, although it will be observed that the Supreme Court rests its opinion upon the ground that the State statute denied citizens the equal protection of the law. The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution is a restraint not upon Congress but upon the State legislatures. That amendment provides:

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

It was the "equal protection of the laws" clause upon which the decision was founded; but it will be recalled that the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court consistently took the position that statutes repeatedly passed by Congress which forbade the use of any portion of an appropriation for the enforcement of antitrust laws from being utilized in the prosecution of either farmers' associations or associations of working men were violative of the Constitution and void. It will also be recalled that one of the last acts of his career as President of the United States was to send to the Congress a veto message upon an appropriation bill because it contained such a provision, which, to his mind, was violative of the Constitution.

In an article which he contributed to one of the law magazines some time ago he called attention to the fact that the case of Connolly against Union Sewer Pipe Co. arose under a State statute, and that the decision was put upon the ground that the statute had violated the "equal protection of the laws" clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. However, he said in that connection that if Congress should pass such an act as that enacted by the Legislature of Illinois doubtless other provisions of the Constitution would be found under which it would likewise be condemned. So the present Chief Justice, at least, is rather committed in that way.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me, I merely wish to say that I think a distinction may be made between an ordinary corporation and a corporation acting on the cooperative principle. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I merely desire to ask the Senator if he is familiar with, I think, two recent decisions, at least one, in which the Supreme Court held that they could not find any provision of the Constitution which applied to Congress the same rule. While they did not decide the question, they said that if there were such a rule it grew out of the inherent nature of the Government and not from any constitutional prohibition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not in mind the decision to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers.

Mr. President, the idea which I have been endeavoring to expound here had not occurred to me without suggestions, as I have said, coming from Mr. Thorne. He left with me a copy of a proposed bill which he believes obviates the difficulty, and, undoubtedly, it does so, because it makes the cooperative principle applicable to all lines of business, so that there is no distinction whatever. I apprehend, however, that neither the country nor Congress is yet prepared to extend that principle to all lines of business. I shall later offer the draft of the bill for the Record, so that it may be a part of the discussion and may be considered.

There is, however, an item in the pending bill which I desire to commend to the consideration of those who are interested in the legislation, and that is a provision that in all of these agricultural cooperative associations delectus personæ, as it is called, shall be dismissed, so that anyone qualified to enter under the law shall be admitted as a member of the association, whether the other members care to have him or not; that is to say, a half dozen men may not acquire control of an association and then shut out everybody else. To illustrate, suppose in the case of the Raisin Growers' Association, controlling 93 per cent of the producers, 7 per cent are still on the outside. Now, for some reason or other, they have incurred, we will say, the enmity of the 93 per cent, and they will not allow them to come in. Of course, as they now control 93 per cent of the product, the ordinary purchasing agents, the commission houses, will undoubtedly be obliged to go out of business; they can not remain in business. Accordingly the 7 per cent will have no purchaser whatever for their crops and they will be obliged to sell at any price which they are offered. So I believe that we must make a further provision in connection with the conditions under which the associations may organize, namely, that any person qualified under the statute to enter shall be admitted as a member of the association if he desires to enter.

Mr. LENROOT. If such a provision were made it might compel under the law a monopoly which the Senator seeks to avoid. If an association is open to all of the producers of a given product, and if they be compelled to come in, what becomes of the Senator's contention that it would be dissolved if a monopoly results?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. If that argument is sufficient for the Senator from Wisconsin, I do not care to combat it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desired to ask the Senator how he thought a cooperative association could be distinguished from any other kind of an association or corporation, provided its object was to make money and distribute it in the shape of dividends?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The distinction is that these associations when organized are limited to a profit of 8 per cent, the balance to be distributed in accordance with the amount contributed by the members of the association. I think very likely, if that is a just basis of classification, that the provision which authorizes them to deal in the products of nonmembers is rather a perilous one, even though limited, as is provided in the Senate committee substitute.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I myself had not thought that the amount they were allowed to distribute would be a distinguishing mark so as to warrant different legislative treatment. I will say with relation to the 8 per cent which the bill allows them to distribute amongst themselves that it is a considerably higher rate than we allow the railroads to earn and distribute to their owners; but I do not regard the 8 per cent provision as now drawn as any limitation whatever, because all they have got to do is to quadruple the capital stock, and then they would have 32 per cent instead of 8 per cent. Unless there is a limitation upon the capital stock, or a provision that the capital stock must be paid in cash or property at its actual value, the mere limitation of the rate of dividend is no security whatever.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am inclined to think there is a just basis of classification between a cooperative association and an association not organized on the cooperative basis.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I presume the Senator does not mean "classification," but that they can be distinguished.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to remind the Senator from Connecticut that no limitation has ever been placed on the amount a manufacturer may make; nor was any limitation placed on the amount a manufacturer may earn under the act for which the Senator voted which permits combinations to engage in foreign trade.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not complaining that there is no limitation in the bill. The bill is objectionable to me on entirely different grounds. I do not think the per cent upon the capital stock which the associations may make is the essential feature. The limit being 8 per cent, it may be that a price might be perfectly outrageous and still only produce 6 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I address a question to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator from Connecticut find anything in either the House bill or the Senate committee substitute which would prohibit the board of directors of an association from establishing a price which the association would pay to its members for milk of 25 cents a quart, thereby, of course, limiting the amount of profits which could be distributed by way of dividends, but very substantially increasing the profits which each of the members might secure from the product which he sold to the association?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I do not find anything in either the House bill or the Senate bill which would prohibit any contract of that kind; in fact, Mr. President, both the House and the Senate bills would authorize such associations to restrain trade to any degree this side of absolute monopoly; it would authorize every member of any such association to make contracts in violation of the Sherman antitrust law; it would authorize the associations themselves to make such contracts, and then would authorize all the associations to make interlocking contracts with all other associations described in the bill. It would be possible, in my opinion, under the provisions of the bill for associations of tobacco growers, associations of cotton growers, associations of cattlemen, associations of hide and leather men, associations of sugar men, and all associations of those who are producing agricultural products, nuts, fruits, and dairy products, to combine in one grand association. That would be perfectly possible and perfectly lawful, provided it did not bring about an absolute monopoly of the business.

Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator further—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have concluded my remarks. I merely desire to have printed in the Record at this point the draft of a proposed bill prepared by Mr. Thorne, to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

An act relating to cooperative marketing by companies, corporations, and associations and exempting them from the operation of laws forbidding trusts, monopolies, and combinations in restraint of trade within the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That wherever the words "trading within the United States" are used in this act they shall mean trade or commerce among the several States or in any Territory of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States. That the word "association," wherever used in this act, means any association, corporation or combination by contract or otherwise, of two or more persons, firms, partnerships, or corporations. That the term "commission" when used in this act means the Federal Trade Commission.

SEC. 2. That in order to promote and encourage the intelligent, economical and orderly cooperative marketing of commodities, goods, wares, and merchandise entering into and constituting the subjects of trade within the United States, the right to organize cooperative associations, with or without capital stock, by those trading in such commodities, goods, wares, and merchandise, is hereby recognized. Such associations shall not be deemed organized for pecuniary profit in the sense of paying a return or dividends on the stock investment, but for the mutual benefit of its members through the application of cooperative principles.

Nothing contained in the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, nor the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, nor any amendments thereto shall be construed as declaring to be illegal an association entered into for the above purposes and complying with the provisions of this act, nor shall such laws apply in any way to the acts, conduct, or activities of such associations, but they shall be held to be exempt from all of the provisions of said laws: Provided, That no association shall be entitled to claim the privileges or exemptions of this act unless such association conforms its organization and conduct of its business to the following requirements:

(a) The association shall be operated for the mutual benefit of its members.

(b) Any dividends on its stock or membership capital shall not exceed 8 per cent per annum; all other profits, if any, when distributed, shall be distributed upon the patronage basis.

(c) Any person engaged in the same industry shall be admitted to membership in the association on equal terms with all others.

(d) The vote of its members in the government of said association shall be limited to one vote for each member.

(e) Such association shall file with the commission within 60 days after the effective date of this law or, if subsequently organized, within 30 days after its creation, an affidavit and statement signed by its president and secretary fully authorized by a resolution of its board of directors or other governing body having power to make such declaration binding upon the association, stating that neither the association nor its members will unduly enhance or depress prices, nor charge or exact prices that are unjustly discriminatory on such commodities, goods, wares, and merchandise, nor will they engage in unfair or oppressive business practices; that said association and each of the members thereof will furnish to the commission all information concerning the conduct of the business of the association and its members which the commission may require as to its organization, business, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other associations, corporations, partnerships, and individuals, and such other information as the commission may deem necessary to protect the public against any unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory prices, or unfair, or oppressive business practices, and that the association and its members will waive all privileges and provisions of law as to the authority of the commission to examine their books and records, and otherwise to assume full power of visitation and to compel full disclosure of their business methods and transactions.

SEC. 3. Any member of any association claiming exemptions under the provisions of this act, who shall fail to furnish information as above described shall thereby forfeit and shall not have thereafter the right to claim as a member of such association the benefit of the provisions and exemptions stated in this act. Any association claiming the privileges and exemptions under this act, which shall fail to furnish the information above described, shall immediately cease to have the benefit of the provisions of this act, and it shall also forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure, which forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States brought in the district where the association has its principal office, or in any district in which it shall do business. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of a forfeiture. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

SEC. 4. That, except as otherwise provided in section 3 hereof, as a condition precedent to any prosecution or attempt to make the application of this act, or of any of the laws described in section 1 of this act, to any association claiming the privileges and exemptions provided in this act, the following proceedings and none other may be had:

That whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that an association organized or operating by virtue of the provisions of this act, or any agreement made or act done by such association or any of its members, restrains trade to such an extent that the said association or any of its members are guilty of unfair or oppressive business practices, or are unduly enhancing or depressing prices, or are exacting unjustly discriminatory prices, and thereby or otherwise oppressing the public to the injury of trade within the United States, the commission shall serve upon such association a complaint stating its charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached or contained therein a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place not less than 30 days from the service thereof, requiring the association to show cause why an order should not be made directing it to cease and desist therefrom. An association so complained of may, at the time and place so fixed, show cause why such order should not be entered. The evidence given on such a hearing shall be reduced to writing and made a part of the record therein. Upon such hearing, or upon such other and additional investigation, if the commission shall conclude that such association or any of its members monopolizes or restrains trade to such an extent that the prices of any commodities, goods, wares, or merchandise are unduly enhanced or depressed thereby, or that the said association or any of its members are guilty of unfair trade practices, or otherwise oppress the public to the injury of trade within the United States, the commission shall issue and cause to be served upon the association an order reciting the facts found by it and directing such association and its members to cease and desist therefrom, and to make such readjustments of its business as will enable it thereafter to maintain its organization and management and conduct its business without injury to the public or to trade within the United States, and in accordance with law.

For the purpose of enforcing these provisions the commission shall have the power, so far as applicable, given it in "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes." On and after the filing of any report or order by the commission finding that any association or member thereof has refused to comply with any order of the commission as contemplated herein, or has committed any of the unjust and unlawful acts herein described, the business of said association and of its members shall be considered impressed with a public interest for the purposes of this act. On the request of such association, or if such association or any of its members fails or neglects for 30 days to obey such order, the commission shall file in the district court in the judicial district in which such association has its principal place of business a certified copy of the order and of all the records in the proceedings, together with a petition asking that the order be enforced, and shall give notice to the Attorney General and to said association of such filing. Thereafter all provisions and exemptions contained in this act shall be withdrawn from the protection of any association, or of any members of the same, failing to comply with the said order of the commission. Such district court shall thereupon have jurisdiction to enter a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside said order, and may make rules as to pleadings and proceedings to be had in considering such order. The place of trial may, for cause or by consent of parties, be changed as in other causes.

The facts found by the commission and recited or set forth in said order shall be prima facie evidence of such facts, but either party may adduce additional evidence. The Department of Justice shall have charge of the enforcement of such order. After the order is so filed in such district court and while pending for review therein the court may issue a temporary writ of injunction forbidding such association from violating such order or any part thereof. The court may, upon conclusion of its hearing, enforce its decree by a permanent injunction or other appropriate remedy. Service of such complaint and of all notices may be made upon such association and its members by service upon any officer or agent of the said association engaged in carrying on its business, or on any attorney authorized to appear in such proceeding for such association, and such service shall be binding upon such association, the officers, and members thereof.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I did not expect to say anything at this time, and I rose merely to ask the Senator from Montana a question; but, being on my feet, I will say a few words upon this bill.

As stated before, the object of the bill, of course, as shown by the testimony before the subcommittee and as admitted on the floor, is to exempt associations of persons engaged in the production of agricultural products, as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers, from the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act. The Sherman Antitrust Act provided not a classification of people, some of whom are to be subject to its provisions and others not to be, but it laid down a great and general declaration of principles and public policy. It did not deal with individuals at all, but it announced that—

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. President, it is the contract, the combination, the monopolization, in whole or in part, in restraint of trade or the monopolization of commerce among the States, that constitutes a crime. The promoters of this bill, instead of saying or attempting to say that persons engaged in the production of agricultural products may collectively market their products, ought really to say that the Sherman Antitrust Act is hereby amended so that it will read:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, unless such persons are engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers, acting in associations.

Mr. President, laws against monopoly and the restraint of trade, as I say, are public policies. The restraint of trade in interstate commerce, the establishment of monopolies, are supposed to be immoral and criminal; and if those offenses are committed by an ordinary person, he is to be sent to jail for them. Now, the Congress is considering a bill which says that those things are immoral, and against the conscience of men, and ought not to be tolerated in good business and conscience, unless those crimes are perpetrated by persons engaged in agriculture; and if they are, then they ought not to be called crimes, and the people, if they do commit those acts, ought not to be prosecuted; indeed, that the law ought to be so changed that nobody can bring a suit to test the question of whether a person engaged in agriculture is unduly restraining trade, or monopolizing interstate commerce, or violating the Sherman Antitrust Act. They say they ought to have immunity cast over them in advance of any act that they do; that we ought to maintain the policy, but we ought to exempt probably over half the population of the United States from the operation of the policy.

Mr. President, I agree with everything that any Senator has said upon this floor in paying tribute to the important part that agriculture plays in the economy, the health, and the life of the Nation. That is besides the mark. We can all pronounce encomiums upon industry and farmers, pity the hard life that many of them lead when they are not making money, and envy the life that many of them lead when they are making money; but that is not to the point in this case. The question in this case is, Shall the Government of the United States make fish of one citizen and fowl of another? The statement that no farmer or cattle man or man engaged in the fruit industry will ever attempt to put an excessive price upon anything he produces does not appeal to me. While I have the highest respect for agriculturists, I do not admit that they are endowed with a higher sense of honor or integrity than the men who work in the mills and factories and in the stores and shops and in the offices of this country. It is not necessary to assume that one class of the people is worse than another. We are all American citizens, and we are supposed to be controlled by the equal operation of the laws, and the laws ought to be uniform; and class legislation, especially class legislation where we are dealing with the criminal code, ought to be most sparingly enacted, if, indeed, it can be constitutionally enacted at all.

The ordinary speaker in favor of this kind of legislation pictures the woes of the farmer, and the farmer is represented as a poor, struggling man, generally a man of very small means, with a few acres of land; but in order to make this proposition float, and to get behind it something more powerful than the poor little farmer who owns 5 or 6 acres of land, and is farming it with hand labor, the planters are taken in.

Who are the planters? I look across the aisle at the smiling, prosperous countenances of some of my friends from the Southern States, whose prosperity I congratulate them upon, and there are represented the producers and owners of the entire cotton crop, the entire sugar crop, and the great percentage of the tobacco crop of this whole country; and so the planters are taken into this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield; yes.

Mr. KING. I think perhaps the Senator inadvertently ascribes to the South too large a production of sugar, in view of the beet production.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should have said all the cane-sugar production.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, it is well for us to consider what we are doing and what this bill means, and I will take upon myself the responsibility of saying that the classes of persons named in the bill—to wit, farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers—who are authorized to act in associations outside of the Sherman law, produce and control the entire food and clothing supply of this country. All the cotton and linen and wool, every article of food, animal or vegetable, is controlled by the classes of people against whom Congress is asked to say we will not longer enforce the Sherman antitrust law, and they may make contracts in restraint of trade, they may increase prices as much as they please, under the House bill, not until some court but until the Secretary of Agriculture—whose appointment is so largely controlled and influenced by the very classes of people named in this bill—can be persuaded that they are asking an unconscionable price. Nobody can interfere with them, no matter how oppressive the price is or how outrageous; no suit can be brought, no judicial decision of any kind can be had, but a Cabinet official—usually appointed after conference with the agricultural interests—is the official who must be satisfied that the price is excessive before the great balance of the country, the great mass of the consumers of the country, can get any relief at all.

It is said, however, that these people will not exercise this exemption in a way to hurt anybody; that, on the contrary, all that it is intended to do is to eliminate the middleman, and that by doing that the price to the consumer can be reduced. That would be a possibility, I admit. They might make savings in the cost of production, and they might eliminate the middleman, and they might be in a position to make the price cheaper than if they were not exempt under this kind of a law; but, Mr. President, human nature is human nature, whether it is the human nature of a farmer or of a man who works in a mill.

The labor unions are already exempt from the operations of the Sherman law. They do not have capital stock, but they form a large element in the population of this country; and if, now, this great class of men—all of those who have anything to do with raising anything from the soil or from the farm—are to be exempt also, against whom is the Sherman antitrust law to operate? Do you suppose you can successfully and permanently maintain in this country a criminal statute denouncing certain acts and maintain it and enforce it only against a particular portion of the people, so that what is right for an agriculturist to do will be wrong and criminal for a manufacturer to do, or for a person who works in a mill?

Mr. President, I do not know whether the Sherman law ought to be maintained or cast down; but I do know that if you want to cast it down and utterly destroy it you can not take a surer or a quicker means of doing it than this, because this sort of a procedure, say what you may about it, or try to differentiate it or explain it or apologize for it or justify it, does not and can not and will not meet the honest judgment of the people of this country. It will not meet the judgment of an honest lawyer or of a judge or of public sentiment.

That is about all there is to be said about this measure, Mr. President. I understand what powerful influences and forces there are back of this legislation, but I am thoroughly convinced that we should not yield to it. I am pretty thoroughly convinced that enough will yield to pass it, and I suppose it will become law. If the conference committee should report the bill as it passed the House, if we amend it at all, then I predict there will be no satisfaction or relief whatever for the people from high prices, if the people who are favored with this exemption choose to inflict high prices.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that farmers can do through associations, and avoid the penalties of the Sherman law, what industry can do through corporations?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not quite understand what the Senator means by "industry." Farmers are engaged in industry.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that it would be at all practicable for farmers to incorporate, for instance, and control the same proportion of their products as the United States Steel Corporation controls steel products?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know exactly what proportion the Steel Corporation controls. Is it about 60 per cent?

Mr. LENROOT. About 50 per cent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not mean to say that all the farmers in one State who are producing different kinds of articles could combine, but I undertake to say it will be perfectly feasible for an organization to control the cotton crop, and I think it will be perfectly feasible for an organization to control the tobacco crop of the country. Even individuals have pretty nearly cornered the wheat market repeatedly, and they have not all gone broke. Now and then one of them undertakes too large a contract and fails, but many of them have made untold millions in partially cornering the grain market of the country; and if all these associations are legalized, and can put together their concert of action and their brains and their capital, and borrow money, as the bill provides they may, on products of people outside of that association, so as to make their control of the market not only cover all they produce themselves, but 50 per cent of what is produced outside in addition, I think there is grave danger of a corner of the food and clothing supplies of the country, and in such an era as we have been in for the last two years, when the whole country has been crying out against the high prices which have prevailed, I do not think that we should put upon the laboring men and the great masses of women and children, the people who inhabit not only our teeming cities but the country towns as well, such a law as this, which is likely to produce such consequences as this measure undoubtedly will.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The United States Steel Corporation has been held by the Supreme Court not to be in violation of the Sherman Act; but instead of that being a single corporation, if there had been 50 individuals engaged in the production of steel who made an agreement which resulted in the same action as the action taken by the Steel Corporation, does not the Senator think that that combination of 50 individuals would have been found to be in violation of the Sherman Act?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think the court decided that the Steel Corporation was not violating the Sherman law. A case is brought before the Supreme Court, and on the facts stated they decide that the things done constitute a violation of the Sherman law. The size or the percentage of the trade a combination controls would not alone constitute a violation of the law. The Steel Corporation might have been one-sixtieth the size it is, and if its acts had been in violation of the Sherman law, it would have been penalized.

Mr. LENROOT. But I think the Senator will agree with me that the United States Steel Corporation might control 50 per cent of the trade, and still there would be sufficient competition to relieve it from the penalties of the Sherman law, whereas 50 individuals might agree and combine to control the same percentage of the total product, and they clearly would be acting in violation of the Sherman law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In other words, Mr. President, as I said, it is not the amount controlled by a single individual or combination which determines whether the law is violated, but it is the contract in restraint of trade, or the attempt to monopolize in whole or in part the interstate commerce.

Mr. LENROOT. A single individual may lawfully do what a combination of individuals will be permitted to do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Sherman law prohibits the single individual, as well as the combination. I have already read that into the RECORD. Section 2 provides that—

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States * * * shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

That is all there is to this, Mr. President. One set of men come forward and say, "We demand exemption from a great Federal criminal act, from a public policy of the United States of America," which is announced as a public policy not only for the protection of the individual, but for the protection of the whole country, for the protection of interstate trade and commerce. We are asked to pass a statute which, except for the prohibition of an actual monopoly, would allow all the people included in the classes to which I have referred to make any sort of contracts they want to make, without any authority on the part of the Government to question them.

Let us be sure about that. I asked the Senator from Montana whether any substantive authority was given under this act for Congress to organize these associations. I think there is not, and I think none is needed, because they can all organize and be organized into voluntary associations and corporations in their respective States, with or without capital stock. So the first part of the Senate committee substitute is perfectly inconsequential, and while I will not say it is designed to make the farmer think he is getting something from the Federal Government which he is not getting, the effect of it is to make him think so.

Such associations may have marketing agencies in common, and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes.

What purposes? The necessary contracts and agreements for "collectively handling and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of the persons so engaged," and so forth. They may make such contracts as are necessary to produce, process, get into the market, and effectively sell such products, but the Sherman law says that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." That is where this bill takes these associations out of the Sherman antitrust act.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator construe the provision of the bill to which he has just referred, namely, that they can make such contracts as they see fit, to be broad enough to authorize them to make any contracts they see fit, for instance, with Swift & Co. or with any large milling company, with regard to the marketing of their products?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They can make contracts with anybody or with any corporation.

Mr. POMERENE. And fixing the prices at anything they see fit?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; under that they can make contracts with each other that they would not offer for sale a pound of cotton or a piece of tobacco or a bushel of wheat or a beef steer in the country; an agreement with each other that they would raise them and hold them all back until they got word from the central office as to the price at which the members should be allowed to sell. If anybody else does it, it is a crime, and he would be put in State prison for it.

As I said, it puts in the control of these interlocking associations of men, who raise and handle everything that comes from the soil, every article of food and every constituent that goes into the making of clothing. It gives them, if they have a mind to exercise it, a stranglehold upon the whole United States to hold up prices, to agree to withhold their crops from the market until a stipulated price is reached, and to make every sort of contract that has been hitherto considered against the public interest and made a crime, which was made a crime in 1890, and has been so considered for 32 years, by common consent.

Everybody conceded that the Sherman law, after we had struggled along through years of oppression and exploitation, although it was never completely enforced, at least wrote upon the statute books a provision that the making of such a contract should constitute a crime, and set that up as the public standard of what was right and wrong, and now we are asked to relieve half the people of the country from that definition of what is right and wrong, and to say it will be a crime if it is done by a man in the city, but it shall be commendable, under the euphonious language of "cooperative marketing, processing," and so forth, for mutual benefit, if it is done by a man who lives in the country.

Mr. President, that can not stand as a public policy of a great Nation like this. When you are drawing a jury to try a case, who will vote to convict a manufacturer of violating the Sherman law, if he sees six men sitting on that jury who are exempt from the Sherman law enjoying special privileges and immunities?

Mr. President, I have always been thrilled with some approval whenever I heard a Democrat say he was for equal rights for all and special privileges to none, and I hope to be thrilled when I see them vote on this bill, when they prove by their votes that they believe in the principle of the sainted Thomas Jefferson, the father of their party.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have forgotten whether the Senator favored the exemption of railroads from the Sherman law in the Esch-Cummins law. In that act they are expressly exempted, if they consolidate, from the penalties of the Sherman law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The consolidation of railroads to make a through line?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all; the consolidation of competing railroads, under identically the same principle which the Senator now condemns.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not at all.

Mr. LENROOT. Another provision which, I think, the Senator favored was the exemption, under the Webb-Pomerene law, of corporations engaged exclusively in foreign trade.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator fails to distinguish. There is no provision in this bill which regulates the prices which are to be charged. There is no provision which authorizes the adjustment of wages or other things. Reference has been made several times to the Webb-Pomerene export act.

It is not at all analogous, and it is not analogous for the very reason that it is limited expressly to export trade.

There are further limitations in that law, to the effect that any of the associations thus made shall so conduct their business as not to unduly enhance or depress prices domestic. The reason for it was that our exporters, the exporters of our farm products particularly, were confronted by the fact that there were combinations of the buyers in the Old World, so that often it happened they had but one buyer, while here there were innumerable sellers. It was the object of that law to benefit the farmer, to benefit the cotton producer, to benefit the manufacturer, and so forth, so that they could meet the other combinations, the cartels of the Old World, by the situation here. It does not affect domestic prices at all; it affects prices abroad.

Mr. LENROOT. That only goes to the reason for the exemption, about which I am not making any contention; but if there also be a reason for the exemption of farm associations there is no more a special privilege to farmers in this legislation than there was to the railroads and the exporters in the legislation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if there is a reason for any exemption, and of course that is the question here, there can be no reason for a wholesale exemption of the kind proposed in the pending bill. This is a domestic situation. To say that all the people who work on farms may do things which shall not be crimes, while the people who live in the towns and cities, if they do those same things, shall be considered as criminals, can not be a permanent and successful policy in this country.

Mr. President, I think that the bill ought to be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary and that the subject should be given a great deal more consideration than it has had.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] desired to offer an amendment to the pending bill. Having been called from the Chamber, he asked if I would present it in his behalf. I submit the amendment, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 6, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou art our God and earnestly we would seek Thee, for, oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God. Bestow blessings of comfort upon the grief-sore ones and give them peace. Our unexpressed desires are before Thee. Sift them that they may be foregleams of Thy presence, plan, and power. Throughout this day may our trusts be administered with a true heart. O, look Thou upon our country and the nations associated to promote humanness throughout the earth. Enable them to stand together for righteousness and justice. May they be full of industry and morality and become clothed with the higher and nobler elements of national life, and we shall give Thee the praise in a world without end. In the name of Jesus, the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

REFERENCE OF A JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 132, now on the calendar, be referred back to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. What is the resolution?

Mr. KIESS. It is to provide for the continuance of certain Government publications.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution referred to be referred back to the Committee on Printing. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9724. An act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Unanimous Consent Calendar day, and the Clerk will call the calendar.

LEASE OF UNALLOTTED LANDS, FORT PECK RESERVATION, MONT.

The first business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8010) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont.

The Clerk read the title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was on the calendar on prior occasions I called attention to the fact that some of these lands were owned by the Government of the United States, and it is my opinion that the oil-prospecting features should be under the oil-leasing law. I believe the gentleman has an amendment to offer at the end of the bill as follows, "In accordance with the provisions of the general oil leasing act, February 25, 1920." I have no objection to the consideration of the bill with this amendment incorporated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That lands reserved for school and agency purposes and all other unallotted lands on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont., reserved from allotment or other disposition, may be leased for mining purposes by the Indians residing on said reservation, through their tribal council, with the approval of and under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "purposes," strike out "by the Indians residing on said reservation, through their tribal council."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Interior," strike out the period and insert "in accordance with the provisions of the general oil leasing act, February 25, 1920."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RIDDICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STATUE OF DANTE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 99, providing a site upon public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., for the erection of a statue of Dante.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission for the erection on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, Potomac Park, and the White House, a statue of Dante: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the monument shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said monument.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking whether or not this statue has not already been erected?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the statue has been temporarily erected.

Mr. WALSH. Upon what authority of law are statues temporarily erected upon Government property?

Mr. LUCE. Under the general authority of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds to erect temporary structures by implication from the statutes creating his office.

Mr. WALSH. Well, this is hanging upon rather a slender thread, I think. Has not this statue been erected and all the exercises pertaining to its being considered in its final location been held?

Mr. LUCE. Exercises have been held; but I have here a copy of the specific notification on the part of the officer in charge to the effect that it was temporarily erected and subject to removal if not ratified by act of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Will my colleague yield further? Does that situation also apply to the statue of Joan of Arc?

Mr. LUCE. It does. In each case the restriction was definitely set forth by the officer in question, and the statue was placed there with that understanding on the part of the donors.

Mr. WALSH. Well, we have got some sort of a structure down here on the Mall. I believe it is intended to be a corner stone, and the exercises of the laying of which were held in the National Museum, and they put some kind of a structure down there boxed in with wood with an inscription upon it. I think the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, admitted the other day upon the floor that it was placed there and has remained there without any authority of law, supposed to be a corner stone of some memorial building to George Washington, for which some private organization or society, headed by a would-be and presumably social leader, who has been undertaking for several years to raise funds, I think a million dollars, by private subscription, in order that they might comply with the terms laid down in the act whereby the Government might participate.

I doubt if it is wise for the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds to indulge in this practice of giving authority for temporary locations of either buildings or statues. I believe it would be better for the location to be approved, in the first instance, by Congress. I am not objecting to this bill, but I wanted to understand the circumstances under which the legislation came before the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it is fair to say with reference to the corner stone that was laid for the memorial building that the hearings before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds disclosed that as a matter of fact the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds for the District gave no authority whatever for the laying of that corner stone.

Mr. WALSH. That is an additional reason why it should not be there.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not want to leave the impression that the superintendent had given any authority.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no. I did not intend to reflect on the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds, but I think as to these temporary locations of statues and other works of art it would be better if they got the legislation first, and then would go ahead with their exercises and digging holes and setting the statues up.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If I may add another remark, it perhaps should be said in fairness also that the War Department had first held that there was authority for the laying of that corner stone, but upon closer examination of the law reached the conclusion there was not.

Mr. WALSH. A real examination.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will.

Mr. MANN. Was this statue erected with the consent of the Committee on the Library of the House?

Mr. LUCE. It was not.

Mr. MANN. They were not consulted at all?

Mr. LUCE. The chairman of the committee was addressed in the matter. The committee never held a meeting in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. Does it not strike the gentleman from Massachusetts it is rather a unique procedure, where the law requires the action of Congress, to go ahead and erect a statue, and then put Congress in the attitude of being compelled to grant consent?

Mr. LUCE. I quite agree with the gentleman from Illinois, as well as with my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and, if he will permit, I will try to set forth what I conceive to be the situation.

For the proper administration of the Public Buildings and Grounds it is evidently necessary that the official in charge shall have some scope in the erection of temporary structures. He suggests, for example, that in the ordinary administration the question comes up every day, in the setting of trees and plants, the necessity for temporary framework, nets around tennis courts, temporary comfort stations frequently built for the workmen, temporary repairs, walks, chlorinating houses, and so forth. It is quite clear that where the line shall be drawn must be a matter of good judgment on the part of the officer in charge. And to all general principles there are exceptions. I may call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the peculiar circumstance attending the erection of this statue and the one concerned in the following bill. There were present here in the Capital an unusual number of the representatives of foreign nations. The timeliness of the dedicatory exercises can hardly be questioned. The bills had received the approval of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. That is sufficient, I suppose?

Mr. LUCE. Not at all, sir. But the officer in charge had consulted the chairman of the House Committee, who, not ascertaining that there was likely to be objection in the House, said, so far as he was concerned, he had no objection. There was no formal consultation of the whole committee, but the officer in charge, assuming that in any case he had authority for temporary erection of statues, and believing from what he could learn that the matters would take their normal course, recognized the exceptional nature of the situation and proceeded to give the authority for the temporary erection of the statues. It is the fact that the precedent might be abused, greatly to the embarrassment of Congress. And I am glad that gentlemen have called attention to it in order that great care may be exercised in future contingencies. I may remind gentlemen that a somewhat similar state of affairs arose in regard to the group of busts of pioneers in the cause of woman suffrage, now in the crypt beneath the dome. In that case great embarrassment would have been brought to many worthy persons if there had not been procedure in some respects informal, followed by compliance with the directions of the Library Committee after formal enactment on the part of Congress.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks of a "temporary structure." This is not a temporary structure; it is a permanent structure. You might as well say that the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds could permit the erection of a large marble building on one of the parks, with the provision that unless Congress would thereafter grant permission it should be torn down. This is not a temporary structure.

There was not great haste about this. I do not know what the explanation may be. This bill passed the Senate on August 22, according to the copy of the bill I have—calendar date August 24.

It apparently did not reach the House for a month, and was not acted upon by the House committee until December 15. Of course, if there had been the hurry or the necessity for haste, it could very easily have been acted on in both bodies long before it was. I think the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds ought to be made to understand that he has not the authority to permit the erection of statues on the public grounds of the Government. He may run into trouble hereafter if he keeps up this plan. I think he will.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, there is no gentleman in Congress with whom I would more gladly associate myself in attempting to expedite its processes than with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I understood my colleague to refer to this wonderful but wierd piece of, I suppose, art—though I am not competent to designate it—down on the lower floor, in the crypt. Did the Committee on the Library have anything to do with that?

Mr. LUCE. The Committee on the Library designated the crypt as the location.

Mr. WALSH. I am wondering why they did not get it down on the cellar floor, where it belongs apparently. It appears to carry the impression of three venerable women taking an agreeable mud bath. [Laughter.] I just wondered why it ever happened to be located where it is.

Mr. MANN. I am surprised that they did not locate that statue in the main aisle of the House Hall, so that everybody would have to go around the side aisles. It is located now where everybody has to go out of their way in passing between the two parts of the Capitol. It is a very poor place.

Mr. LUCE. Perhaps I can explain by recalling that soon after the disposition of that statue I chanced to be reading a volume of recent memoirs by an English statesman, in which he recalled that a group of artists came to Lord Palmerston with complaint because works of arts were reposing in the cellars of Burlington House; whereupon the noble lord said, "I will do what I can, but you know that 'ars est celare artem.'" [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman please translate that for the benefit of more humble Members?

Mr. LUCE. "The perfection of art consists in concealing it." However, I doubt if the Committee on the Library would lay it down as a general principle that the place to put art is in the cellar. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TEMPORARY BUILDINGS OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (S. J. Res. 43) to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the member of the Library Committee having knowledge of this matter whether there is any necessity for this legislation now?

Mr. LUCE. The statute provides that no statues shall be erected on public buildings and grounds without an act of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. This is to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington.

Mr. LUCE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought the next one was the Joan of Arc bill. What is this bill under consideration?

Mr. WALSH. This is to continue the use of the temporary buildings for the American Red Cross headquarters in Washington, down in public square 172. Is there any need for this legislation at the present time?

Mr. LUCE. Yes. The time limit for the use of the ground was May 22, 1920, and then it was extended to December 31, 1921, so that as a matter of fact at the present time they are using the ground without authority.

Mr. WALSH. What is it that they are doing which requires the use of this property beyond the original time fixed? Of course, we all appreciate that when we give consent and fix a date it is always extended, or always asked to be extended, and the extension is usually granted. But what is it that they are doing that required the use of this property during the time between May and December of last year?

Mr. LUCE. It is being used in part for the military relief and health service organizations, civilian relief, nursing service, and central stenographic force. One-half of the basement of one building is used by the cafeteria, which furnishes luncheon daily to approximately 1,200 persons, including many from the neighboring departments. The other part of the basement contains the heating plant. The desire of the Red Cross people was that they should have an indefinite extension of time, and a resolution in that form passed the Senate. The judgment of the House Committee on the Library is that there ought not to be an extension of more than a year.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that amendment, but, of course, they will be having all those things when December comes. They will be having their stenographers and military relief and health work activities, and they will probably need it beyond December. But why have not their activities gotten into such a state that they can get along with their own building and continue there?

Mr. LUCE. I speak with no special information on the subject, but I have the impression that the unsettled state of Europe has continued the activities of the Red Cross on a much larger scale than anybody supposed was possible after the war.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose that is so, when we are appropriating millions of dollars to save starving people all over the world, and are liable to be appropriating $20,000,000 for that purpose every two or three months. Perhaps they ought to have this building in view of the fact that that contingency is likely to happen.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. We passed the original resolution directing that the building should be removed and the site restored within three years from the date of the approval of the resolution. That was May 22, 1917, when this resolution was prepared. I do not know who prepared it, but it deliberately made a false statement in reference to the prior act of Congress. The first "whereas" of this resolution says:

Provided said buildings erected under said authority should be removed and the site or sites thereof placed in good condition within such time as may hereafter be provided by Congress.

That would give anyone the impression that it took the action of Congress to cause the removal of these buildings. I say that statement was made falsely, and I presume deliberately falsely to mislead Congress, on the supposition that the gentlemen reading it would suppose that the recital was true.

Evidently, however, the Committee on the Library was not fooled by it—the Committee on the Library on the part of the House—although the Senate passed it in that way, making this false statement. Now, what I have in mind is the question whether you want to extend the time for the removal of these buildings until December 31, 1922, or whether, if this bill goes through the House with that provision in it which the House amended, it is the intention to send it to conference and have the conferees agree to the original resolution, which would permit that building to stand there for a century? I would like to inquire what is the attitude of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who is in charge of the bill on the floor? Are we going to pass this bill and fool the House by saying the building shall be removed by December 31, 1922, and then as the result of a conference report go back to the original proposition of the Red Cross and permit this building to remain there forever?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I do not foresee that I shall reach the distinguished honor of being a member of any conference committee for some years yet to come, even though continuance of my service in the House is approved by my constituents.

Mr. MANN. We ought to have somebody on the floor who should be able to get on the conference committee when he has charge of a bill of this kind, and until I can be satisfied on that subject I shall object.

Mr. LUCE. I shall be quite ready to urge and advise the members of the conference committee, if I am not one of their number, to adhere to the House amendment, because it seems to me the gentleman presents the case in a reasonable fashion and in accordance with the views of the members of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. MANN. It may be that the building ought to remain there forever. I do not know, but I do not want to see the House fooled; and it is the evident purpose of this original resolution to act without knowing what is being done.

Mr. LUCE. For my own part I shall be glad to go on record as saying that I am against long retention of the temporary structures in Washington, first, last, and all the time, and hope they may be removed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Is it not a fact that the Red Cross are erecting an additional large building down there as a permanent structure, and is it not probable that the temporary structure is needed only during the construction of that?

Mr. MANN. That I can not say. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. What location has the gentleman in mind where the Red Cross is erecting any permanent structure? This morning as I passed the permanent headquarters of the Red Cross on the way to the armament conference I failed to notice any new construction work.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will look immediately back of the large permanent building there he will find a very splendid marble building being constructed.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will read the report—I assume that he has read it—he will find that the letter from the Red Cross does not say that they have in contemplation the erection of any new building, but that these temporary wooden buildings, Annexes Nos. 3 and 4—No. 1 having been demolished already—are intended to be retained for Red Cross activities. There is nothing in the letter from the Red Cross which suggests or hints that they are erecting any permanent structure, but the letter is predicated upon the idea that these buildings will be continued for years and years to come.

Mr. MANN. There is a new building going up there.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. There is a new building under construction, nevertheless.

Mr. MANN. Whether it is to take the place of this or not I do not know, but the request of the Red Cross is to have this building remain there permanently. Somebody tried to mislead Congress. I do not know who it was. Perhaps that request ought to be granted. When that question comes up we will consider it; but I do not think we ought to pass a bill of this sort, with a House amendment imposing a short limitation, if the House limitation is not to remain in the bill when it becomes a law. We ought not to pass it without knowing that it will remain in the bill.

Mr. LUCE. Can the gentleman inform me what further assurance can be given than I have already given, or how the bill can accomplish the end that the gentleman desires?

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman privately very easily how that can be accomplished. Meanwhile I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MEMORIAL TO JEANNE D'ARC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Jeanne d'Arc.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2802) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof three new paragraphs to read as follows:

"Each executive department, and each independent establishment of the Government not within the jurisdiction of any executive department, shall establish and maintain such record as will enable it to determine the amount deducted within each fiscal year from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of each employee within its jurisdiction to whom this act applies. When such employee is transferred from one office to another a certified abstract of his official record shall be transmitted to the office to which the transfer is made.

"When application is made to the Commissioner of Pensions for return of deductions and accrued interest, as provided in this section, such application shall be accompanied by a certificate from the proper officer showing the complete record of deductions, by fiscal years, and other data necessary to the proper adjustment of the claim.

"The Commissioner of Pensions, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, shall establish rules and regulations for crediting and reporting deductions and for computing interest hereunder."

SEC. 2. That section 13 of such act of May 22, 1920, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of the head of each executive department and the head of each independent establishment of the Government not within the jurisdiction of any executive department to report to the Civil Service Commission, in such manner as said commission may prescribe, the name and grade of each employee to whom this act applies in or under said department or establishment who shall be at any time in a nonpay status, showing the dates such employee was in a nonpay status, and the amount of salary, pay, or compensation lost by the employee by reason of such absence. The Civil Service Commission shall keep a record of appointments, transfers, changes in grade, separations from the service, reinstatements, loss of pay, and such other information concerning individual service as may be deemed essential to a proper determination of rights under this act, and shall furnish the Commissioner of Pensions such reports therefrom as he shall from time to time request as necessary to the proper adjustment of any claim for annuity hereunder, and shall prepare and keep all needful tables and records required for carrying out the provisions of this act, including data showing the mortality experience of the employees in the service and the percentage of withdrawal from such service, and any other information that may serve as a guide for future valuations and adjustments of the plan for the retirement of employees under this act.

"The Commissioner of Pensions shall make a detailed comparative report annually showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities, together with the total number of persons receiving annuities and the amounts paid them."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL MONUMENT IN RIVERSIDE COUNTY, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7598) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dedicate and set apart as a national monument certain lands in Riverside County, Calif.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from California give a brief statement of the idea of this legislation?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to reserve as a national monument three canyons which are located about 60 miles southeast of Riverside, Calif. They contain what is said to be the only existing group of wild Washington palms. It is proposed to preserve them as a national monument, so that these trees will not be destroyed. They are valuable for the purposes of botanical interest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. What special conditions exist that prevent this territory being included under the general monument law?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that that is the purpose of this bill, and if passed this territory will be included under it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the President has authority to reserve territory which is scientifically valuable and rare for the benefit of future generations.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state that there are certain Indian rights involved here. The land belongs to the Agua Caliente Band of Indians; it is part of their reservation, but it is not valuable for any purpose except as a watercourse. The water used for irrigation comes down through these canyons and is reserved to the Indians. The bill specifically provides that the Indians shall be compensated. It will not cost the Government a penny, because the money will be raised by private subscription.

Mr. WALSH. Who is going to raise it?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know the name of the organization, but the people of Riverside are interested. The bill expressly provides for payment of compensation to the Indians, and these funds will be raised. I understand the arrangements have already been made.

Mr. WALSH. This takes it out from under the water power act. Does the gentleman think that the committee amendments will in any way interfere with its use and enjoyment as a national monument?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; I think not.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. BEGG. What is the real reason beyond the preservation of a few trees for putting this into a national park?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state that these are very rare trees. I am informed that they constitute the only existing group of these natural wild palms that grew in the deserts of the Southwest. They are hundreds of years old. They are the only trees of the kind, I understand, in existence to-day.

Mr. BEGG. Personally, I will say that I do not expect to object, but I am not in sympathy with this kind of a bill. About every Congress somebody comes in for an appropriation for parks and building highways, and the maintenance of the highways does not come from the Territory nor the State through which they go.

Mr. BARBOUR. This bill does not contemplate an appropriation, neither now nor hereafter, as far as I know. I do not see why it should need an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It is worth an appropriation. These Washington palms are a wonderful thing. If we could put one of them in the Capitol grounds, we would pay $100,000 for it, and no one would object. This is probably the only place where they can be preserved.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. BEGG. Can the gentleman tell us what kind of an asset they will be to the country to preserve them out there? I can well imagine that if you bring them here and put them on the Capitol grounds they would be an asset, but what good will they do the human family out there in the future?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio and myself, together or singly, will some day make a trip out there and he will acknowledge when he sees them that it is worth a year's life. I am sure that nothing would so improve the gentleman from Ohio, if anything could improve him—and he stands so high and so well that he does not need improvement—as to visit these Washington palms.

Mr. BEGG. I will say that I have been all over this country, but not in this particular section, and I have seen some pretty tall, straight trees.

Mr. MANN. They are not the trees that the gentleman has in mind at all, these are palms.

Mr. BARBOUR. And they are wild palms.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman from Illinois thinks it would improve us to associate a little with the wild ones. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to set apart the following-described lands located in the county of Riverside, in the State of California, as a national monument, which shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall administer and protect the same under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 8, 1906, entitled "An act for the preservation of American antiquities," and under such regulations as he may prescribe: The west half of the southwest quarter of section 2, the southeast quarter of section 3, all of section 10, the west half of the northwest quarter of section 11, all of section 14, all in township 5 south, range 4 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, containing 1,600 acres: Provided, That before such reservation and dedication as herein authorized shall become effective the consent and relinquishment of the Agua Caliente Band of Indians shall first be obtained, covering its right, title, and interest in and to the lands herein described, and payment therefor to the members of said band on a per capita basis, at a price to be agreed upon, when there shall be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior a fund in an amount to be fixed and determined by him as sufficient to compensate the Indians.

SEC. 2. That in order to determine the amount to be paid under the preceding section the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to negotiate with said Indians to obtain their consent and relinquishment, and when such consent and relinquishment has been obtained and an agreement reached the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to make payment for the lands relinquished to the enrolled members of the said Agua Caliente Band as authorized by section 1 of this act: Provided, That the consent and relinquishment of the Indians may be obtained and payment made for the lands in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable.

Sec. 3. That the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1920, known as the Federal water power act, shall not apply to this monument.

The following committee amendments were read:

(1) Page 2, line 13, strike out the words "placed at the disposal of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "donated for such purpose to."

(2) Page 2, line 16, after the word "Indians," strike out the period and insert the word "therefor" and a period.

(3) Page 2, line 23, after the word "payment," insert the words "from said donated fund."

(4) Page 3, at the end of line 3, after the word "advisable," change the period to a colon and add the following:

"Provided further, That the water rights, dams, pipe lines, canals, and irrigation structures located in sections 2 and 3 of township 5 south, range 4 east, San Bernardino meridian, and also all water and water rights in Palm Canyon, are hereby excepted from this reserve and shall remain under the exclusive control and supervision of the Bureau of Indian Affairs."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3074. An act providing for a Good Roads Association convention cancellation stamp to be used by the Phoenix (Ariz.) post office.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIII, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3074. An act providing for a Good Roads Association convention cancellation stamp to be used by the Phoenix (Ariz.) post office; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

CLOTHING FOR EX-SERVICE MEN WHILE HOSPITAL PATIENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 221) directing the Secretary of War to furnish clothing to ex-service men while patients in Public Health Service hospitals.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as the bill was originally introduced the idea was, I assume, that the Secretary of War was to furnish certain clothing out of reserve supplies of the Army to the ex-service men in hospitals under the jurisdiction of the United States Public Health Service. As the committee has reported the bill, it is now a direct authorization to the Public Health Service to furnish clothing to these ex-service veterans who are in hospitals under their charge and who are not receiving compensation. The query I wish to propound to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT], who introduced the resolution, and also to present to the attention of the House, is if we are going to confer this privilege upon the war veterans who are not receiving compensation in hospitals under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service, why not confer the same privilege upon the same character of men in hospitals under the direction of the Board of Managers for National Homes, the War and Navy Departments, and private hospitals?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as far as that is concerned, if the gentleman wants to offer an amendment to include those people, very well. This resolution was prepared on actual knowledge of conditions that existed at a hospital in my home town. If the gentleman will reserve the right to object for a moment, I call his attention to the fact that of the ex-service men in Camp Logan Hospital there were 257 on November 8 who were not drawing compensation. Out of that number of 257 who were not drawing compensation, there were 34 patients in Camp Logan Hospital who did not have sufficient clothing, according to the statement of the Red Cross officials, or suitable clothing to attend entertainments given at the Red Cross Hut for their pleasure and benefit. Gentlemen will remember that these men at the camps to which this resolution applies are men who are without any means at all. They were drawn into the service under the selective draft without regard to whether they did or did not have money. They have come home, they are without means, they are broken in health. Some of them are unable to connect their disability with the line of service, for the reason that some of them have tuberculosis which developed recently, and have no means of tracing that tuberculosis to their line of service. Any eminent physician will tell you, or anyone else, that while he can not state his opinion in the form of an affidavit, which would give these men compensation, yet with men who had the "flu" in France, who apparently got well of it, and then came home and were discharged and now have tuberculosis, that that tuberculosis is no doubt due to their service in line of duty. These men are men of that character. The two years have elapsed. There are 34 of them who are patients not drawing any compensation. They are not all tubercular. They are men who have gone to that hospital and who have filed their claims and are unable to establish their claims. I take it that this will be a continuing situation. There were 257 there on the 8th of November. Some of them perhaps have had their claims adjudicated and are now receiving compensation. The purpose of this resolution is to get some method on foot somewhere so that an ex-service man who went to France or who served in this country, and who, this near to the war, is without food and clothing, who is broken in health, shall be furnished with clothing while in a hospital of this kind, suitable at least in which to attend the entertainments given by the citizens for his pleasure and benefit.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me under his reservation of the right to object?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the gentleman spoke very correctly when he said the purpose of this resolution is to get some movement on foot somewhere. That very indefinite character may be applied to the resolution. The resolution should be passed. This is a very urgent matter.

I have the same condition in my district at the Fort Sheridan Reservation, where in an Army hospital there is a considerable number of men receiving treatment who are destitute of clothing, whose wants have been supplied in fact by the generosity and charity of people living in that immediate locality. But with all due deference, it seems to me that this bill has been rather poorly considered. Originally it provided that the Secretary of War might provide this clothing, assuming that it might be taken out of surplus material, although the resolution did not say so. It now provides that the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall provide this clothing. I know that he has no clothing. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service has no clothing which he can distribute for this purpose. An appropriation would have to be made for the Public Health Service for this very purpose. How are we going to get action on the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. This is Unanimous Consent Day, and if there is no objection an amendment can be offered to this, and I have one ready, providing for an appropriation, or that the Secretary of War be directed to furnish the clothing out of any surplus he may have.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, that matter came up in the committee, and it developed that these men in the hospitals could not use United States clothing, because they are discharged. They wanted to have the Public Health Service do it. The Public Health Service could do it as they do usually, but it is against the law for them to use United States clothing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Would it be against the law for them to use underwear which is in the hands of the Army as surplus material?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs to report out a resolution authorizing the Public Health Service to furnish clothing, if it was not intended by the committee to use military supplies.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The Public Health Service is always furnishing various things, such as blankets.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction over the Public Health Service.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does the gentleman desire to take that point under consideration now? I do not know anything about it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is not my purpose to raise any objection to the consideration of the resolution. It is so meritorious that it should be passed, but it ought to have been perfected and presented in such shape that it would accomplish something.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I am now asking the advice and cooperation of the gentleman to help perfect the matter. The parliamentary situation was such in committee that the resolution had to be reported out in this shape. If we can get unanimous consent for its consideration, any amendment that the gentleman may offer which will perfect the resolution and bring about the result desired, I shall be very glad to accept.

I have no particular pride of opinion about it. I know this condition exists and I know it ought not to exist, and the purpose of this resolution is to help these ex-service men.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman has an amendment to suggest, let us have it, to see if we can perfect the bill; but it certainly does not come here in such shape as to be of any service.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas who introduced this measure whether the question of germaneness of the committee amendment was raised in the committee?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Well, the gentleman has been in the House longer than I have and he understands I am not supposed to disclose those things upon the floor of the House that transpire in the committee.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think this is a germane amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will say very frankly to my friend that my original idea was that this clothing should be furnished by the Secretary of War out of the surplus we have on hand. They have plenty of underclothing, they have uniforms which they are selling to these cheap-John stores all over the country, and selling underwear the same way. My purpose was that these men should have this underwear and have the uniforms. I am no stickler on the subject. I say the men who wore the uniform in France should have the honor to wear it in public-health hospitals. I see no objection, although there are some who do. There were in the committee some who absolutely objected to the surplus clothing in the Army being used for any purpose. Now, if the gentleman wants the whole truth about it, that is it. I have got the resolution out here as you find it under the conditions mentioned.

Mr. WALSH. Now, suppose this resolution should pass as it is proposed to be amended by the committee. What is to prevent the War Department from going ahead and selling clothing to clothing houses?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Not a thing in the world.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it brought in, then? What has that got to do with this measure?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Nothing in the world, except the fact it was brought up on the floor of the House.

Mr. WALSH. When is it expected the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is going to get this clothing?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If the gentleman will help us amend this resolution, we can fix it up very quickly.

Mr. WALSH. I did not hear the purpose of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I have two amendments, one of which we can amend by appropriating so many thousand dollars for this purpose for the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to buy clothing with, or I am willing to say that the Secretary of War shall furnish it upon requisition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would it not meet the situation if the House voted down the committee amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the committee amendment is germane myself. I do not know whether the point of order can be made.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I do not think so myself, but it is unanimous consent I am trying to get to take it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I have given some little consideration to this measure. I think that the bill should apply to all veterans under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Bureau whether they are in a hospital under the charge of the Public Health Service or in the National Homes or in an Army, Navy, or private hospital. I wish to suggest an amendment which I think would be proper and on which I would like to have the gentleman's opinion. As amended it would read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish out of reserve material for the Army to the Veterans' Bureau for the use of all ex-service men of the World War under its care now in Government or private hospitals, or who may hereafter be admitted to such hospitals, and who are not receiving compensation for such necessary and suitable clothing.

And so forth.

My idea is not to limit it to surplus material, because the War Department has no surplus material in certain articles of apparel.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is very likely true as to material, but it does have much surplus clothing.

Mr. WALSH. It is impossible to amend this joint resolution satisfactorily on the floor, in my judgment; but I would like to ask the gentleman if he is willing to advise us what his amendments are which he proposes to offer?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Page 2, line 2, after the word "men," strike out the period and insert "There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated in the Treasury of the United States the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the immediate relief of such ex-service men."

Mr. WALSH. What is the other amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The other amendment is not written out, but it is suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. What are the rights of the ex-service men to be admitted to hospitals?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that that question seems to be settled by general consent—that these men are just simply admitted there. There has been some question raised as to whether or not they were legally admitted, but the Public Health Service, as I understand it, goes upon the assumption that these hospitals are being run for the benefit of ex-service men, and when an ex-service man shows up they take him in and start with him and do the best they can with him, regardless of the origin of his trouble.

Mr. MANN. Is it a fact that whenever an ex-service man presents himself to one of the Public Health hospitals they admit him for treatment at once?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I think they admit him for preliminary examination, and when he has all the necessary papers that show that he is an ex-service man, he is admitted.

Mr. MANN. If he is admitted for preliminary examination, would that give him a free suit of clothing?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. It would be a question of whether or not they were going to allow him the clothing or wait until they had passed upon his case.

Mr. MANN. This does not say anything about regulations. This says when he is admitted he is entitled to clothing.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that I think whenever an ex-service man is admitted by the Public Health Service in one of these hospitals, and has not any clothing and no money with which to buy any, they ought to give it to him.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing here about the matter of buying clothing at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That class of soldiers—

Mr. MANN. I assume that ex-service men would naturally take advantage of their rights, like other people. If a man who applied for admission was entitled to a suit of underclothing or outer clothing, he would ask for it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is all right.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say that I am sorry that this matter comes in in such a shape it can not be disposed of, because there are very deserving cases of this character. I want to say, in reference to the last point raised by my distinguished colleague from Illinois, that when an ex-service man presents himself to one of the stations of the Public Health Service or one of the officers of the Veterans' Bureau, and he is sick, diseased, disabled, and without funds, of course, the natural and proper thing is to place him somewhere for observation and examination in order to determine whether his illness is of service origin. That has been done, I understand, and under those conditions these men come into the institutions. Many of them are without clothing, very badly without clothing, and it would be very desirable if proper legislation could be framed and passed to relieve those cases which are deserving and pressing.

Mr. MANN. I agree with my colleague.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat in agreement with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], but I can not—

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. What suggestion has the gentleman from Massachusetts to make concerning this resolution before he objects?

Mr. WALSH. My suggestion is that the committee give the matter more careful consideration and see if some legislation can not be framed for the issue of clothing by the Secretary of War to men who shall be certified by the proper authority as being in need of underclothing or outer clothing, but not to make it general in its scope as proposed by this measure, and transfer it to the Surgeon General, who has no stock of clothing available, and make necessary an appropriation. Now, there ought not to be any appropriation, because the War Department has a large stock, I am told, of clothing which in meritorious cases might be made available. I think that it ought to receive further consideration.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Has the gentleman read the letter of the Secretary of War in there?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes. Of course, the Secretary of War objects to the passage of this bill because it is going to take out some of this tremendous supply of surplus stock they have on hand there and give it to somebody. And I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill on the calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may remain on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. If it goes to the foot of the calendar, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that it go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute in order to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether he does not think this bill now should be referred back to the Committee on Military Affairs, so that we can get it onto the Unanimous Consent Calendar very soon in such shape that it can be passed?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will state that my idea is—and I shall be very glad to consult with him and other gentlemen—to present this on next unanimous-consent day, with certain amendments, so that it may be acted upon on next unanimous-consent day.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that No. 162 on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, to which objection was made, may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that No. 162 may go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request as to No. 163.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PAYMENT OF TUITION FOR INDIAN CHILDREN.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 140, relative to payment of tuition for Indian children enrolled in Montana State public schools.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, reporting this bill as to what construction the department has placed on the two provisions carried in the two statutes referred to in the bill, providing that the Indian children shall be educated in the public school on equal terms with white children?

Mr. SNYDER. As the gentleman knows, in the act of March 3 appropriation was carried for the purpose of paying tuition for Indian children in the public schools of Montana. In this particular division—No. 9 of the Montana school—Indian children have been going to school under the same conditions, and heretofore tuition had been paid. But an occasion arose where it was necessary to make a special appropriation for that particular school, and the wording of that act was such that the comptroller ruled that he could not pay out money on it. All that this does is to correct the language so that the money appropriated last year can be paid for the tuition of Indian children who have been in that school since last July.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall—and I do not believe that is the established practice, so far as Indian affairs are concerned—Congress in the appropriation act of February 4, 1920, made a special appropriation for the building of a public school in this school district, and to that appropriation was coupled the provision that the Indian children shall be admitted to that Indian school on an equality with white people.

Mr. RIDDICK. No. That was to be paid for.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the language of that appropriation for the erection of this public building, carrying $15,000, perhaps; I am not sure how much.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; $15,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. To the appropriation was coupled this provision, that "Indian children shall be admitted to said public school on an entire equality with the white children."

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was Congress to understand with reference to that appropriation made for the erection of that public-school building? Was it not the idea that we were allowing public funds for the erection of a public school, with the idea that the Indian children should have the privilege of attending that school without extra charge?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman knows that has been the practice, and there has been separate payment made for the tuition of Indian children in State schools wherever it has been possible to do it. In some cases we found that there was not sufficient school room for the white children attending and such Indian children as we desired to put into those schools. Several cases of the kind the gentleman mentions in the last few years have been taken care of by a direct appropriation for building the schools for both white and Indian children. Usually the State matches the amount appropriated by the Government for the purpose.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; if I have the floor.

Mr. CARTER. The fact is that we have appropriated annually in the Indian appropriation bill for the tuition of children in the public schools.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; about $200,000.

Mr. CARTER. Yes. That is carried along, and the Indian children go into the schools with the white children, which I think is a very good thing. What the gentleman from New York wants to do here is this: When this school was built it was intended that the Indian children should be admitted on the same basis as the white children, but it was not intended to say that in that particular school the Government would be relieved of the expense of paying the tuition of the Indian children, as is done in other parts of the United States; but as I see from the report which I have just read, that is what the comptroller has ruled with reference to the law.

As I understand the gentleman from New York, he simply wants to change it to the basis and method followed heretofore with respect to other schools.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is quite right about that.

Mr. RIDDICK. There is one fact that I wish the gentlemen will understand, that the citizens of Browning, Mont., propose to put up a $100,000 school building, and the Government contributed about $15,000 toward the construction. The annual cost of operation is something like $30,000 a year. It is contemplated that the Indian children shall pay about $70 a year tuition, which is much less than is charged for the education of Indian children in other places, and that pays about half the expense of running the school, although the Indians have three-fourths and the white people 25 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that of the gentleman from Oklahoma, who was for a long time chairman of the committee, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc. That nothing contained in the provisions of section 10 of the act of February 14, 1920 (41 Stats. L., p. 421), and of section 10 of the act of March 3, 1921 (41 Stats. L., p. 1237), shall be construed to preclude the payment of tuition for Indian children enrolled and educated in Montana State public schools, pursuant to annual or existing appropriations of public money for payment of such tuition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RIDDICK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LANDS IN THE SHASTA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5004) to provide for the consolidation of forest lands in the Shasta National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, if the gentleman from California does not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. It was not my intention to object. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill and three others of similar character contain no provision that the Federal Government shall reimburse the counties in which the forests are situated, and hence a number of the taxpayers think the Federal Government ought to pay the taxes on the land that is turned back to the Government in exchange, and they want the Forest Service and myself to put such an amendment on this bill. I hope we can to-day, but if there is any objection to that—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the gentleman proposes, where land is exchanged and the Government turns over land to private individuals and the private individuals turn it back to the Government, to tax the lands turned over to the Government?

Mr. RAKER. We can not do that under the Constitution of the United States and the State laws, but the citizens—

Mr. MANN. I am asking if that is the gentleman's proposition now?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman repeat that question? I did not catch it, owing to the confusion prevailing in the Chamber.

Mr. MANN. Was it not the gentleman's proposition that the land turned over to the Government shall be subject to taxation?

Mr. RAKER. No. The citizens want the Government to make provision for paying what the private individuals would pay for the lands that are turned over from private ownership to the Government. That is the principle that is involved in all these land exchanges, and there is no provision for the payment of taxes. They want to be reimbursed each year for what the taxes would have been had it remained in private ownership. A number of citizens feel that the Government ought to pay taxes on the land put into the district, because otherwise they lose the taxes.

Mr. MANN. If the Government turns over land to a private individual and receives land in exchange, why should the Government pay anything on that land? It turns land over to a private individual, which land then becomes taxable. If the Government, instead of turning over land to a private individual, turns over a part of the timber, the State and county get a part of the product of that.

Mr. RAKER. I want to make myself plain, so that the gentleman will understand it. There is a large amount of privately owned land in these reserves. This kind of legislation allows these people to exchange land for timber. The people in the counties in which these reserves are located feel that they are not getting enough from the Government for protecting this land, by virtue of keeping up the civil government, State and county, which protects the Government's land for the benefit of all the people of the United States, and they want me now to get a larger proportion or have the Government pay for the taxes that they lose.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman himself favor that proposition?

Mr. RAKER. I do not favor the Government paying a direct tax, but I do favor the Government paying a larger percentage of the amount that it is now receiving from permits in national forests. The Government should pay to the counties what the counties lose by reason of the property being taken from the tax rolls.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of general legislation.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. MANN. Of course, somebody will object to this if that proposition is going to be presented. The gentleman is seeking to let somebody take an unfair advantage of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Somebody—many.

Mr. MANN. Let us be frank about it.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. In all cases of this character where private land is presented to the Government the county in which the land is located loses the benefit of the taxes on that land.

Mr. MANN. Why does it, if the Government turns over other lands to private individuals, which land then becomes taxable? What is the difference?

Mr. RAKER. They will not consider that. They believe that they lose the taxes on the land which is turned over.

Mr. MANN. I did not suppose anybody was so ignorant as that anywhere.

Mr. RAKER. Some pretty good people have investigated this. Senator Smoot introduced a bill to compensate them for the land thus turned over, and others favor the same proposition; and I think if we could get an amendment that would give them a larger percentage of the return from the permits, in order to compensate them for maintaining the forests for all the people of the United States, of course they would be getting something.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. EVANS. If I understand the gentleman, the exchange is made on the request of the private owners.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. And having gotten this exchange that is desired, the private owner wants the Government to pay more for having rendered him that favor.

Mr. RAKER. No; that is not the question at all. The question is that the counties in which the forest reserves are located feel that they are losing the taxes on the lands turned over by the private owners to the Government.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman's proposition, if the Government turns over timber and that timber is cut, the county not only wants to get a large share of the immediate price of the timber, but also wants the Government to pay forever to the county for the privilege of making the trade.

Mr. RAKER. May I have an opportunity to read a paragraph of this letter, so as to make it perfectly plain?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is understood that objection will be made if any such amendment is going to be proposed.

Mr. RAKER. Let me read this paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am afraid the gentleman is jeopardizing the safety of his bill by proposing such an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that nobody will favor any such proposition. It is a matter that should be carefully considered, and it may take several years to consider it carefully.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is not going to offer any such proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the Record on the matter that has just been under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the bill just objected to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9931) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how far is this bridge toward completion?

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, all I know in relation to that is what is stated in the memorandum at the bottom of the report.

Mr. WATSON. Is this for the widening of an old bridge, or is it for an entirely new bridge?

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. It is to extend the time originally granted in 1912. The sum of $500,000, in round figures, has been expended for the construction of the piers and clearing the channel of obstructions caused by the work, as required by the War Department, in order that navigation would not be interfered with. The Pennsylvania Railroad also maintains lights on the piers. A large portion of the right of way for the railroad has been obtained at a cost of $1,750,000. So there has been expended up to the present time $2,250,000.

Mr. WATSON. The Pennsylvania Railroad within a few years has completed a bridge, and I wanted to know whether there was another bridge or whether this pertained to the old bridge.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether there has been a bridge completed. This is the bridge for which permit was given in 1912, but because of the war and the heavy cost of materials they did not proceed with it, but got an extension in 1915, and this seeks a further extension.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge authorized by act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, to be built by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co. across the Delaware River near the city of Trenton, N. J., which has heretofore been extended by Congress to August 24, 1922, is hereby extended for a further period of three years from the last-named date.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE RAILROAD SITUATION.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the remarks of Secretary Hoover before the Interstate Commerce Commission on the railroad situation on February 3, 1922.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the remarks of Secretary Hoover on February 3, 1922, before the Interstate Commerce Commission on the railroad situation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following statement by the Secretary of Commerce before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION FEBRUARY 3, 1922.

In responding to the invitation to discuss some of the problems present in your general railroad investigations, I shall devote myself to three of the railway topics which especially arise from the present economic situation.

I do not need to review at length that we are recovering from the destruction and inflation of the greatest war in history, that we are suffering from the waste, the extravagance, and overexpansion of the postwar boom, and that the war has brought about great shifts in the movement and price levels of commodities between nations.

I would, however, suggest that it might be profitable for our people to get a somewhat clearer perspective of our own and the world's troubles and problems. Even a superficial survey must bring us out of an atmosphere of gloomily introspection into an assuring realization that, great as our dislocations may seem to be, we relatively are in an enviable position. Our Nation is unshaken, and as a people we are getting our bearings in a world of perplexing economic adjustments. While there is unemployment and lack of profit taking, we are free of panic. We are comparatively more restless than injured. For instance, as heavy as our tax burden is it is still less than one-half as great in proportion to our national productivity as the other states in the war.

The violence of our readjustment, however, is without parallel, and we sometimes tend to color our measures for the future by the depression we are in. The fact is that we must predicate all plans for the future on the ultimate return of the American people to a normal economic activity with our annual progress in the expansion of our production, of our plant and equipment, of our skill and our efficiency. There can be no question that this return will take place, and no responsible body will approach our problems on any other basis. Not one of us would submit to the charge that we were not prepared to bet against any odds upon the future of the United States. Our problem is to expedite this recovery—to speed up employment of our workers, and thereby find market for our farmers.

If we look at the national economic situation as a whole, the greatest impulse that can be given to recovery from any source whatever is a reduction of rates on primary commodities combined with the immediate resumption of railway construction and equipment. The first depends upon reduction of operating costs, the second upon restoration of credit for our railways.

One thing is absolute. Our transportation facilities are below the needs of our country, and unless we have a quick resumption of construction the whole community—agricultural, commercial, and industrial—will be gasping from a strangulation caused by insufficient transportation the moment that our business activities resume. For the past five years we have had no consequential expansion to our railway transportation machine. With but one interval of nine months in 1918 and 1919 we had a car shortage throughout the whole of the years 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920. This shortage rose to as high as 160,000 cars, with a corresponding shortage of motive power. We paid tremendous sums in commercial losses and unemployment in consequence. We laid it onto the war. We should lay it onto our lack of foresight and antagonism to railroads.

Few people seem to realize the amount of expansion in our transportation machine necessary to keep pace with the growth of the country. And an equal few seem to have any notion of the price we pay for not having it. Our country is more dependent upon railway transport than any other. All others have comparatively greater coast lines and internal waterways. The experience of the 20 years before the war has shown that we must build an extension of lines, including terminal facilities, additional sidings, etc., every year equal to the construction of a new railway from New York to San Francisco. We must add at least 120,000 cars and 2,500 locomotives annually to our equipment. Since we entered the war in 1917 we have constructed at least 10,000 miles of railway less than our increasing population and economic development called for, and we are behind in rolling stock by about 4,000 locomotives and 200,000 cars. I wish to emphasize that unless we can have an immediate resumption of construction and equipment our commercial community will pay treble the cost of the whole of them in their losses of a single season. The very moment that we reach anything like normal business we shall see a repetition of car shortage, followed by an increase in the cost of coal to the consumer from $1 to $3 a ton; we shall again see premiums of 20 cents a bushel for the use of cars for moving grain; we shall, in fact, see a shortage of commodities to the consumer; and we shall see glut upon the hands of the producers. We shall see factories filled with orders again closed for lack of cars; we shall see large intermittency in employment; and we shall see the usual profiteering in commodities due to a stricture between the producer and consumer.

There would be no difficulty whatever, by basing such losses on the experiences we have already had, to calculate a loss to the American people of a billion dollars for each one of these periodic transportation shortages.

Furthermore, there is nothing that is so irrecoverable a loss to the Nation as idle shops and idle men. To-day we have both. There is nothing that will so quickly start the springs of business and employment as an immediate resumption of construction and equipment of the railways. When business does resume we shall need all of our capacity for the production of consumable goods. We shall not only find it strangled for lack of transportation, but we shall find ourselves plunging into the manufacture of this very railway equipment and construction in competition with consumable goods for materials and labor. Herein lies the basic cause of destructive price inflation and booms, with all their waste and overexpansion. In times of depression we should prepare for the future, and by doing so we can cure the depression itself.

If we examine the fundamental reasons for failure to resume equipment, we will find them in the loss of confidence in railways as an investment and the competition of tax-free securities. We have passed the period of credit strain in this depression. Surplus capital is pouring by hundreds of millions monthly into tax-free securities and foreign loans and yet our railways are unable to finance the most moderate of construction programs. The confidence of the public in railway investments was at so low an ebb before the war that finance by the issue of common and preferred stocks had become impossible and railway expansion was living on bond issues. The confidence of and assurance and continuity in earning power to cover this burden of bonds has been even lowered since the war began because of the uncertainties of both rising and falling prices, of rising and falling wages, of rising and falling rates, preventing all regularity of earnings upon which an investor could be convinced, even if no other difficult factors entered into the problem. I see no occasion to go into the labyrinth of past railway finance, its propriety or lack of propriety, its foolishness or its skill. That generation is gone by. This commission approaches the financial problems of the railways upon the actual value, not upon their issues of securities, and I take it we are living for the future, not the past. We want transportation and we want it with the values of private initiative and clean public service.

Far from it being impossible for our railways again to return to a profitable footing, I believe it is possible to demonstrate that on an average they will become very profitable. If we assume that the reduction of prices and wage levels will settle at a plane no lower than 50 per cent over prewar, and if we assume that the present rates are to maintain, and if we assume restored traffic, then the earnings of our railways would exceed 15 per cent on the whole of the commission's tentative valuation. Surely there is room here for safety to investment as well as relief to the shipper.

But the circumstances being as they are, confidence being at a low ebb, we do not have the equipment necessary for our business. We are driving headlong for a setback to our whole commerce the very moment that we begin to get on our feet.

In these circumstances it seems to me vital that the railways as our greatest industry should propose a courageous program of broad-visioned betterments, and if necessary the Government should consider giving the use of its superior credit. It would not cost the taxpayer a cent to give the Government guaranty to equipment trusts upon the primary responsibility of the railways, the proceeds devoted entirely to improvement and equipment. This is no proposal to take money from the taxpayer. It is a proposal to save him from paying treble the amount of his guaranty in profiteering and losses. It will render a reduction of rates earlier, for unless something is done the improvements will have to be paid over years out of increased rates. Nor would we lose a cent upon the guaranty, for if American railways can not earn interest upon their borrowings let us throw up our hands and prepare for a second Russia.

A real program of construction would in its various ramifications give relief to five or six hundred thousand of our unemployed. It would enable even added numbers to increase their standard of living, and thus give increased market to the produce of our farmers. Our farmers who look to foreign markets for their surplus should stop to consider that our home consumption of meat decreased nearly 7 pounds per capita in 1921, mostly owing to unemployment, and that if this decrease could be overcome it would be worth more than a 35 per cent increase in exports.

We talk glibly of giving billions of credits to foreign countries to increase our farm exports. I wish to say, with all responsibility for the statement, that a billion dollars spent upon American railways will give more employment to our people, more advance to our industry, more assistance to our farmers, than twice that sum expended outside the frontiers of the United States, and there will be greater security for the investor.

Finally, I want to refer to the veritable witches' cauldron being fed constantly with hates distilled from the misdeeds of railway promoters in the past, from the conflicts between the railways and the farmers, between the railways and their workmen. From all the confusion that arises from it we destroy our railways and destroy ourselves. With this commission, on one hand, assuring honesty in finance, justice to the shipper and the railway investor, with the Railway Labor Board assuring justice to workers, and, above all, with a great spirit of public service in our generation of railway managers, it is time to call off the witches and take some vision of our national situation if we are to pull ourselves out of this depression.

RAILWAY RATES.

Before entering upon the question of readjustment of rates, I wish to set out some factors in the present economic situation that bear upon the entire question.

The following table shows a few commodities and service groups, compared to 1913 as 100:

Farm crops, at the farm	98
All animals, at the farm	92
Retail foodstuffs	150
Cotton, at the farm	136
Wool, at the farm	101
Retail clothing	313
Steel billets, Pittsburgh	113
Copper	86
Zinc	90
Pig iron, Pittsburgh	128
Bituminous coal, at the mine (estimated four districts)	160
Bituminous coal (retail various localities)	198-220
Yellow pine lumber (at the mill)	189
Douglas fir lumber (at the mill)	125
Lumber (retail) partly estimated	200
Cost of living, variously estimated from	162-180
Wage scales (approximate):
Farm labor	135
Textile industries	210
Steel industries	150
Railways	200
Metal trades	218
Building trades	190
Coal-mining scales	173

This table at once demonstrates:

(1) The inequality in prices and wages between different groups of commodities.

(2) The great increase in spread between "producer's" and "consumer's" goods.

(3) The lag in wage scales.

As the population engaged in the "deflated" producer's goods—agriculture and metals, wood, etc.—comprises one-half the total in number of the Nation, their power to buy the same ratio of consumer's goods has been reduced to less than 70 per cent of prewar, and is the consequent cause of a large part of the industrial and commercial unemployment and stagnation in our cities and our transportation.

I wish to especially call your attention to the indicated enormous increase in spread between primary producer's and ultimate consumer's goods. In considering it, we must bear in mind that when we use 100 for both consumer's and producer's goods of 1913, we have already included the spread between producer and consumer at that period. I therefore believe that the index numbers indicate an increase of 100 per cent in the actual spread. It is right here where the most of our economic difficulties lie to-day. Our increased cost of manufacture and distribution bears two relations to the rate question—first, that the increase of rates from 30 per cent to 100 per cent in different commodities are part of it, and are in turn part caused by it; and, second, the increased rates bear very unequally on different groups in the community.

If we search for the cause of this increase of spread we shall find therein a vast complex of increased taxation, increased wages, rents, and a dozen items, all reacting upon each other, and also expressing themselves in increased cost of operating the railways. For instance, the total increase in national, State, and municipal taxes since 1913 is approximately $5,640,000,000. At the present purchasing power of the dollar our total national productivity is probably somewhere around $50,000,000,000, of which over 10 per cent must now be devoted to increased taxes. This sum of money must be obtained either from the producer or the consumer, and in any event a considerable part of the taxes contributes to widen the spread. Because the increase in spread due to taxes necessitates a spiral of increased wages, rents, etc., and before its force expends itself, my own opinion is that possibly 20 points in the distorted index number flows from increased taxes.

The increase of railway rates since 1913 in Class I railways, 1921, is about $2,600,000,000, of which about $1,400,000,000 are due to wage increases and about $1,600,000,000 to tax increases. If our traffics were normal, the total increase of rates would be more like $3,500,000,000. These sums enter into this increase in the spread and carry with them a further trail of increased living costs and again a spiral of higher wages, rents, etc., in all other branches of manufacture and distribution.

There are other causes of the increased spread, some of which will be mitigated with time.

No one can say to what particular table-land of prices and wages we may settle upon, but it is a certainty that the exchange value of producer's goods will not again line up with consumer's goods unless we can decrease the costs and eliminate the wastes of our whole manufacturing and distribution trades. And unless we can secure their nearer proximity we will retard a return of employment and prosperity.

I wish to digress for just a moment from railway to agricultural subjects, to point out that the recent projects for fixing farm prices by law are apparently founded on the notion that by raising agricultural prices up to the levels of consumer's goods we can remedy the extreme hardship of our farmers. Even if it be possible to raise the prices, much less advantage would accrue to the farmer than anticipated. Unless the "spread" is decreased by actual savings, the costs of manufacture and distribution would be at least partially increased by higher prices of producer's goods. The spread is fundamentally due to increased cost of manufacture and distribution, not to the fall in producer's goods. The real remedy is an attack upon the causes of the spread and thereby to bring consumer's goods down to the producer's buying power.

It is a certainty that in order to decrease the spread railway rates must come down, and for rates to come down costs of railway operation in wages and prices of supplies must be reduced. Until this adjustment is secured the economic machine will continue to move slowly. We can not and should not expect wages to come back to prewar levels. Many of our wage scales were too low in prewar times. They can follow down step by step with the cost of living, but there are permanent charges in this spread, such as the taxes, which will hold the cost of living above prewar levels. We must gain our other reductions in the spread by increased national efficiency.

THE METHOD OF READJUSTING RATES.

The involved complex of transportation rates was obviously originally based on some relationship to the value of commodities, mitigated by competition. In other words, the old slogan of "what the traffic will bear" had some economic background. But this entire conception of rate making was destroyed by horizontal raises. We have rates clearly beyond what the traffic can bear.

The increases in railway rates during the past five years have fallen with extraordinary inequality on different commodities and different groups of people in the community. The country grew up, its industries were distributed under ratios of costs between different commodities, ratios between raw materials and finished goods, ratios between the farm and city. These have all been distorted by the horizontal raises. The increases in rates since 1914, for instance, have added probably less than 1 per cent to the price of cotton goods on the average haul, but it has added probably 60 per cent to the price of coal. The increased rates since 1914 have added nearly 100 per cent to the cost of assembling the materials for pig iron.

All this artificially forcing our industry to move toward their raw materials. This does not alone represent the starting of a new factory; it is a movement of the whole mechanism of the community, labor, homes, schools, railways, and what not—an enormous duplication of plant and loss of capital. We will ultimately have the rates readjusted, and then we will destroy the new industries created under it.

Of equal importance there is a new economic light on this distortion of rates evident under the stress of the last few years. That is, the better realization that some increase of rates come mostly off the producer while others are paid by the consumer. Increases in spread between producer and consumer do not fall equally upon each of them. In primary commodities where the price is fixed by international competition the increase or decrease in rates is a deduction from the producer. Take wheat, for instance, the point of competition with foreign produce lies at Liverpool. The net to the producer is Liverpool less transportation and other handling charges. Therefore increases of rates are a deduction from the farmer's price. The same thing applies to the producer in certain cases of domestic competition. Also where there is rapid turnover, as in manufacture, and consequent ability to reduce supply, the consumer pays the freight, as processes of productivity will not continue below profit point. In most manufactured commodities the consumer pays the freight, for production quickly shrinks when prices at the factory become unprofitable and the price to the buyer is the factory price plus the freight. For instance, in hides the farmer gets the international price less freight. On boots he pays the manufacturer's cost, profit, and freight.

It appears to me that with the paralysis induced by the increased spread we have to take a broader vision of what part of the community is suffering most and direct such concessions through the railway rates as can be given to that group, if we would better equalize the whole economic load.

During the past eight months the railways have made many thousand readjustments of local rates in endeavoring to heal local distortions, but I am convinced that the whole railway rate structure needs a most systematic overhaul in the light of these new economic forces that have been brought into play. We obviously must maintain the average rate that will support our transportation systems adequately, and such an overhauling of rates might quite well mean the advancement of rates in certain commodities in order that compensation can be given to others where there is undue duress.

If I were to discuss the rates charged to-day I should say at once that a decrease in passenger rates is not nearly so vital to the community as freight rates, for passenger rates do not enter into the "spread" in proportion to the relative volume of earnings. If I were examining the freight rates I should at once say that coal, metals, wood, and agricultural and other producers' goods should be reduced to the bottom before l. c. l. and class rates are touched.

I would be willing to go even further and say that I am convinced that even if the commission can not at the present moment justifiably reduce railway incomes a single dollar it is warranted in investigating the possibility of some relief to the more distressed commodities by a revision of some rates upward. There is perhaps no great field for changes in this direction, but it is worth inquiry. As mentioned above, an economic analysis of our industry will show that l. c. l. and class rates are far too low compared to the rates on primary commodities.

With the gradual return of the traffic to normal, with decreased operating costs, relief in rates will be available, and it would be an economic crime to apply such relief by horizontal reductions to all rates thus giving relief to higher priced goods and travel, when the vital mainspring of our economic life, our agriculture, and fuel and metals are choked.

THE PRESENT RATE SITUATION.

Determination of anything in the nature of permanent rate basis is in my own view impossible at the present time because:

The last five years of changing administration, irregular traffic, and wildly fluctuating wages and prices of materials give us but little reliable historical criteria upon which to base the future. We are in the midst of violent economic readjustments, of a profound industrial depression. No one can determine to what plane the reduction in operating costs will settle. No one can estimate the volume of traffics that are probable for any particular period ahead. It appears to me, therefore, that the commission will need to temporize the situation for some time and that its conclusion may well fall into three periods:

First. The immediate present.

Second. During the early period of decreasing costs and increasing efficiency and slowly recovering traffics.

Third. Normal operations.

THE IMMEDIATE PRESENT.

If we survey the results of the past year in the application of present costs and rates we find many railways failing to earn interest upon their borrowed capital; we find some others more fortunately situated who have earned dividends on their share capital. One or two exceptions of low bonded indebtedness have done extraordinarily well on their share capital. If we survey the situation by districts, in order that single instances do not mislead us, we will find that the whole of the class 1, southern roads, barely covered bond interest, while the most fortunate group, the western roads, show an earning of only 4 per cent in 1921 upon tentative valuation. Moreover, it is obvious that maintenance has been held to a low level and new equipment and extensions practically nil.

The present earnings in their perilous closeness to bond obligations seem to me to dispose of the question of immediate important rate relief if we do not wish widespread receivership and shocks to our whole commercial fabric.

I believe there are cases where earnings could be increased by lower rates. I know that it is contended that such opportunities do not exist, but no one can review the testimony given here during the past few weeks without concluding that the rates in special instances are stifling business. These directions are perhaps not important in the whole problem of rates, but I am convinced that lower rates would recover lost traffic, such as export coal, substitutions in building materials, gains in water competition, etc.

THE SECOND PERIOD—DURING 1922.

We must assume that those railway wages and supplies which are out of line will, at least in part, follow down to the levels of decreased cost of living; we must assume that the efficiency that is slowly emerging after the Government management will still further increase; we must assume that the volume of traffic will increase toward normal.

I have the feeling that the railways, being our greatest business, will agree that all these savings should be instantly devoted to relief in the rates on primary commodities in order that we should expedite the recovery that can only come through decreased spread between the producer's and consumer's goods.

I recognize that the uncertainty and slow reduction of rates in this fashion will itself delay business recovery, because of the uncertainty of business as to its future costs. If our railways were in position to stand the temporary shock, it would be infinitely better to drop the rates on primary commodities to-morrow—our business recovery would come faster. But we can not ask the impossible.

THIRD.

If we look further to normal times, we could make a rough calculation that present wages and costs at, say, 50 per cent above pre-war would show that the railways can earn somewhere around a billion five hundred million dollars in excess of the 6 per cent minimum upon tentative valuation. As I have stated, relief is first more critically needed in the rates on primary commodities.

Some estimates given to me indicate that approximately 35 or 40 per cent of revenues are involved in the groups more urgently needing relief. I think it will also bear calculation that in the income assumed above that primary commodities can eventually be reduced to pre-war rates and still place earnings upon a basis that will inspire such confidence in investors as will secure the free flow of investment capital into construction. It is not to be expected that capital for these purposes will be available at the rate that does not exceed the tax-free securities at least 2 per cent to 3 per cent.

EFFICIENCY OF RAILWAYS.

A great deal has been said about the inefficiency of our railway system. I do not sympathize with these statements. Comparison with foreign railways of the fundamental criteria of per ton-mile costs, train loading, etc., in the light of our cost of living will demonstrate that our railways are of higher standards, better in methods than others, and are growing in efficiency.

The consolidation of our railways into larger systems has been contemplated in our legislatures for some years past as a gain in efficiency. Its value can be overestimated; it is not a panacea for all trouble. It does give hope, however, of economy in further efficiency from more complete utilization of rolling stocks and terminals, some small degree of saving in overhead, saving in current inventories, but its probably great saving that would be decreased cost of proper finance, increased financial stability, and fuller independence from the supply companies.

It is probably unnecessary to refer to the question of Government ownership. No one with a week's observation of government railways abroad, or with Government operation of industry in the United States, will contend that our railways could ever be operated as intelligently or as efficiently by the Government as through the initiative of private individuals. Moreover, the welfare of its multitude of workers will be far worse under Government operation.

We are struggling with the great problem of maintaining public control of monopoly, at the same time maintaining the initiative of private enterprise. I believe that we are steadily progressing to solution.

Great social and economic problems find their solution slowly and by a process of trial and error. We have tried unregulated monopoly and have tried Government operation and found the error in them. We still have much to solve if we are to maintain our transportation. Much of this solution depends upon the successful initiative of the railways themselves, and much of the shaping of these matters lies fortunately in your able hands.

PRIORITY RIGHTS AND EXEMPTIONS FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9633) to extend the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes, and of the act of September 29, 1919, to those discharged from the military or naval service of the United States and subsequently awarded compensation or treated for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, under existing law the soldiers of the late war holding an honorable discharge have the privilege of having their service while confined in hospitals or while incapacitated by reason of wounds received in the service considered as commutation under the homestead law.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is stating it broadly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now you seek to get a new classification as to what are described as regularly discharged from such service. Heretofore the privilege has been limited to those having an honorable discharge. What does the new phraseology "regularly discharged from the service" include in addition to honorably discharged soldiers?

Mr. SINNOTT. This would include honorably discharged soldiers.

Mr. STAFFORD. And who else?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the present law they have that privilege to-day.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman from Wisconsin misunderstands the law. Under the present law soldiers honorably discharged on account of disabilities in the line of duty are given credit for the term of their enlistment in proving up on the homestead. However, they must reside for at least a year on the homestead. That credit is only given to those who are discharged on account of disabilities incurred in the line of duty. The soldiers who are not discharged on account of disabilities incurred in the line of duty but who afterwards are shown to have a disability incurred in the line of duty are not given that credit, and this is merely to extend the credit under section 2305 as amended by the act of February 5, 1919, to both classes. That is the purpose of the first section in the bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The men who are discharged, but without a surgeon's certificate of disability, and who have since become disabled and that disability can be traced to service, would have the same privilege under this act as if given a surgeon's certificate at the time of discharge.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman has correctly stated it, more so than I have.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Now, the words "extended to those regularly discharged from such service," as I understand, would take in any discharge which was regular; it might take a discharge from a draft or what is called a blue discharge, or an honorable discharge, and I do not know but what they would take in a court-martial discharge.

Mr. MANN. Could such a person receive compensation?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; the soldier with a dishonorable discharge is not entitled to compensation.

Mr. MANN. If the Government discharges a man and then under the law pays him compensation for wounds received or disabilities incurred in service, why should not they give him the same right they give others?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not know but that the gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. MANN. That is all there is to it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It seemed to me that the expression "regularly discharged" is rather novel and might open up an avenue for others to come in.

Mr. SINNOTT. But it is tied in with the award of compensation.

Mr. MANN. Do these men have to reside on the land at all?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; they have to reside on the land a year before they can prove up.

Mr. MANN. Is not the real purpose of a bill of this kind to permit these service men to file claims where land is opened and then sell out without any pretense of cultivating the land?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; not at all. It is to take care of those who are injured and who were not discharged on account of the injury, where it afterwards developed that the injuries were incurred in line of duty.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the western country, where the land is, is much more interested in it than any other place?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. May I not also suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that there are a number of cases where these soldiers had filed on the land prior to their having entered the Army, but the disability incurred in some cases did not develop until after their discharge; at least it was not connected with the service until after their discharge.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are receiving compensation by reason of that disability?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The idea is to cover the special case of those where the injury developed after their discharge from the service?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because under existing law they have all those privileges to-day if the injury was incurred during the service.

Mr. COLTON. That is it.

Mr. SINNOTT. The second section of the bill provides for leave of absence for ex-service men who were furnished treatment by the Government for wounds received or disability incurred during the service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2305, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of February 25, 1919 (40 Stats., p. 1161), so far as applicable to those discharged from the military or naval service because of wounds received or disability incurred therein, be, and the same are hereby, extended to those regularly discharged from such service and subsequently awarded compensation by the Government for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of September 29, 1919 (41 Stats., p. 288), entitled "An act to authorize absence by homestead settlers and entrymen, and for other purposes," be, and they are hereby, extended to those who, after discharge from the military or naval service of the United States, are furnished treatment by the Government for wounds received or disability incurred in line of duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS AT TENDERFOOT LAKE, WIS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2468) providing for the sale and disposal of public lands within the area heretofore surveyed as Tenderfoot Lake, State of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us know what this does.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this bill is to make provision for the disposal of some lands supposed to be public lands near Tenderfoot Lake, in the State of Wisconsin. When the survey was made, some 50 or 60 years ago, it was erroneous, and the meander line of the lake and the shore line of the lake did not coincide. That leaves some land between the meander line and the shore line. People who have owned the land and who thought they owned the land up to the shore line of the lake have found out their land does not reach there. The department has recommended the adoption of this bill, having heretofore some two or three years ago ordered a survey to be made to determine just what public lands there actually are. This bill gives a preference right to the owners of the adjacent lands to purchase whatever lands may be found to exist there at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. MANN. Are these lands now worth $150 or $200 an acre?

Mr. BURTNESS. They adjoin swamp land and are not supposed to be very valuable. Just what they are worth I can not say. The number of acres that could be purchased by each of the owners interested is relatively small. It would give to the adjoining owners access to the lake itself.

Mr. MANN. Is this lake a summer resort?

Mr. BURTNESS. One of the owners has some sort of a summer resort placed there nearby. I do not know whether you would call it a summer resort within the gentleman's meaning of the term or not. That would probably depend upon how much enjoyment the people who go there get from it.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it then, when this land was entered the Government had surveyed it and established meander lines which were not correct?

Mr. BURTNESS. That is it exactly.

Mr. MANN. And the people who entered the property supposed that they were entering land which extended to the shore of the lake. It subsequently developed that their lands, as found by the meander lines, did not extend to the lake. I had a case like that once in Florida, and was told that it was conclusively presumed that the land did extend to the shore of the lake, and the fact that there were pine trees on it 100 years old did not make any difference in the conclusive presumption.

Mr. BURTNESS. Apparently the gentleman in the Land Office who told the gentleman from Illinois that was unfamiliar with the decisions of the courts in the matter.

Mr. MANN. It was the head of the Land Office who told me that, after thorough investigation.

Mr. BURTNESS. At any rate that statement would be contrary to the decisions as they are set out in the opinions of the department at the present time. That is where the original survey was in fact erroneous.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. BURTNESS. The decisions are included in the report.

Mr. MANN. I am not saying that they were right then or are right now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in whose possession is this land between the meander line and the water?

Mr. BURTNESS. In the possession of the people who supposed they owned it.

Mr. STEENERSON. And it has been for how many years?

Mr. BURTNESS. Forty or more, I take it; from the time the land was first entered.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Reserving the right to object, have these men who own the adjacent land all of the land their deeds call for?

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman is probably familiar with the fact that a patent does not necessarily determine just what the acreage is in land they get from the Government.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They usually have the number of acres set out, do they not?

Mr. BURTNESS. Very often they do, but in many cases they may be either long or short.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Frequently there is an excess, but if these men do not get this lake-side land have they all of the land that their patents call for?

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not know as to that. As the gentleman says, sometimes there is an excess above the figures that may be given in the patent, and just as often there is not an excess but a shortage. There are but a few acres in this case. The principal purpose of the bill is to allow these people to purchase this land so that they may have access to the water, which they have had all of these years but without title thereto.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The thought I had in mind was this, that if these men had the land that the title calls for does the gentleman think we ought to sell them surplus land at less than its actual value?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had bought a piece of land from the Government which he and the Government thought extended to the shores of the lake, which right he considered valuable, he would want to get title if he found 3 or 4 feet between him and the lake.

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, this bill does not give the land to these people, but gives them a preference right to purchase it. It is practically of but small value to anybody else except these owners unless somebody wanted to go in there through spite.

Mr. JONES of Texas. How many acres are there?

Mr. BURTNESS. There is approximately—

Mr. JONES of Texas. If it is a narrow strip, of course that would be entirely correct, but if there are several sections in there it seems to me like we are giving considerable advantage by letting them get it at the price they do. If I read the bill correctly, there are several sections.

Mr. BURTNESS. This strip, I understand, extends around the entire lake, and the total acreage of it is approximately 300 acres. The lake is a lake of considerable size. It has several surveyed islands within its limits, so that the gentleman can readily understand the size of it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is a very narrow strip?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; comparatively so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on the survey of any public lands found to exist within the area heretofore surveyed as Tenderfoot Lake, in sections 7, 8, 17, and 18; township 43 north, range 8 east, fourth principal meridian, in the State of Wisconsin, the owners of adjacent lands shall have a preference right to purchase such lands so surveyed for a period of 60 days after the filing of the official plats of such surveys, at $1.25 per acre: Provided, That such privilege shall not extend to any lands so surveyed inuring to the State of Wisconsin under the act of September 28, 1850 (9th Stat., p. 519): Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall have the effect of defeating the rights of any other person or persons which may have attached to such lands or any part thereof.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations to carry this act into effect.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTNESS a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 237 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1831) to amend section 237 of the Judicial Code.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this is a rather important bill and we should have some explanation. When this bill was on the calendar three weeks ago I was called out of the Chamber to a committee hearing and did not hear the explanation by the gentleman from Iowa or any reasons why the gentleman from Tennessee objected then to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BOIES. The gentleman from Tennessee and I have looked up the law in regard to the point he had in mind when he objected on the last unanimous-consent day, and he assures me that he has no objection to interpose at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the real purpose to be sought by this legislation?

Mr. BOIES. When a person contracts in keeping with the law then in force, as declared by the supreme court of the State, he thus acquires a property interest that can not be taken away by a subsequent reversal by the supreme court of that State of its former holding. However, the supreme court of a State does sometimes reverse its former holdings without declaring the fact, and in such case, where vested property rights are affected adversely, the Supreme Court of the United States will right the wrong, if the question is properly presented. In order to have review by the Supreme Court of the United States the question must have been first claimed or the right asserted in the State court. This bill affords the remedy, and by making claim in a petition for rehearing in the State supreme court the Supreme Court of the United States will entertain a writ of error and correct any errors of the State court.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any estimate as to the number of cases that would be submitted to the Supreme Court when such provision as this has been the law during the last 10 or 20 years?

Mr. BOIES. I do not suppose there would be a case once in five years.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOIES. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Has the gentleman from Iowa any particular case in mind?

Mr. BOIES. No, sir. The question arose and we went to Chief Justice Taft to see if there was any objection on the part of the Supreme Court judges, and learned that there was none.

Mr. LONDON. At whose request was this legislation suggested?

Mr. BOIES. The legislation was inaugurated in the Senate. The bill was introduced by Senator CUMMINS, of my State, passed the Judiciary Committee there, passed the Senate, and has been reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House after consultation with members of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from New York has the same curiosity that I have about this as to the nature of the proposition. I am informed there was a case in the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa where this provision might have been desirable under certain circumstances. That case was disposed of and this will not apply to it; but one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Iowa who took part in the decision of that case considered it important enough afterwards, when he was no longer a judge of the supreme court, to call attention to it, so it is not intended to apply to any particular case.

Mr. LONDON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If the gentleman will yield, I am not entirely clear as to what the effect of this bill will be. As I understand it, the purpose of the proposed amendment is to permit an appeal to the United States Supreme Court from the decision of a State court reversing its former interpretation of a law under which contracts have been made in reliance upon such earlier decisions.

Mr. BOIES. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Afterwards the Supreme Court takes a different view of the law and reverses itself?

Mr. BOIES. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Ordinarily the Supreme Court would say that the construction given has been so long in force as to have become a rule of property.

Mr. BOIES. It simply gives the party against whom the decision is rendered the opportunity of a review as to whether or not there is a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I understand that well enough; but what I am trying to get at is, would the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States contemplated here have the effect of determining the question of whether or not the first ruling of the court, owing to the fact that it had been in existence for so long a time that it might be deemed to have created a rule of property and therefore any attempt to change the ruling would contravene the Constitution of the United States, or would it simply go to the question of whether the interpretation was itself erroneous?

Mr. BOIES. Not the interpretation. The Supreme Court of the United States would not question the interpretation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to the consideration of this bill when called up last week because the report was not exactly clear to my mind. Since then I have taken occasion to look into it, and I think the bill is all right and should be passed. I just merely wish to make that statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1831) to amend section 237 of the Judicial Code.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 237 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

"In any suit involving the validity of a contract wherein it is claimed that a change in the rule of law or construction of statutes by the highest court of a State applicable to such contract would be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, the Supreme Court shall, upon writ of error, reexamine, reverse, or affirm the final judgment of the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, if said claim is made in said court at any time before said final judgment is entered and if the decision is against the claim so made."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOIES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELINQUISHING TITLE TO LANDS IN ALABAMA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2124) to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands contained within sections 17 and 20, township 3 south, range 1 west, St. Stephens meridian, Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2124) to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands contained within sections 17 and 20, township 3 south, range 1 west, St. Stephens meridian, Alabama.

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States of America hereby forever relinquishes, releases, and quitclaims all right, title, and interest in and to all the lands now held under claim or color of title by individual or private ownership or municipal ownership and situated in the State of Alabama within the boundaries of sections 17 and 20, township 3 south, range 1 west, St. Stephens meridian, Alabama, whether or not patents issued therefor by the United States would be construed to include all the lands included within the boundaries of said sections.

The true intent of this act is hereby declared to be to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said lands under the laws of Alabama, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of said interest, title, and estate of the said United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAKE GEORGE, YAZOO COUNTY, MISS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1162) declaring Lake George, Yazoo County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. COLLIER. I wish the gentleman would withhold his objection until I can make a brief statement.

This bill requires the nonnavigability of Lake George. It is a lake about 15 or 16 miles long, and I understand during the greater part of the year near the mouth the water is anywhere from 8 or 10 or 12 inches deep. The lake has never had any commerce on it going from a place in one State to a place in another State. I also understand that practically no boats have ever sailed up and down the lake except small gasoline boats, in extreme high water. These boats were not running on schedules but simply taking special trips as occasion demanded and high water would permit. You will find from the report made by the engineers where they found 18 feet of water at one time. I understand that in the lake water may be deep enough to float a steamboat and at the same time a skiff could hardly enter the lake at its mouth, which is the only entrance. I have a number of pictures accompanied with affidavits, made on the 21st of October last, showing cattle feeding over part of that place where they doubtless found that 18 feet of water. If they had gone at that time to the right or left for a number of miles, during that overflow I have little doubt they would have found 6, or 8, or 12 feet of water.

Mr. MANN. It says it has a minimum depth of 15 feet.

Mr. COLLIER. I would like to show the gentleman from Illinois the photograph.

Mr. MANN. I would not undertake to pass upon a photograph of that kind. If the War Department say that they have found 18.4 feet of water there, I assume it is true. If the situation is changed, then you should get a further report from the War Department.

Mr. COLLIER. The time the War Department reported the 18 feet of water was in December, 1920, when I suppose they had a big overflow in that section of the country. I hold up here a picture, sworn to, that was taken on the 21st day of October last, and the affidavit says in less than 100 yards of the entrance to this lake there is less than 12 inches of water. Now, the reason for declaring this nonnavigable is because the people living in that section of the country raise crops nearly every year in the bed of this lake. They are more interested in a road than in an occasional gasoline boat going up into that lake. That county has spent a great deal of money recently in the building of roads, and they want to build some bridges across this lake.

Mr. MANN. They have built a bridge.

Mr. COLLIER. They have one bridge there.

Mr. MANN. Of course, without getting authority. Do they want to build more?

Mr. COLLIER. I understand they do.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the report to indicate that. They have built a bridge without getting the authority required by law. If that bridge was to be interfered with, I think there would be very strong reason for this bill, perhaps. The War Department says that the bridge will not be interfered with in any way whatever.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. COLLIER. I have statements from practically all the landowners who own the bed of the lake, and they are all more interested in building bridges and good roads than they are in an occasional gasoline launch when high water is there going up or down the stream. Again, I am informed by people who live there that during the high-water stage the water is so high on the approaches to that bridge that has already been built there that gasoline boats could go around that bridge. But the navigability of this stream occurs only in extremely high water.

Mr. MANN. Now, here is a piece of water which at one time, a year ago, had considerable depth to it. The local authorities have built a bridge which, I judge, interferes with the moving down the stream of timber owned by a local mill concern, which has made protest against the bridge.

A hearing has been had upon that matter. The bridge having been built without obtaining authority, as required by law, now the War Department say, notwithstanding that fact, that they do not propose to interfere with this bridge, and I suppose they have that authority. But it may be, for anything that we can see, that the people who are using this lake to float down lumber are entitled to some rights there. It may be quite possible to float down logs there or lumber at certain seasons of the year without interfering with anybody. I do not see what the purpose of this bill is, unless it is the fear of these bridge authorities that the Government will interfere with the bridge.

Mr. COLLIER. The purpose of this bill is to get rid of the annoyances of the Federal Government on the lake, where the Federal Government has never spent a dollar and has never been asked to spend a dollar, and never in the past was expected to spend a dollar, and never will be expected in the future to spend a dollar; to have them stop all kinds of suggestions as to putting a draw in little bridges that are needed where the expense of a draw is not justified.

This is in a section of the country where some years ago objection to this bill might have been valid, because then there were no railroads, but now there are railroads on both sides of this lake, which is nothing more nor less than a very large bayou; which, I understand, runs one way when the water is low and another way when the water is high, and is only navigable when a great deal of the surrounding country upon which crops are produced is navigable. On the bed of this lake hay crops and other crops are harvested, and the citizens own that land to the middle of the lake. The reason why they built the bridge without consulting authorities was perhaps because they had no idea, until complaint was made, that that stream was ever considered a navigable stream. In fact, I have never been able to find out what constitutes a navigable stream. I have inquired concerning it, but I have never found any proof of it. It has been asserted that a navigable stream is one for which an appropriation has been made. But I do not believe that determines it.

Mr. MANN. We can not determine what is a navigable stream except from the standpoint of legislation. That is left for the courts in the end to determine. But here is the report of the engineers, which says:

As the waterway in question is evidently a navigable water of the United States which may at some future day usefully serve commerce, it is my view that the proposed legislation is unnecessary, and that, from the standpoint of public interests, the passage of the bill for such a purpose and under such circumstances would be a harmful precedent and should be opposed.

Now, in the light of that and from the statement of the War Department that the bridge that has been built is not to be interfered with, I can not see why gentlemen persist in asking for the passage of this bill.

Mr. COLLIER. In case of building bridges in the future they feel that the present commerce is worth more to them than some indefinite future commerce, and when the Federal Government sends engineers, as it occasionally does, to pass on a $5,000 or $6,000 or $15,000 bridge in a sparsely settled community, and they want to put in a draw that will cost more than the bridge itself, it just means that so far as the bridge is concerned it is not going to be built.

Mr. MANN. If that were the situation I would be with the gentleman. I do not believe there is any occasion for constructing an expensive draw, or any draw, in a bridge there. But that is not the case here presented. If that case should arise I would be happy to join with the gentleman in eliminating any draw provision.

Mr. COLLIER. My information is that they wish to build several bridges lower down.

Mr. MANN. There is no provision requiring a draw in these bridges.

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; but each one of these bridges will have to come up for review by the War Department. They change engineers every few months or so at Vicksburg. We do not know what their future decision will be. To call this stream a "navigable stream" is ridiculous. It is a stream that for half of the year you can jump across a great part of it.

Mr. MANN. There have been navigable streams where the principal object was to construct a roadway along them at the proper season.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

By unanimous consent, Mr. COLLIER was granted leave to extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WENATCHEE NATIONAL FOREST, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6750) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Wenatchee National Forest, State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what is the policy of the Government in taking tracts of land outside of present boundaries and enlarging forest reserves by paying with the timber that may exist on other lands or parts of the reserve? I notice from the report that it is the purpose to take in 218,000 acres outside of the present reserve, and that the present reserve comprises only something like 70,000 acres. I wished to direct an inquiry of the gentleman from California when the prior bill was under discussion as to what the purpose and policy are.

Mr. WEBSTER. The purpose is for reforestation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know; but I want to get from the gentleman the reason for expanding the forest reserves, increasing their acreage fourfold, and permitting the department to keep on purchasing additional land, because that is what we are doing, virtually; or if not purchasing it with like land, then with timber.

What is the idea of the Forest Service in enlarging the forest reserves in that way? Here the report shows, if I am not mistaken, that the present area of the forest reserve here is something like 70,000 acres. It is proposed to take in 218,000 acres outside of the present boundaries, making a total area of 288,000 acres, and we are going to buy the additional acreage with lumber. What is the policy?

Mr. WEBSTER. I should be glad to have the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands define the policy of his committee in that respect. I do not feel authorized to do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. For instance, on the prior bill, relating to Shasta, it was proposed to take in 500,000 additional acres in the reserve, to purchase it, as I say, by the Government, either by exchange of lands or by timber that is now growing on the land. What is the limit beyond which the Forest Service may not go in expanding the forest reserves, so that they will not include everything in the State?

Mr. SINNOTT. They are limited by the lands described in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, their purpose is to take into the forest the lands that adjoin the forest, some of them cut over, some of them containing timber, the cut-over lands being all of potential forest value. The Government may obtain them very cheaply, and they will grow another crop of timber. Before these forest reserves were created a great deal of this land went into private ownership, so when the Government created the forest reserve it had to draw its lines so as not to include lands in private ownership. Their purpose is to straighten out the lines of the forests, consolidating the land in Government ownership.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who determines, for instance, in the Shasta proposed extension, or in this proposed extension, the demarcation of the outside lines of the acreage that is going to be included ultimately in the forest reserve?

Mr. SINNOTT. The Forest Service will determine that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. Some person initiates it. Who determines the extent of the territory covered by these various bills? The bills do not originate with the Forest Service.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman mean the descriptions here?

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the outside or exterior lines.

Mr. SINNOTT. The Forest Service determines that.

Mr. MANN. This bill refers only to excepted lands within the present exterior limits of the forest.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not so understand it. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The report shows that it is not limited to those lands. As far as those lands are concerned, there are only 77,000 acres, and section 2 extends to lands outside involving an acreage of 218,000 acres.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it specifies those.

Mr. WEBSTER. It specifies those.

Mr. STAFFORD. It specifies those, but I am trying to find out who was the originator of the idea as to the extent to which these borders may be enlarged.

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not know, as to this particular bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to some of these other bills?

Mr. SINNOTT. The Forest Service inaugurates the matter, and sometimes the private owners in conjunction with the Forest Service. It is for their mutual benefit.

Mr. WEBSTER. The gentleman will understand that the question how it is to be extended is provided for in this bill, and Congress determines it.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this bill did not originate in the Forest Service.

Mr. WEBSTER. It goes to the Forest Service for their approval. They check over the descriptions, and they have done so in this case.

Mr. MANN. I think all these bills originate with somebody in the Forest Service, practically.

Mr. WEBSTER. Surely.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the information I desired to get. I question the policy of purchasing additional lands merely for the purpose of increasing the size of the forest reserves in the States.

Mr. WEBSTER. This is not for that purpose. This involves a policy defined by the Forest Service itself, and these purchases are approved by the Forest Service, every one of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. The reservation is withdrawn. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the exterior boundaries of the Wenatchee National Forest if, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and if the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands or timber to be exchanged are of approximately equal value, and in exchange therefor may issue patent for not to exceed an equal value of any national forest land within the State of Washington, or the Secretary of Agriculture may give the right to cut and remove an equal value of timber from any national forest in the same State, the values in both cases to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and acceptable to the owner or owners as fair compensation, considering any reservations which either the grantor or the Government may make of timber, minerals, or easements. Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the Wenatchee National Forest.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to section 1, which has just been read. By mistake the printed bill does not contain all of the committee amendments in section 1. I move to strike out the word "if" in line 8.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SINNOTT: Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "if."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, in line 9, on page 1, and line 1, on page 2, I move to strike out the words "and the lands or timber to be exchanged are of approximately equal value."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, let the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SINNOTT: On page 1, line 9, and on page 2, line 1, after the word "thereby" strike out the words "and the lands or timber to be exchanged are of approximately equal value."

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of the gentleman in offering that amendment?

Mr. SINNOTT. That language is not necessary. It is a repetition. It is already in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report states that it is a repetition, but will the gentleman point out where?

Mr. SINNOTT. In line 5, on page 2.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That any lands within the following-described areas not already within the Wenatchee National Forest, found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or for the protection of stream flow, shall be subject to the provisions of this act and may, upon conveyance to the United States, or if a part of the public domain, be included within and made part of the Wenatchee National Forest by proclamation of the President, namely: Township 20 north, range 13 east, west half of township and sections 1, 3, 10, south half of 14, 15, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 34, 35, and 36; township 20 north, range 14 east, sections 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, south half of section 29, south half of section 30, sections 31, 32, and 33; township 20 north, range 15 east, sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15; township 21 north, range 15 east, sections 12, 13, 14, 15, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, north half of 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34; township 20 north, range 16 east, sections 1, 2, 3, 7, south half of section 8, north half of sections 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, north half of section 22; township 21 north, range 16 east, sections 4, 7, 9, 10, 15, 18, 19, east half of section 21, 22, 27, east half of section 28, 30, east half of section 33, and 34; township 20 north, range 17 east, sections 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, north half of section 18, 25, 26, 35, and 36; township 23 north, range 18 east, sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 35, and 36; township 24 north, range 18 east, sections 30, 31, 33, and south half of section 34; township 20 north, range 19 east; township 22 north, range 19 east, sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and south half of township; township 23 north, range 19 east, sections 19, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35; township 25 north, range 19 east; township 26 north, range 19 east; township 27 north, range 19 east; township 20 north, range 20 east; township 21 north, range 20 east, sections 6, 7, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36; township 25 north, range 20 east, sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21; township 26 north, range 20 east, sections 1 to 16, inclusive, 21 to 27, inclusive, 30, 31, 32, 35, and 36; township 27 north, range 20 east; all Willamette principal meridian.

The following committee amendments were read:

3. On page 2, lines 6, 7, and 8, change the comma following the word "compensation" to a period and strike out these words following immediately thereafter: "considering any reservations which either the grantor or the Government may make of timber, mineral, or easements" and the period.

4. On page 2, line 23, change the word "may" to "shall."

5. On page 2, line 23, after the word "upon," insert the words "the acceptance of the."

6. Page 2, line 24, after the words "United States" and before the comma following them, insert the words "become a part of the said national forest."

7. On page 2, line 25, strike out the comma after the word "domain" and insert in lieu thereof the words "may upon the concurring recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS HEADWATERS OF MOBILE BAY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2994) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.," approved October 5, 1917.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the report on this bill is so lengthy [laughter]—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Quite to the contrary.

Mr. MANN. It is worse than that. [Laughter.] I took the trouble to read the report made by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, and it is shorter than any report I ever saw of that character. It seems that the bill passed the Senate without any report, and I suppose it will pass the House without any report.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to say that this is the same perfunctory report that is made every day on all of these bridge bills?

Mr. MANN. I do not think I ever saw one as short as this report.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The reports are prepared by the clerk.

Mr. MANN. I was a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for many years, and I always prepared my own reports. I think it would be a very good thing if Members of this House, who are paid $7,500 to be legislators, were to understand that it was their business when making a report to make the reports instead of leaving it to a clerk who gets $2,500 a year.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The suggestion which the gentleman from Illinois makes is an excellent one. I would heartily devote much of my time to writing reports on these little, trifling bills if I did not have something more important to do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may have something more important, but I think it is important for a man in this connection to attend to the work for which he is selected, and when appointed on a committee to attend to the committee work instead of attending to things that may be more important to him but not to the country.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will endeavor to explain to the gentleman if he wishes what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire any information. I remember the original bill, and I have got hold of the report on the original bill, and doubtless can give the gentleman more information than the gentleman has himself.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will cheerfully give way to let the gentleman give that information to the House. I confess that I do not know all about the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Alabama state what he does know about it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. This bill is to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across a portion of the mouth of Mobile River as a part of the construction of a line of railroad from Pensacola to Mobile. The original bill was passed in 1917. Due to the financial condition of the country, the parties have not been able to finance the enterprise up to this time. They want a little more time. The citizens in that locality and along the line of the railroad are anxious that it shall be built. It will not interfere with navigation on the river in the slightest. There is no opposition from any source that I know of. The bill was referred to the War Department and no objection expressed. The grantee of the license is the Gulf Ports Terminal Railroad Co., a corporation existing under the laws of Florida. The bridge will not be in any sense an obstruction to navigation. In point of fact, it does not touch the navigable portion of Mobile River.

Mr. WALSH. Are these parties financially able to begin the construction of this bridge within a year and complete it within three years?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is a detail that I am not able to give, but I assume that they are from the representations that have been made.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think we ought to reenact this provision unless we have some assurance that the parties will build it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The parties say that they do intend to begin it and complete it within the time.

Mr. WALSH. Complete it within the three years?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly; otherwise it would be useless to seek the extension.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says that this has been referred to the War Department?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It has. Let me say that if we required all the people who want to build bridges to have the cash for construction in hand before making application for permission to do so Congress would grant very few licenses to build bridges.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved October 5, 1917, authorizing the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge or bridges and trestles over and across the navigable channels of the mouth of Mobile River from Bay Port, in township 4 south, range 2 east, on the east shore of the waters of Mobile Bay, in Baldwin County, Ala., on a direct line, to a point on Blakely Island, in Mobile County, on the east shore of Mobile River, opposite the municipal docks of the city of Mobile, Ala., at a point or points suitable to the interests of navigation, be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge or bridges and trestles herein authorized be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HAWAII NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 8690, to add a certain tract of land on the Island of Hawaii to the Hawaii National Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land on the island of Hawaii, in the Territory of Hawaii, set aside for park purposes on the 29th day of October, 1920, by executive order No. 81 of the governor of the Territory of Hawaii, and hereinafter described, is hereby added to and made a part of the Hawaii National Park. Said tract of land is described as follows, to wit:

All that tract of land comprising a portion of the Kau Desert, Kapapala, in the district of Kau, on the island of Hawaii, containing 43,400 acres, more or less, bounded as follows:

Beginning at a galvanized-iron nail driven into the pahoehoe at the northeast corner of this tract of land, at a place called Pali-lele-o-Kalihipaa, and on the boundary between the lands of Kapapala and Keauhou, the coordinates of said point of beginning referred to Government survey trigonometrical station Uwekahuna, being 26,010.4 feet south and 9,932.4 feet east, as shown on Government survey registered map No. 2388 and running by true azimuths: First, 350 degrees 43 minutes, 30,023 feet along the land of Kapapala to a point at seacoast; second, thence in a west and southwesterly direction along the seacoast to a station on a large flat stone, at a place called Na-Puu-o-na-Elemakule, at the seacoast boundary point of the lands of Kapapala and Kaalaala, the direct azimuth and distance being 60 degrees 34 minutes 30 seconds, 32,043 feet; third, 89 degrees 27 minutes 30 seconds, 30,690 feet along the land of Kaalaala to the main 1868 lava crack, said point being by true azimuth and distance 296 degrees 27 minutes 30 seconds, 2,100 feet from Government survey trigonometrical station Puu Naahaia; fourth, thence up along the main 1868 lava crack, along the Kapapala pastoral lands to a small outbreak of lava from the 1868 lava crack, opposite the Halfway House, the direct azimuth and distance being 198 degrees, 32,550 feet; fifth, 230 degrees 25 minutes, 27,615 feet along the Kapapala pastoral lands to the west boundary of the Kilauea section, Hawaii National Park; sixth, 346 degrees 20 minutes, 6,742 feet along said west boundary to a small cone; seventh, 282 degrees 50 minutes, 19,150 feet along the south boundary of said Kilauea section, Hawaii National Park; eighth, 231 degrees 50 minutes 30 seconds, 5,430 feet along said south boundary to the point of beginning.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act of August 1, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii"; the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a national park service, and for other purposes," and all acts supplementary to and amendatory of said acts are made applicable to and extended over the lands hereby added to the park: Provided, That the provisions of the act of June 10, 1920, entitled "An act to create a Federal power commission, to provide for the improvement of navigation, the development of water power, the use of the public lands in relation thereto, and to repeal section 18 of the river and harbor appropriation act, approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes," shall not apply to or extend over such lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would call the attention of the author of the bill to the fact that, on line 13, page 2, the word "first" is misspelled, the "s" having been omitted.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the word be correctly spelled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7452) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt-Sequoia National Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the author of the bill to page 8 of the bill and the committee amendment appearing thereon, reading as follows:

Provided, That no permit, license, lease, or authorization for dams, conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, or other works for storage or carriage of water, or for the development, transmission, or utilization of power within the limits of said park as herein constituted, shall be granted or made without specific authority of Congress.

Ought that not to be further amended by adding to it a proviso as follows:

Nor shall any dam be so constructed outside of said park as to dam up any streams flowing therefrom in such manner as to cause flooding of any part of said park.

Mr. BARBOUR. You could not do that. The physical conditions out there are such that a dam built outside would not flood the area inside the park.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. If those are the physical conditions, I have no objection to the proviso as it stands, but otherwise I think it should be amended.

Mr. BARBOUR. The streams in that particular section are precipitous. They run down rapidly to the valleys and the lower hills.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, whose idea was it to stick a general law relating to all parks in this bill, which relates only to Sequoia National Park?

Mr. BARBOUR. The general law applies to parks existing at the time the law was passed. The gentleman refers to the so-called Jones-Esch Act?

Mr. MANN. I refer to section 5, which proposes to repeal a general provision of law relating to all parks in a bill that relates to a particular park. Section 5 provides as follows:

SEC. 5. That the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stats., p. 618), so far as the same applies to the use or employment of United States troops in any national park is hereby repealed.

What place has that in this bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will tell the gentleman why that was put in. There has been a great deal of trouble with troops in national parks.

Mr. MANN. Why does that make it pertinent to this bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. The park service has advised me that it is not using troops any more, and does not intend to use them in the parks.

Mr. MANN. What has that to do with the question that I am asking? Why endeavor to stick in a bill relating to a particular park a provision relating to all parks?

Mr. BARBOUR. It makes absolutely no difference whether it is in there or not.

Mr. MANN. It makes a difference to me.

Mr. BARBOUR. I mean in the general results. They do not use troops any more in the parks. At the time the bill was originally drafted that was a vital question, and at the present time it is not.

Mr. SINNOTT. This act specifically refers to the Sequoia Park, authorizing the Secretary of War upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior to assign troops for the protection of the Sequoia Park, the Yosemite, and one or two others.

Mr. BARBOUR. Personally, I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that I thought it would be a good thing to repeal that law.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I know it has no business in this bill, however. A man looking up the law—and there are a good many men here who never look up the law, although some do—would not ever expect to find a provision of that sort under the title of Sequoia National Park.

Mr. BARBOUR. My idea in the first place was to provide that troops should not be used in this particular park. Upon talking with the park authorities they stated they were not using the troops in any of the parks any more, and did not intend to use them, because of the continual friction between the troops and the tourists. So it was my idea that resulted in putting this provision in the bill. I accept full responsibility for it, although I now state to the gentleman that in my opinion it makes absolutely no difference if the provision goes out.

Mr. MANN. Here is the situation about that: We are not using the troops in the park now. We did use them.

Mr. BARBOUR. They did some good work.

Mr. MANN. The general law provides that they may be used. The park service has been able to get Congress to appropriate the money to do this work without the use of the troops.

We still appropriate money for the maintenance of troops, just as we duplicate that with an appropriation for the benefit of the parks. Being a park man myself, I vote for all appropriations for parks, but we do not know whether it might not be desirable to have troops in some of those parks instead of having the service run solely by civilians in our readjustment of our military and naval affairs.

Mr. BARBOUR. I readily understand that conditions might arise in which troops could be used in the parks. They have had them there for police purposes, but there was continual friction between the troops and tourists.

Mr. MANN. There is continual friction between the park authorities and some tourists at all times and always will be, because they are not wholly reasonable, I suppose.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have known of some friction myself.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there ought to be in a provision for a particular park a general provision of law relating to all parks. It seems to me it is a very bad form of legislation. Of course, we sometimes stick things in where nobody can find them.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to the gentleman I have no intention of that kind so far as I am personally concerned. I am perfectly willing for the bill to be amended, because I do not think it makes any material difference whether it is in there or not in view of the present policy of the park service.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Do I understand they do not mean to keep troops in any parks?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand the policy of the park service is not to use troops for patrolling any park.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Does that include the Yellowstone Park, where we have a regular military force?

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand not now.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. How are they going to protect people in the parks?

Mr. BARBOUR. Rangers.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. They are run under the Forest Service?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; the park service—park rangers. They are similar to the forest rangers.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. They are armed?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. They can shoot down these bear and other animals that are apt to attack people?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I ask the question because once when I was camping in the Yellowstone Park a grizzly bear came and chewed up and almost killed two of the guides.

Mr. BARBOUR. And the gentleman was not permitted to bear arms in the park?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The two guides were not permitted to bear arms in the park and visitors are not permitted to bear arms in the park. I think it is very important for the protection of those people who go into the park, and who are in fact invited by the Government to go into the park, that they be protected so they can camp there in safety and not be laid open to attack by a grizzly bear.

Mr. BARBOUR. I heartily agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. And it is probably due to the fact that the black bear and the cinnamon bear and grizzly bear are fed at the hotels, as anyone who has been in the park knows, on swill and other material that they become used to people and seem more liable to attack people. I remember after this occurrence coming back and going to Oyster Bay to lunch with Col. Roosevelt. It was after he had left office, and I came on here and tried to get Mr. Lane to do something, either to allow guides to carry arms in the parks to protect parties they carried in there or in some other way to protect those people. After this attack occurred we sent to the nearest post and got a soldier to come out there, and he stayed all night. Col. Roosevelt was particularly interested, because it established a theory he had always maintained, but which other people—naturalists and others—did not agree to, namely, that the grizzly bear will attack a person without provocation and without being wounded.

Mr. SINNOTT. I will state to the gentleman the custom now is, when they go to watch the bears feed, to have two rangers go along with rifles ready to shoot. It was last year when I was there.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Well, has the gentleman any information as to the number of people killed by bears in those parks or wounded by them?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I have not.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. It would be very interesting. My wife was with me, and it is a wonder we were not both killed. But the bear went off in the woods; I do not know why. A month after that I read in the paper that a man who was sleeping under a truck in the park had been pulled out and killed by a grizzly bear. I would like to know how often that occurs. That is why I was interested in knowing whether they were going to take men with rifles from these parks.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand that the forest rangers are sufficient to patrol the park, and they are fully armed.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I am glad to know it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We are not getting confused between forest rangers and park rangers?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And this is about park rangers?

Mr. BARBOUR. About park rangers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the total proposed area of the park?

Mr. BARBOUR. About 1,100 square miles.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How does that compare with the size of the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. BARBOUR. Massachusetts is very much larger than that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This is about one-fourth of the size of Massachusetts?

Mr. BARBOUR. I should say about one-sixth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. At any rate, the size is large enough so that no ordinary force of park rangers would be able to cover it at all?

Mr. BARBOUR. There is no need of park rangers in all portions of the park all the time, like a police force in a city.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What does the gentleman think about section 4? It provides:

That no exclusive privilege shall be granted within said park, or over the roads and trails therein, except on ground leased for the erection of buildings or camps thereon.

Is it not intended that there should not be exclusive rights?

Mr. BARBOUR. I think it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then why should we have the section to which I have referred?

Mr. BARBOUR. All the concessions in the parks, I understand, have been let under long-term contracts. Personally, I am opposed to exclusive privileges in the parks, such as are now granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How are we ever going to get rid of them?

Mr. BARBOUR. By amending the general park act, I suppose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is not easy to do. Here we are proposing to take a park and enlarge the size of it and provide that there shall be no exclusive privileges, and that means no coaches run by a corporation, driving up and down the roads, and no eating houses along the route.

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, yes. There is an exception made there, on the ground leased for buildings or camps.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So it is proposed to have some concessions?

Mr. BARBOUR. The provision is that they can lease not to exceed 10 acres.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman think there will be exclusive rights given for the sale of photographs?

Mr. BARBOUR. On a particular 10 acres there may be, but on another 10 acres they can have the same kind of concession.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make the prediction that the gentleman is making his park entirely too large and run by a small number of laws and a handful of regulations, and he will regret that he enlarged the park.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Some of us have been receiving communications, printed matter, in reference to this Roosevelt-Sequoia National Park from women's clubs and various other organizations whose members, I assume, expect to visit the park or who are interested in the preservation and care of the park, and I would like to ask the gentleman from California if this measure, with the proposed amendments, is so drawn as to conform to the wishes of these people and prevent the park being utilized for water-power purposes?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is satisfactory to all the organizations from which I have heard, and I have heard from the principal ones. I have not heard from all the women's clubs that have communicated with Members of Congress, but the principal organizations are satisfied with it; that is, of those that have been communicating with Members.

Mr. VAILE. As I understand it, everybody is satisfied except those who want to use it for heat, light, and power?

Mr. BARBOUR. The gentleman has not stated it correctly. There are a lot of people who want to use the water, heat, light, and power in that section of the country who are also satisfied.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report does not state the reason for your separating from the existing park limits 97 square miles, and adding that tract to the Forest Service.

Mr. BARBOUR. That is stated very briefly in the report. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the reason is that the Forest Service and the park service could not agree on boundaries up until the present time. The area in the present park which it is proposed to eliminate contains certain grazing sections and some merchantable timber.

Mr. STAFFORD. It contains some fine standing timber, some large trees?

Mr. BARBOUR. Some large trees, but not nearly as many as will be in the park with this addition to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does it not contain large trees that will not be preserved?

Mr. BARBOUR. They will be preserved.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can the gentleman say that when we have transferred it to the Forest Service?

Mr. BARBOUR. The policy of the Forest Service is not to cut or destroy in any way the standing big trees.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are privileged to do so.

Mr. BARBOUR. Under the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely.

Mr. BARBOUR. They can, but their policy is not to do it, but to preserve the big trees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should not that acreage, which is now a part of the park, be retained, notwithstanding the position of the Forest Service, which wishes to include it under their domain?

Mr. BARBOUR. There are a great many people who believe that it should be retained in the park, but that particular area down there is not distinctively scenic in character. It can be administered just as well by the Forest Service as by the Park Service, and the Forest Service has assured me that those trees will not be cut.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that part of the park developed with roads to accommodate the people who want to see the big trees?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. This is chiefly a trail country.

Mr. STAFFORD. In bills of this character it is generally provided that the jurisdiction shall be placed under the National Park Service. This bill does not make any reference to the National Park Service.

Mr. BARBOUR. It would come under the general park law when it was created as a national park. This bill provides that it shall be a national park, and then the general park law will apply to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Section 2 provides that the park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The National Park Service is under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, but the Secretary of the Interior would be privileged under this authorization to not have it included in that activity of the service.

Mr. BARBOUR. Well, I would state to the gentleman that it seems to me that creating this area as a national park would bring it under the provisions of the national park act, and that would be sufficient.

Mr. CARTER. None of the Sequoia trees are eliminated from the law, are they?

Mr. BARBOUR. Some are scattered through this area. But a great many more are added to the park.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from California will recall a bill that was introduced here several years ago changing the name of this park from the Sequoia to the Roosevelt Park, and after a somewhat precarious existence on the calendar that bill was finally stricken off on the objection that it was not desired to eliminate the name "Sequoia." I think the people who eliminated it had the greatest respect for Mr. Roosevelt. By the legislation now proposed it is not intended to eliminate the word "Sequoia" from the name of the park. I will ask the gentleman now whether it is not a fact that with this proposition of calling this park the "Sequoia-Roosevelt Park" no further attempt will be made to eliminate the word "Sequoia" from its name?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am certain that is so.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that section 4 of this bill will prohibit the situation that exists now in most of our national parks, where the National Park Service has granted monopolies for the transportation of people in and out of the parks, as well as garage and hotel and camp privileges, as they have done in the Yosemite National Park.

and in the Grand Canyon National Park and in the Rocky Mountain National Park and in the Yellowstone National Park and all the rest of the national parks?

Mr. BARBOUR. If I understand the gentleman's question correctly, I will say, of course, this will only apply to this particular park.

Mr. NOLAN. In this particular park will it prohibit the granting of a monopoly of concessions to a single individual, allowing him to control all the transportation and hotels and camps and other accommodations for the people? In that regard I will say that a deplorable condition exists in the national parks now, owing to this national park policy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman from California will allow me, I suggest that he look at section 2, and there he will see that it says that "the Secretary may, in his discretion, lease parcels of ground, not to exceed 10 acres in extent, to any person or company for not to exceed 20 years, when such grant is necessary," and it further provides that "such leases may be renewed on the expiration of the terms thereof."

There is a regulation that has become a law for these parks. It says nothing about the stage coaches, but you know when you give anybody the right to put a hotel there, if he does not include everything else that can be thought of on the 10 acres, I will miss my guess.

Mr. NOLAN. They are not only given 10 acres on the Yosemite National Park and the Rocky Mountain National Park and the Grand Canyon National Park and the Yellowstone National Park, but they have been given monopolies over the entire area of the parks. I know of a case in the Yosemite National Park where they attempted to drive out an old lady who had gone in there 30 years ago, and who ran a bakery, and raised a family there by baking bread and selling it to the tourists.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the difference between giving a monopoly of 10 acres and giving control, when rangers have authority to prohibit the breaking of a twig or the cutting of a stick?

Mr. NOLAN. I am glad to see that the committee has taken precautions so that that will not happen in this park.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, over 40 per cent of the area of the State of California is in reserve—forest, mineral, and parks. California increased about 1,100,000 in population during the past 10 years. During the same time the area of the State covered by Federal reserves decreased about 100,000 in population. This bill proposes to increase the area of the Sequoia National Park to four times its original size. It eliminates part of the park that ought to be included in the park if there was any reason for its establishment at all, and it includes a lot of land that ought not to be included in the park, as it is now in a forest reserve; land some of which would be good for the people to settle upon, to make into farms, and raise families on, and to mine.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CURRY. In just a moment, then I will. I do not think that there ought to be any more additions made to national parks in the State of California, or anywhere else, where it takes arable land out of the possibility of future cultivation and out of occupancy by the people. Neither do I think that any other forest reserves should be created except in genuine forests, and not deserts and bare mountains covered by chaparral, brush, and greasewood. I would like to know why the name of the park is changed. I recognize the fact that it would be a splendid thing for that great man who was President of the United States, and who recently passed away, to have a park named in his honor, and I would not object to the Yellowstone Park having its name changed to Roosevelt National Park, because the Yellowstone National Park was named from a river called the "Yellowstone" because it flows over a bed of yellow rock, and its name is local and is not attached to the name of a man of national and international fame.

But I do not understand why Roosevelt's name should be connected with the name of Sequoia, one of the greatest men this country has ever produced. Sequoia was a Cherokee Indian. He was born in Georgia, and with his family moved out to the Indian Territory. He roamed all over the West, including California, and was one of the first to report the existence of the "big trees." He was the inventor of the Cherokee alphabet. His English name was George Gest. After he had grown to manhood he could not read or write, but he noticed white men reading, and obtaining knowledge from books. He saw white men writing letters, sending them hundreds of miles away, and the people who received them could read those letters and know what was in them. They could communicate with each other by writing and reading. He inquired as to how this thing was done, and was told that each one of the letters represented a sound, and that a combination of the sounds represented a word, and that by putting the words together they could understand what was written and what was printed. He was not an ignorant man but he was unlettered, not educated according to book standards of knowledge. But he set to work and invented the alphabet of the Cherokee language, an alphabet so perfect that a child 5 years of age on learning the alphabet can read intelligently. He did more for the uplift of the Indians and for the Christianizing and civilizing of the Indians than all the missionaries together could have done had it not been for his invention of the Cherokee alphabet. I think it is hardly fair or square to try to connect Roosevelt's name with the Sequoia Park when Roosevelt never was inside of the park in his life, and when we have other parks, like the Yellowstone, which he did visit, and to which you could give his name if you wanted to. There are two reasons why I object to this bill. One is that it makes an unnecessary addition to the park that in time will mean a permanent expense to the Government to keep it up, not for the benefit of all the people but for the benefit of those who can afford to go there. Second, I think it is hardly fair to the memory of Sequoia to connect any other man's name with his in this park, and I am afraid that I shall have to object. I do not like to do so.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CURRY. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BARBOUR. This present park is called the Sequoia National Park. It was not named after the Indian Chief Sequoia.

Mr. CURRY. It was named after the Indian Chief Sequoia.

Mr. BARBOUR. Let me complete my statement. It was named after the tree which was named after the Indian Chief Sequoia.

Mr. CURRY. Oh, well; that is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. BARBOUR. The tree is found in this particular area and nowhere else in the world.

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. And it was from the tree that the park took its name. Now, there is no other particular reason why the park should have been called Sequoia except because the tree is found there. This new area that it is proposed to bring in is a country of entirely different topography. It contains what are said to be the most rugged mountains in America that are in one compact area.

Mr. CURRY. I recognize that fact.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is not proposed to detract in any way from the name of Sequoia, because, in the first place, this park was not named after the Indian, but was named after the tree which was named after him, and this new section which it is proposed to include is considered particularly appropriate as a memorial of ex-President Roosevelt.

Mr. CURRY. The mountains have been there since the days of Adam, and the trees have been there since they were twigs, and they will be there forever or until they die of old age. The creation of this park is not going to preserve the trees. They are not going to be cut anyway. I do not believe in the addition of this acreage to this park. The groves of Sequoia gigantea are nearly all in the limits of the park now and the other trees are in a forest reserve. Some day I hope we will be able to get some of this land out of the forest reserve and let people settle on it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield to me right on that point?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he stated that there was land in there that could be used for agricultural purposes and homes?

Mr. CURRY. Yes; and for mining.

Mr. BARBOUR. This land, every foot of it, is over 5,000 feet high. It has been reported by the Agricultural Department that there is not a foot of agricultural land in this area. All of it is under snow a great part of the year. It is true that there are some meadows.

Mr. CURRY. Cattle and sheep can graze on it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. CURRY. If it is put into the park, nobody can go in with pick and shovel to find gold and other minerals.

Mr. BARBOUR. There is none in there that anybody has ever discovered.

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. SWING. I think in the bill presented at the last session there was a good deal of grazing land included. The people of my district were very much interested, because some of them are entirely dependent on grazing, but within the boundaries covered in this bill practically all the valuable grazing meadows have been excluded, and I hope that no objection will be made to this.

Mr. CURRY. There are a number of power sites within the limits of the proposed addition to the park. Some have been filed on and the permits are still pending. One of the reasons for this bill is to take these power sites out of development for commercial purposes. I think that is wrong.

Mr. VAILE. Right there, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. What is the theory on which the use of the water for power purposes is regarded as a blasphemy? It does not use up any natural resource at all, but just harnesses it for the use and benefit of the people of the United States.

Mr. CURRY. It is not considered a blasphemy by me. I am in favor of using the power sites the Almighty created for the use of man. I am not speaking for any other Member of Congress, but only for myself.

Mr. BARBOUR. The objection is that if they build a dam in there to store the water, they are going to back the water up and flood these three canyons in there.

Mr. VAILE. How is permission given to make these dams? Is it not by the Federal Power Commission?

Mr. BARBOUR. By Congress.

Mr. VAILE. If your bill is passed; but now it is by the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. BARBOUR. Under the powers given by the United States Congress.

Mr. VAILE. The Federal commission has the power to determine whether or not a dam shall be built.

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; but Congress has the right to determine the policy of the national parks.

Mr. VAILE. We have not got quite there yet. We will if this bill passes. Now the Federal Power Commission has the right to determine whether or not the power project shall be allowed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Under the power act; but this act proposes that Congress shall say to the Federal commission, "These powers were granted, but you shall not exercise them in this area."

Mr. VAILE. You propose to say to the power commission, "You three men, who were selected for your integrity—Cabinet officers—knowing all about the situation, shall not have a right to decide whether these power projects shall go on."

Mr. BARBOUR. No; we say we make this a national park, and we take it out from under the Federal power act.

Mr. VAILE. But right now, under the Federal power act, they have to apply to this commission for authority to construct a dam, and it has to be passed upon by the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely.

Mr. VAILE. And it can determine on the likelihood of its being a detriment to the scenery, or anything of that kind?

Mr. BARBOUR. I presume they have the right to pass on it.

Mr. VAILE. Could not the Federal Power Commission use its judgment as well as you expect Congress to use its?

Mr. BARBOUR. No; the Federal Power Commission only has such power as we see fit to give them. They are not concerned in the policy of administering the national parks. This bill proposes to say that this shall be a national park and that there shall be no power development in it. This is no reflection on the power commission. We say we do not want any power project situated in the park.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman accept an amendment striking out the name "Roosevelt"?

Mr. BARBOUR. I would not feel justified in accepting an amendment of that kind. It is a matter that has been carefully considered. The first suggestion for the naming of the park was made by the Boone and Crockett Club, of New York. The Roosevelt Association has taken it up and are much interested in it. It has been discussed in the newspapers and magazines throughout the east United States, and I would not feel justified in accepting any such amendment.

Mr. CURRY. I did not know that the Boone and Crockett Club voted in the gentleman's district. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBOUR. I flatter myself that I can sometimes see beyond the confines of my own district.

Mr. CURRY. If the gentleman does not see fit to accept the amendment I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California objects.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TOMBIGBEE RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10009) to authorize the State of Alabama through its highway department to construct and maintain a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Moscow Landing, in the State of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Alabama through its highway department be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tombigbee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Moscow Landing, about 14 miles south of the city of Demopolis, in the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McDUFFIE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTION FOR MILITARY ACADEMY CADETS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8924) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso of the first paragraph under the head "Miscellaneous" of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920 (41 Stat. L., p. 548), is amended to read as follows:

"Provided further, That any cadet now at the academy may, at his option exercised prior to June 11, 1920, continue at the academy one additional year and postpone thereby his prospective graduation. Any cadet not electing so to prolong his course shall be graduated in the year assigned his class prior to the passage of this act, except that any such cadet may subsequently, at any time not less than three months prior to his prospective graduation in such year, choose to reexercise such option for the purpose of so prolonging his course."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some one explain the bill.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, there was a bill providing that students should be given the option of taking a short course or a long course at the close of the war period, and I think two cadets inadvertently chose the short period. This bill merely permits them to take the long period.

Mr. WINGO. How did they "inadvertently" take the short period?

Mr. ASWELL. They decided to quit, and now they have decided to take the longer course.

Mr. WINGO. They were given the option?

Mr. ASWELL. They were.

Mr. WINGO. And other boys exercised it?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I know one of my boys exercised his option and stayed in.

Mr. ASWELL. That will permit him to go on if he wants to do so.

Mr. WINGO. Does it take a statute of Congress to give him another option?

Mr. ASWELL. The War Department so stated. The War Department has approved the bill, and the Committee on Military Affairs has approved it.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I hope for the good of the Army and the Military Establishment, for the good of our country, that the gentleman will not object to this bill. In my judgment a great mistake was made in permitting the cadets at West Point to graduate at three, then two, and then finally down to one year, during the war, and I always contended that when the war was over those young officers should have been given the option of either going back to West Point and completing their four-year course or resigning from the Army. This proposed law simply permits 24 of these young officers to remain at West Point and complete a four years' course.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is not to go back. They would graduate in 1922.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Oh, I understand that they are there now, but this law would permit them to remain another year.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois gives a different explanation from that given by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL]. Do I understand the gentleman to say that they are already graduated?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; they are still there, but they will graduate this year. But if this bill becomes a law they can remain there and graduate next year.

Mr. WINGO. They gave them that option?

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. And the right to that option has expired?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is my understanding.

Mr. WINGO. And this is for the benefit of how many?

Mr. McKENZIE. Twenty-four, I think.

Mr. FIELDS. And two already out.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Oh, it is for the benefit of the Army and the country.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, all legislation is for the benefit of the country in the minds of the proponents. All of them were given the right to determine whether they would graduate at the end of three years or four years. A certain number exercised their option to graduate at the end of three years, and now they want to reconsider that and take another year.

Mr. McKENZIE. There never had been a law fixing the period at West Point until 1920, and I believe from 1861 up until just prior to the war the system has been to require a course of four years. At that time by Executive order it was changed to three years. In 1920 Congress passed an act making it compulsory for them to spend four years at West Point, but during the war, as the gentleman will remember, the bars were let down and some of them were graduated after being there three years, some after being there two years, and finally they made an order that they could go out in one year.

Mr. WINGO. In 1921 they were given the option.

Mr. McKENZIE. I assume so.

Mr. WINGO. They were given that option after the act of March 30, 1920.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They were given the option long before.

Mr. WINGO. No; they were not. A young man who was going to graduate last year at the last moment decided to take another year. I was requested to designate some one for examination in 1921, and then subsequently that was corrected and I was told that the young man had decided to exercise his option and stay on another year. The point I am trying to get at is not the law. I know what the law is. These young men have already exercised their option, have they?

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit me, they will be officers in the United States Army whether we pass this law or not. They will be given commissions as second lieutenants after a three years' course.

Mr. WINGO. That is obvious.

Mr. McKENZIE. In my judgment the interest of the Government is in their remaining there for another year and completing their course.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman does not catch my question.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am not interested in these young men. I am interested in the welfare of the Army.

Mr. WINGO. Assuming it to be to the interest of the country and assuming what is the fact, that if this bill does not pass they would go on and go into the Army as officers, the question I am getting at is a question of fact. Did these young men exercise their options?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. WINGO. And now it is proposed to give them the right to exercise the option again and go on for another year even though they heretofore have exercised the option to take a three-year course?

Mr. McKENZIE. I think so, and it will be to the advantage of the Government to permit them to change their minds.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] says there will be two, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] says 24.

Mr. ASWELL. Oh, I said that I know of two. I do not know how many others there are.

Mr. McKENZIE. The report says 24.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. If I understand, I believe the gentleman says there are 24 who are eligible to exercise this option if this bill passes.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is in the report. I am speaking from memory.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Suppose half of these young men, if this bill becomes a law, take advantage of it and attend school for four years and the other 12 do not. Those 12 who go for four years would be better qualified than the others who have gone for only three. Would there be any discrimination in rank as between them?

Mr. McKENZIE. No.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If it is going to be for the good of the country in the matter of ability, does the gentleman not think there ought to be some discrimination in rank?

Mr. McKENZIE. No. If the gentleman's suggestion were to be carried out, we would probably have 12 efficient second lieutenants at the end of four years, whereas with the 12 who decided to stay only three years we would probably have 12 class B officers, who very likely would go out later.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am saying these 12 who exercised the option would absolutely be better qualified by having gone the four-year course than the other 12 who had only gone the three-year course, and if it is for the good of the Government to have the four-year course ought they not to have a higher rank than the other 12 who did not?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would not change the rank.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the facts are there are 26 men who will be affected by this proposition; 24 of them are due to graduate this year, having exercised their option to graduate this year. If this bill is passed, they will be graduated in 1923. The districts they come from, however, will be given the right to put other men in their places in 1922, because the law—

Mr. ASWELL. No.

Mr. WINGO. The Secretary of the War is my authority for that statement; and in the case of the 24 cadets, reading from the Secretary's letter, page 3 of the report:

There are 26 cadets at the Military Academy who would come within the provisions of this bill and who might exercise the option therein provided for. Twenty-four of these cadets are members of that class which had been assigned to graduate in the year 1922 before the passage of the act of March 30, 1920 (41 Stat. L., 548); the majority of this class will graduate in 1923, due to their having exercised the option provided for in the act of March 30, 1920; but these 24, not having exercised the option in question, will graduate as originally assigned in 1922, and thereby lose the additional or fourth year of instruction chosen by the majority. Similarly, there are two cadets of the class originally assigned to graduate in 1923 who did not elect to prolong their course for a year, and who, for this reason, are to graduate in 1923, one year ahead of the majority of this class who elected to finish out the four-year course.

This act would impose no obligation on any cadet in question, but would simply extend a privilege to such cadet, of which he might take advantage.

In the case of the 24 cadets of the original class of 1922 no interference will occur with the admission of their successors in 1922, provided such successors be named, as this case would be covered by Revised Statutes 1318, as amended by act of March 30, 1920 (41 Stat., 548), which states in part: "Provided, That whenever any member of the graduating class shall fail to complete the course with his class by reason of sickness, or deficiency in his studies, or other cause, such failure shall not operate to delay the admission of his successor."

Now that statement of the Secretary of War is about as clear as the conflicting statement here, and I withdraw my objection for that reason. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his objection.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] a question. Before the war, in 1912, the quota for West Point was 558. Then as a war measure the quota was raised so that each Representative, instead of having one nominee at West Point, was entitled to two, so at present, according to this report, they have 1,338 in the academy. Do you know if it is the intention of the committee to reduce it to the prewar basis?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not answer the gentleman on that point. I do not know what the purpose of the committee is. I will say to him, however, as far as I am concerned, that I always believed and I so believe now that whatever the number of officers that are prescribed for the Army of the United States that number should be made up by about 50 per cent of the officers coming from West Point and 50 per cent coming from civil life, or from the ranks. If we are going to cut the Army down, going to have a small Military Establishment, going to reduce the personnel in the Army, it may be necessary to reduce the number at West Point.

Mr. CABLE. In an Army of 75,000?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; we have not figured on an Army of 75,000. I am not figuring on an Army of 75,000 I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. CABLE. I will ask the gentleman another question. How much does it cost to educate one of these men at West Point?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, I can not give that exact information.

Mr. CABLE. Ten or fifteen thousand dollars?

Mr. McKENZIE. For four years? Possibly, I do not know.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman stated there was 1,338 in the college at the present.

Mr. CABLE. According to this report.

Mr. HULL. I think the gentleman is mistaken. That is the capacity of the college. If every one were there there would be 1,338, but there is something like 300 vacancies in the college.

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will yield, as to the cost of cadets at West Point I can not answer, but at Annapolis, where you will find the conditions are somewhat similar, it costs about $11,000 to educate a midshipman.

Mr. CABLE. It costs at least that at West Point. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. HULL. That includes the overhead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second proviso of the first paragraph under the head "Miscellaneous" of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920 (41 Stat. L., p. 548), is amended to read as follows:

"Provided further, That any cadet now at the academy may, at his option exercised prior to June 11, 1920, continue at the academy one additional year and postpone thereby his prospective graduation. Any cadet not electing so to prolong his course shall be graduated in the year assigned his class prior to the passage of this act, except that any such cadet may subsequently, at any time not less than three months prior to his prospective graduation in such year, choose to reexercise such option for the purpose of so prolonging his course."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ASWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IRRIGATION ON THE CROW RESERVATION, MONTANA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9344) providing for the appropriation of funds for acquiring additional water rights for Indians on the Crow Reservation, in Montana, whose lands are irrigable under the Two Leggins Irrigation Canal.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, state what is the real necessity for this legislation?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, the real necessity, if you please, is that the land on the Crow Reservation is now being allotted. It has all been allotted by the Congress. There are about 1,400 acres of land, which is adjacent to the Two Leggins Irrigation Canal district. A portion of the users of the land which has been allotted have already arranged with this company for water for their allotment. These 1,400 acres of land are so far away from the Big Horn irrigation project that no water can be gotten to it from there, and at a very small expense this Indian land, now worth under the dry-farming operations about $10 an acre, will very quickly be worth $100 an acre if water can be gotten to it.

Mr. WALSH. One hundred dollars an acre to whom?

Mr. SNYDER. To the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Is this the section where so many of these Indians are starving, and are liable to die before night?

Mr. SNYDER. There is no starvation among the Crow Indians. They have plenty of money. They have nearly $300,000 in the Treasury now, from which the money for this purchase would be taken, to be reimbursed under the land leased or sold by the Indian to whom it would be allotted. The money taken for the water right would be turned into the Treasury for the benefit of all the Crows.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman visited this particular reservation?

Mr. SNYDER. I have covered probably 60 or 70 miles inside of the Crow Reservation at various points, and I have made a study of the irrigation system, and know nearly where this land lies. It is off from the edge of the reservation, and there may be a few allotments outside of the reservation. There can be no question that this will be a great benefit to the Indians. The only thing that came up in this investigation is that in 1912 a contract was made with the Two Leggins Irrigation Co. for the sale of water for other tracts, at which time the price of $12.50 an acre was paid for the water, plus interest at the rate of 6 per cent. Now, it is proposed in this bill to give the bureau the right to purchase this land at not to exceed $20. That is, with the idea that each Indian who draws water from the system would have the land watered for about the same amount. I do not quite agree with that proposition myself. I think this bill should be amended to make the price not to exceed $12.50, plus 6 per cent from the time the purchase is made until such time as water is actually delivered onto the land.

Mr. WALSH. This says that this reimbursement shall be under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. Is that the usual thing?

Mr. SNYDER. That is the usual thing.

Mr. WALSH. I thought the law provided the conditions of reimbursement.

Mr. SNYDER. The law provided this: As the gentleman knows, a year or so ago we passed in the appropriation bill a section which directed the Secretary of the Interior to use no money that was appropriated for any of these purposes for irrigation, and so forth, unless the users of the water had made arrangements to pay back and reimburse the money to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9344) providing for the appropriation of funds for acquiring additional water rights for Indians on the Crow Reservation, in Montana, whose lands are irrigable under the Two Leggins Irrigation Canal.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of not to exceed $24,000 of any tribal funds on deposit to the credit of the Crow Indians, in the State of Montana, and to expend the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the acquiring of additional water rights for Indian allotments that are irrigable under the Two Leggins Canal, but which have no water rights: Provided, That the amount to be paid for the acquiring of such water rights shall be not to exceed $20 per acre, and that said sum, or such part thereof as may be used for the purpose indicated, shall be reimbursed to the tribe under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This provides for the payment of not to exceed $20 per acre. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] intend to offer an amendment?

Mr. SNYDER. I have an amendment prepared, which I did not intend to offer unless some question were raised. I am willing to offer the following amendment, namely, that on page 2, line 2, strike out after the word "exceed" the figures "$20" and insert "$12.50 per acre plus 6 per cent on deferred payments." I think that would make the purchase of these water rights exactly on the same basis as the previous ones were made.

Mr. RIDDICK. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. RIDDICK. I think the gentleman from Illinois does not understand exactly the tentative contract that was entered into with the Indian Department when this project was first constructed in 1912. A corporation of Montana gentlemen built the Two Leggins Canal with the understanding that the Indian Department would give them $12.50 an acre for every acre to be watered. At that time they thought 5,000 acres was all that could be watered, and bought that land at $12.50 an acre. This company has had this money invested in the canal since that time, and it is now estimated that another 1,400 acres can be watered, and it seems only fair they should be paid $12.50 an acre, with whatever interest has accrued from that day to this.

Mr. MANN. The original understanding was that the Government would take irrigation for 5,000 acres?

Mr. RIDDICK. All that there was water for.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said 5,000 acres, at $12.50 an acre, and that was what they did.

Mr. SNYDER. They took 4,688 acres.

Mr. MANN. Practically 5,000. Now, the company has the water and no use for it and the Indians have the land and no water. It was to the interest of the company to sell this water right and it is to the interest of the Government and the Indians to buy the water right.

Mr. RIDDICK. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. But why is it worth any more now for the company to dispose of this surplus water than for it in the first place to dispose of the 5,000 irrigable acres of water? It is the same proposition. That covered deferred interest, but this proposes to pay cash. There are no deferred payments to this. And if that was $20, the company will say, "Well, you are authorized to pay us $20, and we will not sell for any less. It is valuable to us and it is valuable to the Indians to have irrigation and will pay $20." But it is worth no more to the company for this number of acres than it was for the original number of acres; not as much.

Mr. RIDDICK. This irrigation company has had its money in this project up to the present time.

Mr. MANN. Of course, they have had their profit already. Now they have got some extra water and wish to irrigate 1,400 acres more. They have already made back their expenses.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman from Illinois is absolutely right. It was just exactly my understanding of the proposition, that they put in a tentative scheme up there to supply 5,000 acres. So far they have supplied 4,700. They have got the plans there that they could put in here for these 1,400 acres, and what they want is to fix it so that we can pay them 6 per cent on the investment from the beginning down to the present time.

This amendment is perfectly proper and should go in the bill. I am willing to help them get $12.50 an acre plus 6 per cent from the time the purchase is made until the time they put the water in use. I think that is all the company has the right to expect.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the amendment the gentleman suggests allow 6 per cent from the time these irrigation works were completed?

Mr. SNYDER. No; from the time this particular purchase is made that we are authorizing under this law.

Mr. RIDDICK. The gentlemen representing the Two Leggings Irrigation Canal Co. were in Washington recently and were in conference with the Interior Department, and a tentative agreement was entered into. The Indians are very anxious to get the water at this figure, to take land situated in a semiarid country worth $10 an acre and hold it for perhaps $100 an acre.

Mr. SNYDER. That is not mentioned in the hearings. If that question had been raised in the hearings, I would have understood about it very quickly.

Mr. MANN. When these water rights were originally secured, they were secured under provision for the payment of so much, not all in cash. This provision calls for the payment in cash.

Mr. RIDDICK. In 1912 the Two Leggings Irrigation Canal Co. built the ditch with the understanding that the Indian Department would promptly take over and use all the water it could furnish at $12.50 an acre. They have been slow in taking hold of the matter. They did promptly use 4,700 acres, but since then the matter has been hanging, and it seems to me they should be able to get all the water available at $12.50, and if they have neglected up to this date to take over all the water, they should pay interest.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. RIDDICK. The Indians have been well treated.

Mr. MANN. And so has the company been.

Mr. RIDDICK. I would not undertake to drive a hard bargain with them in the matter.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; but the company got their pay for all that they sold and all that they expected to sell at that time.

Mr. RIDDICK. The gentleman does not know what they expected to sell. I do not know. Nobody knew exactly what acreage this irrigation system would supply.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they did not build this water plant without first discussing the matter with the Indian Service as to how much acreage the Indian Service would take. If they did not they were crazy, and if they are crazy they are not entitled to much consideration.

Mr. SNYDER. When this question was up for discussion before the committee the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs was asked about it, and his answer was this, that they are supposed to charge 6 per cent, until it would amount to between $15 and $20, and we thought we would put it sufficiently high because there would be no question but that we would get the land at the lowest possible price. He wants to put all this land on the same basis.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Indians have had the use of the water?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. RIDDICK. The water has been available, but it has not all been used. The land has been allotted and the Indians have been given their portions of it, but the Indians in some cases did not get irrigated land. The price at which it can be purchased is such that it makes it a good bargain. They are going to get it for less than $20.

Mr. SNYDER. But the point about this whole thing is that it may be three or four years before the allottees will take this water, and by the time they take it the value may go up to $20. If they pay only $12.50 now for it, then they will all be placed on the same basis.

Mr. MANN. They expected to pay cash for it. There will be no deferred payments. If they have not used the water they will be that much better off.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman from New York think that the water has been used to the extent of 4,700 acres?

Mr. SNYDER. It has been available but not used. My idea is that we ought to start the Indians by buying the land for the same price that it was at first bought for. Then if they get going the value will go up to $20.

Mr. Speaker, I offer that amendment, "to strike out $20 per acre." I left out the words "per acre."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 2, line 2, strike out "$20 per acre" and insert "$12.50 per acre, plus 6 per cent on deferred payments."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, I want to oppose the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, I think if gentlemen understand the purpose of this amendment they will vote it down. A definite arrangement was entered into between the Indian Department and a number of gentlemen who organized a company to construct the Two Leggings Irrigation Canal to irrigate this territory. The understanding was that the Indian Department would pay $12.50 an acre for the purchase of the water right. They used a part of the water to irrigate a part of the land, and the use of the remainder has been deferred until this late date.

Now, by a recent act of Congress this Indian reservation is to be thrown open to public settlement, and each Indian is to be allotted his share of the land. It is found that some of the Indians will get irrigated land and some will get none. They want to treat all of the Indians alike and irrigate and divide the remainder of the irrigated land among those who otherwise would not get irrigated land. If they can irrigate this land, it can be sold at a good price.

If it is not irrigated, of course they could only sell it for a very low price in that semiarid country. So the Indians are very anxious to go ahead with this contract, just as the department proposes in this measure, and the people who built this canal are very anxious to go ahead, just as the measure proposes. Both parties to the contract have agreed to it, and the Indian Department, acting for both, have drawn up this measure, and they ask that it be enacted just as it is. It is fair and equitable to the people who built the canal and very generous to the Indians. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. ELLIS. What provision was there for interest in the original bill?

Mr. RIDDICK. It was assumed that the water rights to be purchased would all be taken over promptly, and the people who built the canal have been pressing to that end from time to time. The Indians were not particularly interested in taking this water right over, because there was no plan to allot the lands to them, and no one was much interested.

Mr. ELLIS. There was no provision at all for interest at that time?

Mr. RIDDICK. No.

Mr. ELLIS. Now, while this time has been going on for 10 years, have the water company been getting any revenue from this at all?

Mr. RIDDICK. None at all. The Indians were not interested in taking the additional water rights, because there was no plan to allot the lands, and nobody wanted to use the water rights.

Mr. ELLIS. As soon as the land was allotted and they began to take water they would begin to realize from it?

Mr. RIDDICK. They are not renting the water rights. They are selling them outright, so that the water rights go with the land. To illustrate: Here is a piece of land worth $10 an acre. The Indian Department pays $16 or $17 for water rights sufficient to permanently irrigate that land, making a total cost of $27 an acre, and the Indian gets land worth $100 an acre or more.

Mr. ELLIS. And will be furnished the water permanently?

Mr. RIDDICK. Yes; forever. The title to the water right is salable the same as the title to land in Montana.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDDICK. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I am interested in the statement the gentleman has just made. I was inclined to agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], but after listening to the statement of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RIDDICK] it seems to me that he has absolutely undone what was said by the gentleman from New York. Have any lands been purchased prior to this time?

Mr. RIDDICK. No; the land is right now in process of being allotted.

Mr. BEGG. Then if Indian A buys a lot upon which the water rights were provided for 10 years, he will pay $12.50 an acre, plus 6 per cent interest down to date. Is that correct?

Mr. RIDDICK. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. But if Indian B buys a lot on which the water right is not provided for until this bill passes, he will pay $12.50 an acre only?

Mr. RIDDICK. He gets it for less than the other Indian does, and that is exactly the reason why the Indian Department ask that this bill be passed in this way, so as to put every Indian on the same basis.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman is correct in that statement, it does not seem to me that that is equitable at all. One Indian will pay $12.50 an acre and the other will pay $19 or $20 an acre, or whatever amount 6 per cent on $12.50 for 10 years would be, added to the original $12.50, and the other Indian would pay only $12.50.

Mr. SNYDER. Suppose it should be three years from now before some Indian gets his allotments? None of this land has been allotted. It is all to be allotted, and the time for the allotment has nearly run, and we have a bill in here now asking for a two-year extension on it.

Mr. BEGG. I see that clearly, but the interest being calculated from the original time, if your amendment carries, I do not see how you can prevent charging one Indian one price and another Indian another price.

Mr. RIDDICK. These Indians do not pay for the land. Each Indian gets his allotment or his share of the tribal land free. Then when he sells it, the white man who buys the land has to pay for the land and the water right, and the amount collected by the Indian for water right is all reimbursed to the general Indian fund from whence it originally came; and the final purchaser pays the cost of the water right. The money is all reimbursed to the Indians finally, and I am sure there is no desire on the part of Congress to take advantage or drive an unfair bargain. It is a fair agreement that the Indian Department has made with both parties to the contract, and has drawn the bill with that in view. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SNYDER. After all, Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do here to-day is to furnish a place for the Two Leggins Irrigation Co. to sell their water. That is the whole of this proposition. The Indians will need the water eventually. They do not need it to-day, but the Two Leggins Irrigation Co. need the money for this acreage right now and as much interest as they can get.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a couple of questions?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Has not the Two Leggins Irrigation Co. been paid the $12.50 an acre for this original 4,700 acres?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. BURTNESS. And that was several years ago?

Mr. SNYDER. In 1912.

Mr. BURTNESS. To come down to the amendment which the gentleman has suggested here this afternoon, I can not quite understand just what he means by the words "plus 6 per cent on deferred payments." To make myself plainer let me say this, that this bill contemplates that in so far as the project is concerned, it is to be paid in cash, whether it be $12.50 an acre or $20 an acre, so there will be no deferred payment upon the $12.50 unless it is the intent of the gentleman that the new Indian should come in and get the advantage of this project and pay the $12.50 plus interest for the last 8 or 10 years.

Mr. SNYDER. Plus interest for such time whatever it may be; in order to even up and make them pay nearly the same price, we permit the 6 per cent to run against the sale until the Indian takes the water.

Mr. BURTNESS. Then there should be a further qualification.

Mr. SNYDER. I am willing that the gentleman should offer an amendment if he can improve it.

Mr. BURTNESS. There will not be any deferred payments at all if the action is taken as contemplated by the bill, because $12.50 or $20 per acre will simply be taken from the tribal funds and turned over to the Two Leggins project irrespective of whether the water is used that minute or not, unless it is the intent to even things up by charging the later Indians that come in 6 per cent from the time it was first available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Two Leggins Irrigation Co. was organized for the purpose of constructing an irrigation plant and selling water to the Government for the Indians, to a large extent at least. They made their trade with the Government and sold at that time all the water they thought they would be able to supply at $12.50 an acre, enough to cover nearly 4,800 acres of land. They find now that they have more water than necessary to supply that acreage. I do not know whether it is because the water has not been used. They got their money for it nearly 10 years ago. According to our friend from Montana, the water has not been used. They have not been put to any special extra expense in the distribution of the water.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I am not clear about this; when the Indians are allotted lands, is that their private property?

Mr. MANN. It is their private property.

Mr. BEGG. And they can sell it?

Mr. MANN. That depends upon the terms of the allotment. In this case they can sell the most, if not all, of it.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman explain why one Indian should pay more than another for equal water rights, as it seems they will if this amendment is adopted?

Mr. MANN. I do not think that would make any difference; I do not know whether they would or not. If so, that would be taken into consideration in making the allotment, because it is the value of the property allotted, and that is supposed to be equal. I do not know what the passage in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior means, and I doubt if he knows. He says 6 per cent interest on deferred payment for cash payments. These will be cash payments; that is the purpose of the bill—to appropriate money to buy water rights.

The Two Leggins Co. has the water; they want to sell it, and it is for the interest of the Indians that the Government buy it for the Indians. The water is there and it is useful. The company has it and can not dispose of it. They want to sell it. We ought to pay what is right about it, and we ought to do the fair thing. The best test I know of is what they themselves proposed to do 10 years ago—sell it for $12.50 an acre; and with all the knowledge we have we are safe in passing the bill at that rate. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that if this amendment is to go in it should provide 6 per cent interest per annum instead of just a 6 per cent charge on deferred payments. If it is an interest charge it ought to be at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, whatever the time is.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment so that it will read 6 per cent interest per annum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment, and the Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. SNYDER: Page 2, line 2, strike out "$20 per acre" and insert "$12.50 per acre plus 6 per cent interest per annum on deferred payments."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RIDDICK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF DESTITUTE INDIANS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 264, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. London) there were—ayes 46, noes 10.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The doors were closed, and the Sergeant at Arms was directed to notify absentees.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 264) to provide for the relief of destitution among Indians.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available until June 30, 1922, for the relief of destitution among Indians, to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the furnishing of food, clothing, and other supplies: Provided, That where able-bodied Indians have no means of support this appropriation may be used to pay such Indians for work performed in the construction of roads or other improvements on the reservation, or for the purchase of necessary seeds and implements to enable them to cultivate their farms: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of food, clothing, or other supplies that can be furnished by the War or Navy Departments or by the United States Shipping Board from surplus stock in time to meet the present emergency; and the War and Navy Departments and the United States Shipping Board shall, upon receipt of formal request therefor, and without charge, turn over to the Indian Service at the point of storage any such surplus food, clothing, or other supplies: And provided further, That a sum equal to the total value of all supplies furnished by the other governmental agencies shall be reserved from the appropriation made herein and be covered back into the Treasury: Provided further, That where relief is given under this resolution, to any tribe of Indians having available tribal funds held in trust for such tribe in the Treasury of the United States the expenditure for such relief shall be reimbursed from such tribal funds to the extent that they may be available.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts to 20 minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in January an estimate came to Congress from the Bureau of the Budget for an emergency appropriation of $155,000 for the relief of destitution among the Indians. As a result of informal hearings in the Committee on Appropriations and consultation between the Bureau of Indian Affairs and officials in the Shipping Board and the War Department, it has been recommended that, in so far as possible, instead of money being expended, surplus supplies available in the War Department, in the Navy Department, and in the Shipping Board shall be used. After further consideration, the Indian Department agreed to a reduction of the amount to $100,000 from the original estimate of $155,000. In part, the reduction is due to the fact that winter is passing.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why provide any part in money when the War Department and the Shipping Board together have all of the necessary items of both food and clothing?

Mr. CRAMTON. For two reasons: First, this is purely an emergency matter and there can not be long delay, and it is not definite to what extent the War Department or the other branches of the Government would have the needed supplies available, accessible to the point where they are most needed; and, second—

Mr. BLANTON. I would state to the gentleman that one of our colleagues told me just the other day that one of his constituents is expecting to make $12,000,000 profit on one contract for shoes which he expects to purchase from the War Department.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If a private individual can make $12,000,000 profit on one contract for shoes from the War Department, why should we not use those shoes in giving them to the destitute Indians rather than buying other shoes?

Mr. CRAMTON. That was the idea of the Committee on Appropriations, and the Indian Bureau has adopted that point of view and is going to use those supplies to the utmost. The need is set forth in House Document No. 155, which contains the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with reference to the needs, and without desire to detain the House, I might quote a sentence or two from this statement of Commissioner Burke:

The Indians have felt the universal postwar depression perhaps to a greater extent than the whites because of their more or less dependent economic status, limited resources, and lack of provisions for such emergencies. The situation was anticipated to some extent several months ago, but at that time it was thought that we would be able to get through the winter by utilizing the special reserves which have been set aside from our appropriations for the present fiscal year under the Budget plan. For this reason the item was not included in our estimates for 1923. However, reports received from the field indicate that the situation is far more serious than was at first anticipated and that the amount asked for will be absolutely necessary in order to provide needy Indians with the actual necessities of life in the way of food and clothing; otherwise there will be great distress and hardship and perhaps numerous deaths due directly or indirectly to the lack thereof.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should like to get some history of the legislation. Has the full Committee on Appropriations passed on this?

Mr. CRAMTON. The history is this: That an estimate came from the Bureau of Indian Affairs through the Interior Department and through the Bureau of the Budget, as set forth in House Document No. 155, from which I have just read in part. It was passed upon by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When?

Mr. CRAMTON. And the full Committee on Appropriations last week—I think on Friday—instructed the report of House joint resolution 264, appropriating $100,000 for the purposes in question. And if I might state further, to complete, that resolution is the resolution that is now before the House, with the exception that there has been added to the resolution now before the House a further proviso that in the event any of this money is used to aid any tribe of Indians that have funds available that in so far as it is used by that tribe it shall be reimbursed out of the funds of the tribe.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, let me ask the gentleman, The subcommittee considered it?

Mr. CRAMTON. The subcommittee considered it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did the gentleman give notice to the minority members at the time that was being considered?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I think the minority members were present at the time. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] here can speak for himself.

Mr. CARTER. This matter was brought up in the subcommittee when myself and Mr. BYRNES were both present, who were the minority members of the subcommittee, but as I recall no action was taken at that time.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I think the gentleman is right. It was taken up in the subcommittee at the time we were working on the general bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Were any minority Members present at the time this was acted upon?

Mr. MADDEN. This was acted upon by the full committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. By the full committee on Friday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I say in the subcommittee. Were any Members of the minority present at the time?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, it was my understanding that the matter was practically agreed upon in the subcommittee at the time of which my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] speaks.

Mr. CARTER. I thought the agreement in the subcommittee, as I recall it, was that we would authorize the chairman of the subcommittee to take the matter up again with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with a view of seeing if these supplies could be furnished by the War Department without a tax upon the Treasury. Since that time I have had no notice of anything that has been done. As a matter of fact, did the subcommittee act or was it acted upon by the general committee?

Mr. CRAMTON. It was considered at that time in the subcommittee. I hold the judgment of my friend from Oklahoma

[Mr. CARTER] entirely too highly to think of proceeding without the benefit of his advice, and supposed I was proceeding with his full information and approval, and as I understand the resolution before us has entirely the approval of my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Are these Indians wards of the Government and for whom previous appropriations of this sort have been made for their support?

Mr. CRAMTON. Generally speaking, yes. The current appropriation bill carries an item of $375,000 that would be available for this sort of purpose, but $323,000 of that goes into hospitals, and the other $50,000 plus has been already obligated, with the exception of $700.

Mr. BLACK. But what I want to get at is this: We all know there is a great deal of unemployment in the United States and, perhaps, some destitution among the white and Negro folks. Now, is this a new departure or are these Indians wards that we recognize we owe an obligation to?

Mr. CRAMTON. They are wards of the Government. We have cared for them in large degree and must continue to do so.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. I take it this matter has been carefully investigated by the committee. Can the gentleman tell us what estimate the committee placed upon the amount that will be turned over under this bill from the other departments to the Department of Indian Affairs?

Mr. CRAMTON. It would only be a guess, but I am hopeful that from one-half to two-thirds or three-fourths of it will be in the form of supplies.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, the estimate of the gentleman is that at least one-half, probably two-thirds, may be covered into the Treasury from this resolution?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. KINDRED. Can the gentleman state approximately how many of the Indians who are to be benefited by this appropriation bill are living in their old tribal relations and are wards of the Government, or how many have renounced their tribal relations and are not wards of the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume that practically all of them are living in tribal relations.

Mr. CARTER. None of these Indians, Mr. Chairman, have been released from tribal relationship. That is to say, they are all wards of the Government. The distinction made between an Indian that is a ward of the Government and an Indian that is not, is designated by "competent" and "incompetent." A competent Indian is no longer a ward of the Government. He is given his free title, and the hand of the Government is taken off of him. An incompetent Indian is a ward of the Government and the Government retains its power over him. And all of this money is to be spent for incompetent Indians.

Mr. KINDRED. To all intents and purposes, they are wards of the Government?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is this the usual and ordinary method for providing appropriations for these needy Indians who are still wards of the Government?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is the usual procedure for an emergency. The general bill for the fiscal year 1922 has not sufficient funds available. The deficiency bill, at the time it becomes a law, will be too late.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What facts have created this emergency to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. CRAMTON. A general set of circumstances, including a series of droughts and economic conditions—crop failures, suspension of mine operations, and so forth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the annual appropriation bill carry an item supposed to be sufficient to take care of it?

Mr. CRAMTON. In the present emergency it develops it does not. There are not over $700 available in that item at this time.

Mr. SEARS. My colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] said, "these Indians." As I read the bill there is no particular tribe of Indians set forth, but it is meant to reach wherever they find Indians in destitute condition?

Mr. CRAMTON. In general, in Montana, Arizona, and New Mexico—

Mr. SEARS. But there are destitute Indians in other places, and this bill would reach those?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The appropriation is out of the Treasury of the United States and not out of the Indian funds?

Mr. CRAMTON. Except—and I think this exception is only trifling—if any Indians who are aided have tribal funds in the Treasury this money will be reimbursable out of their funds.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We recently passed a $20,000,000 bill for Russia, and we are passing $100,000 in this bill for Indians who are not citizens.

Mr. CRAMTON. But are our wards.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman inform the House whether there is any possibility of the Committee on Appropriations considering the matter of relief measures for miners in areas where they are suffering at this time?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not well speak for the committee on that subject. I have no personal knowledge.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman does not think that will occur?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, my opinion about that would be of very little value, I think.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House at any great length upon this measure, but I am opposed to it from principle. I know that we have rather recently established a very good precedent by appropriating $20,000,000 for the starving and destitute people of other lands, and it may seem trivial to attempt to call attention to this expenditure, which is only $100,000, for the relief of destitution amongst the Indians. But I do not believe this is the right way to go about it. I have no criticism to make of the head of the Indian Bureau. I think he has been trying to effect economies there.

But I am a little surprised at the generosity of the Committee on Appropriations, headed by our gallant leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has made such a splendid record in reducing appropriations below the amount called for by the Budget, and I am sorry that he should have departed from his policy in this particular instance, because I am told that we have in the offing prospective legislation calling for the authorization of $500,000 to be taken from the Public Treasury to relieve distress and suffering among the miners of West Virginia and Kentucky and Ohio and possibly some other regions of the country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think it is probably because of those bills that are pending that this bill is brought in, or what is the policy behind this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know what the politics of the measure are, but if we continue to appropriate money by the millions or by the hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the Public Treasury for purposes such as this, there will be some politics in it along about next fall, when people file their tax returns and know what has got to be raised in order to meet the expenditures authorized and made from the Public Treasury.

Now, I have no objection to taking proper care of the Indians. They are the wards of the Nation, we are told. Of course, it is a mighty good thing for them that they are the wards of the Nation. It has been my observation that the more money we spend in trying to improve the condition of the Indians, curiously enough the more money we have to spend on their account. They are divided, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] states, into two classes, the competent and the incompetent. But why this should run until June next is more than I can see. This is the time of destitution and unemployment amongst other classes of people. We are now in the middle of a winter. We have recently gone through a severe cold spell, together with a heavy fall of snow, and in the winter season it is rather hard, I assume, in these sections of the country to work upon the reservation or the farm. Why we should continue this up to June, I repeat, is more than I can understand. Furthermore, there is no particular limit to the amount which can be taken out of the War Department and the Navy Department and the Shipping Board for these people. If it is food they need, the supplies are in the War Department. If it is clothing they need, the supplies are in the War Department. If it is shelter they need, the material with which to provide the shelter can be secured from the Shipping Board, and possibly from the War Department.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it has been disclosed to the satisfaction of the Committee on Appropriations, after a very careful and thorough investigation of what the War Department and the Shipping Board could supply, that they had not all the things that were requisite, but to the extent that they have things that can be used they are to be used.

I wish to say further, if the gentleman will yield—

Mr. WALSH. Certainly—

Mr. MADDEN. That in all the investigations I have ever made in any case I have never reached a conclusion which was so much to my satisfaction, as to the merit of the case, as the conclusion I have reached as to the importance and necessity and emergency and merit of the case that is pending.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, we all recognize that the gentleman from Illinois very seldom lets his great big generous heart get the better of his judgment, but I think very likely that has happened in this instance.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is the House to understand from the suggestion of the gentleman that he thinks it feasible for the Indians to be housed on the unseaworthy ships that the Shipping Board has floating around here somewhere?

Mr. WALSH. No. I did not intend to convey that suggestion, and only a mariner from the State of West Virginia would have been able to put such an interpretation upon my remarks. [Laughter.]

I would like to say that we have got a lot of other people who are destitute in this country; we have got a lot of other people who are suffering in the middle of winter.

They are citizens of the United States; they are loyal to the Government; and they are looking for employment and willing to work if they can get employment. They are in many instances dependent upon public charity at the present time. If we start in upon this program, we will have gentlemen here with a very strong argument in favor of spending money directly out of the Treasury to take care of the suffering people in other sections of the country who may not be so fortunate as to be wards of the Nation. Now, the gentleman from Illinois stated that a very careful investigation disclosed that the War Department did not have in all cases the particular supplies that were needed for these Indians. I do not know just what particular things they may need. The War Department has an abundant supply of food and clothing, and the War and Navy Departments certainly have an abundant supply of shoes. I should think that ought to be sufficient to cure destitution.

But, Mr. Speaker, I know that the House is insistent upon disclosing its two-thirds and more majority in favor of this measure, and I do not desire to get in the way of the machinery; but I shall vote against the bill.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] desire to use the remainder of his time?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to use his time now. The gentleman from Michigan has yielded all the remainder of his time.

Mr. CRAMTON. We have only one more speech.

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has only five minutes remaining.

Mr. WALSH. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RIDDICK].

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, during the holidays I visited Montana, and while there saw a sensational page article published in many Montana newspapers telling about alleged destitution on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation. The article was so harrowing and so full of distressing details that I at once made it my business to visit that section of the State and to look into the facts, and I found that the sensational statements in that article were all wrong. I found that there were hard times, but no suffering, no starvation, no freezing to death, no dire want. I found that these Indians have over $70,000 in cash in the bank. Every man, woman, and child on the reservation owns 400 acres of land, which means that a family of five owns 2,000 acres of land worth upward of $20,000. I found that there was no suffering from destitution. In looking over the report on this bill I find that the greater portion of the money which it is proposed we shall give from the United States Treasury is to be used on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation. It is my personal opinion this gift is not necessary to prevent suffering or death. There is a condition of hard times there the same as there is in Washington, and the same as there is in many other places all over the Nation; but I talked with reliable people who live right there adjoining and upon the reservation, and who know the situation, and who are in daily touch with those Indians, and they assured me that they were positive that the statements that there was suffering and hunger and deaths from starvation there were untrue. Before we are to believe these harrowing tales I should like some more definite evidence than has been presented here. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. If these Indians have such a large amount of money in their tribal funds, of course they must stand for this expense under the terms of the resolution. But is it not true that in the very recent past we have appropriated to buy seed, and so forth, for the relief of white farmers in Montana because of repeated crop failures?

Mr. RIDDICK. I am glad to answer the gentleman's question. We have not furnished free seed to any farmers in Montana or elsewhere who have assets of their own. I have sympathy for any people, white or Indian, who are really needy; but these Indians, who have property aggregating upward of $20,000 in value to each family and who have a large tribal bank account that can be made available for any immediate needs, whether for food, clothing, seed, implements, or anything of that kind, are not in such a condition as to warrant us in taking money out of the Treasury of the United States that we have to collect from other people, who are hard up, to give to these Indians simply because they are hard up. During the past eight years we have been educating the public to believe that whenever anyone is hard up an appropriation should be made and he should be placed in comfortable circumstances with money taken out of the National Treasury. It is time to stop that kind of business. The public expects Congress to economize, and we ought not to spend one cent that is not absolutely necessary.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LITTLE. In cases where they have $20,000 to a family, do they not have to pay for the seed out of that?

Mr. CRAMTON. The information given by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs—

Mr. LITTLE. Did the gentleman say that the Indians which had as much as $20,000 would pay for the seed?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. RIDDICK. The information I have given you I gained first from my own personal observation out in Montana. Within the last 10 minutes I talked with Mr. Meritt, of the Indian Department, whom you all know, and he confirmed all that I have stated, that the Blackfeet Indians have on deposit $70,000 in round numbers and that the tribe owns land so that each individual Indian has 400 acres, and that there is no freezing to death or dying or suffering for lack of food.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDDICK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then Mr. Meritt tells you a different story from what he tells the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. RIDDICK. That may be.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDDICK. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I am not conversant with this legislation. Is this money to be appropriated for relief of the Indians, for the Indian tribes?

Mr. RIDDICK. The money, as I understand it, is to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States to the amount of $100,000 to furnish relief to certain Indian tribes, and the tribe that is to get the greatest benefit from it is the Blackfeet Tribe that I have just spoken of. The reason given for the legislation is that there is suffering and death. I do not know anything about the other Indian tribes referred to—the Indian tribes in Arizona or elsewhere—but I do know the situation in Montana, and I know that there is no occasion to make a further drain upon the taxpayers of the whole Nation, who are hard up, in order to give to the Blackfeet Indians to prevent freezing, hunger, or dying from starvation. The sensational newspaper article which started this agitation was written by an Indian who is spending the winter in southern California. If the balance of the measure has no more merit than the proposal affecting the Blackfeet Indians, there is no merit whatever in it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for taking care of the destitute Indians, many of whom are in a suffering condition, as reported to us by the authorities of this Government. It was brought to the knowledge of the House by the Appropriations Committee upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, at the urgent suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, at the suggestion of the Director of the Budget, and of the President of the United States himself. I do not know from what avenue my friend from Montana gets his information other than through the officials of this Government. For my part I prefer to take the official avenues of the Government.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Montana said that he went personally to the Blackfeet Reservation.

Mr. CARTER. I understand; but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made an investigation, and he says that the Indians in Montana are in a destitute condition.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Did the Commissioner of Indian Affairs say that his information was based upon his personal investigation?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly not; he did not say that he went over the reservation himself, but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had had the matter investigated. My attention has been called by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] to the statement of Commissioner Burke, in which he says that "a careful house-to-house investigation has been made."

Mr. WALSH. By whom was the investigation made?

Mr. CARTER. By the regular authorized agents of the Government. Now, there was a time when the American Indian was supreme on this continent. There was a time when he owned all the land of the entire country. He did not have to ask the white man for arms. There was a time when all he had to do, when seeking redress for any imaginary or real wrong, was to rush upon the warpath, as you civilized people are wont to do to-day. [Laughter.] But he was deprived of his patrimony in order that this great Republic might endure, and I am surprised that a gentleman coming from a section of the country that my distinguished friend from Massachusetts comes from, the very hub of civilization, should oppose a small appropriation like this for a class of people whom the officials of his own administration say are in need of assistance, are in dire need of assistance, at this time, and one of these officials no less a personage than the President himself. I am surprised that my friend from Massachusetts should oppose this resolution, when day after day we are making appropriations much more recklessly.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the resolution provides for destitute Indians. If an Indian has $1,000 or $2,000 or more, he is not destitute.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Oklahoma may not know it, but the gentleman from Massachusetts has two tribes of Indians in his own district. They are self-supporting and self-governing.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; and the gentleman from Oklahoma has several tribes in his district that are self-supporting; none of them are included within this appropriation; but when I see starving Americans, be they white men, Indian, or colored, I feel as much interest in them as I do in the suffering in far-away Russia or any other foreign country. This has been asked for by one of the safest men who ever presided over a bureau of this Government.

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. CARTER. In just a moment. I would be reluctant myself, with the present condition of the Treasury, to accept the statement of an investigation by the average bureau chief, but when a man like Charlie Burke tells me that these things are necessary and that he knows them to be necessary then it makes me sit up and take notice. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. While some of the Indians have a credit in the Treasury of the United States that is available for relief, this appropriation would not cover them at all.

Mr. CARTER. It would cover them; yes. They would be reimbursed from their funds where they have funds, but those funds would not be available without this resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—yeas 55, noes 44.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRAMTON. And pending that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Michigan stated that "pending that" he made the point of no quorum. Does that mean that if no quorum is present there will be an automatic roll call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the words "pending that" would make any difference. The Chair thinks it would be an automatic roll call. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and there were—yeas 155, nays 103, not voting 172, as follows:

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the address delivered by the President to-day before the final session of the Peace Conference may be inserted in the RECORD in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the address delivered by the President before the final session of the Peace Conference may be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE: Nearly three months ago it was my privilege to utter to you sincerest words of welcome to the Capital of our Republic, to suggest the spirit in which you were invited, and to intimate the atmosphere in which you were asked to confer. In a very general way, perhaps, I ventured to express a hope for the things toward which our aspirations led us.

To-day it is my greater privilege, and an even greater pleasure, to come to make acknowledgment. It is one of the supreme compensations of life to contemplate a worth-while accomplishment.

It can not be other than seemly for me, as the only Chief of Government so circumstanced as to be able to address the conference, to speak congratulations, and to offer the thanks of our Nation, our people; perhaps I dare volunteer to utter them for the world. My own gratification is beyond my capacity to express.

This conference has wrought a truly great achievement. It is hazardous sometimes to speak in superlatives, and I will be restrained. But I will say, with every confidence, that the faith plighted here to-day, kept in national honor, will mark the beginning of a new and better epoch in human progress.

Stripped to the simplest fact, what is the spectacle which has inspired a new hope for the world? Gathered about this table nine great nations of the earth—not all, to be sure, but those most directly concerned with the problems at hand—have met and have conferred on questions of great import and common concern, on problems menacing their peaceful relationship, on burdens threatening a common peril. In the revealing light of the public opinion of the world, without surrender of sovereignty, without impaired nationality or affronted national pride, a solution has been found in unanimity, and to-day's adjournment is marked by rejoicing in the things accomplished. If the world has hungered for new assurance, it may feast at the banquet which the conference has spread.

I am sure the people of the United States are supremely gratified, and yet there is scant appreciation how marvelously you have wrought. When the days were dragging and agreements were delayed, when there were obstacles within and hindrances without, few stopped to realize that here was a conference of sovereign powers where only unanimous agreement could be made the rule. Majorities could not decide without impinging national rights. There were no victors to command, no vanquished to yield. All had voluntarily to agree in translating the conscience of our civilization and give concrete expression to world opinion.

And you have agreed in spite of all difficulties, and the agreements are proclaimed to the world. No new standards of national honor have been sought, but the indictments of national dishonor have been drawn, and the world is ready to proclaim the odiousness of perfidy or infamy.

It is not pretended that the pursuit of peace and the limitations of armament are new conceits, or that the conference is a new conception either in settlement of war or in writing the conscience of international relationship. Indeed, it is not new to have met in the realization of war's supreme penalties. The Hague conventions are examples of the one, the conference of Vienna, of Berlin, of Versailles are outstanding instances of the other.

The Hague conventions were defeated by the antagonism of one strong power whose indisposition to cooperate and sustain led it to one of the supreme tragedies which have come to national eminence. Vienna and Berlin sought peace founded on the injustices of war and sowed the seeds of future conflict, and hatred was armed where confidence was stifled.

It is fair to say that human progress, the grown intimacy of international relationship, developed communication and transportation, attended by a directing world opinion, have set the stage more favorably here. You have met in that calm deliberation and that determined resolution which have made a just peace, in righteous relationship, its own best guaranty.

It has been the fortune of this conference to sit in a day far enough removed from war's bitterness, yet near enough to war's horrors, to gain the benefit of both the hatred of war and the yearning for peace. Too often, heretofore, the decades following such gatherings have been marked by the difficult undoing of their decisions. But your achievement is supreme because no seed of conflict has been sown; no reaction in regret or resentment ever can justify resort to arms.

It little matters what we appraise as the outstanding accomplishment. Any one of them alone would have justified the conference. But the whole achievement has so cleared the atmosphere that it will seem like breathing the refreshing air of a new morn of promise.

You have written the first deliberate and effective expression of great powers, in the consciousness of peace, of war's utter futility, and challenged the sanity of competitive preparation for each other's destruction. You have halted folly and lifted burdens, and revealed to the world that the one sure way to recover from the sorrow and ruin and staggering obligations of a world war is to end the strife in preparation for more of it, and turn human energies to the constructiveness of peace.

Not all the world is yet tranquilized. But here is the example, to imbue with new hope all who dwell in apprehension. At this table came understanding, and understanding brands armed conflict as abominable in the eyes of enlightened civilization.

I once believed in armed preparedness. I advocated it. But I have come now to believe there is a better preparedness in a public mind and a world opinion made ready to grant justice precisely as it exacts it. And justice is better served in conferences of peace than in conflicts at arms.

How simple it all has been. When you met here 12 weeks ago there was not a commitment, not an obligation, except that which each delegation owes to the Government commissioning it. But human service was calling, world conscience was impelling, and world opinion directing.

No intrigue, no offensive or defensive alliances, no involvements have wrought your agreements, but reasoning with each other to common understanding has made new relationships among Governments and peoples, new securities for peace, and new opportunities for achievement and attending happiness.

Here have been established the contacts of reason, here has come the inevitable understandings of face-to-face exchanges when passion does not inflame. The very atmosphere shamed national selfishness into retreat. Viewpoints were exchanged, differences composed, and you came to understand how common, after all, are human aspirations; how alike, indeed, and how easily reconcilable are our national aspirations; how sane and simple and satisfying to seek the relationships of peace and security.

When you first met I told you of our America's thought to seek less of armament and none of war; that we sought nothing which is another's, and we were unafraid, but that we wished to join you in doing that finer and nobler thing which no nation can do alone. We rejoice in the accomplishment.

It may be that the naval holiday here contracted will expire with the treaties, but I do not believe it. Those of us who live another decade are more likely to witness a growth of public opinion, strengthened by the new experience, which will make nations more concerned with living to the fulfillment of God's high intent than with agencies of warfare and destruction. Since this conference of nations has pointed with unanimity to the way of peace to-day, like conferences in the future, under appropriate conditions, and with aims both well conceived and definite, may illuminate the highways and byways of human activity. The torches of understanding have been lighted, and they ought to glow and encircle the globe.

Again, gentlemen of the conference, congratulations and the gratitude of the United States! To Belgium, to the British Empire, to China, to France, to Italy, to Japan, to the Netherlands, and to Portugal I can wish no more than the same feeling, which we experience, of honorable and honored contribution to happy human advancement, and a new sense of security in the righteous pursuits of peace and all attending good fortune.

From our own delegates I have known from time to time of your activities, and of the spirit of conciliation and adjustment, and the cheering readiness of all of you to strive for that unanimity so essential to accomplishment. Without it there would have been failure; with it you have heartened the world.

And I know our guests will pardon me while I make grateful acknowledgment to the American delegation—to you, Mr. Secretary Hughes; to you, Senator Lodge; to you, Senator Underwood; to you, Mr. Root; to all of you for your able and splendid and highly purposed and untiring endeavors in behalf of our Government and our people; and to our excellent advisory committee which gave to you so dependable a reflex of that American public opinion which charts the course of this Republic.

It is all so fine, so gratifying, so reassuring, so full of promise, that above the murmurings of a world sorrow not yet silenced, above the groans which come of excessive burdens not yet lifted, but now to be lightened, above the discouragements of a world yet struggling to find itself after surpassing upheaval, there is the note of rejoicing which is not alone ours or yours, or of all of us, but comes from the hearts of men of all the world.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent (on request of Mr. WILLIAMS) Mr. DENISON was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of illness.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on business of the Senate. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] on account of illness.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WATSON of Georgia] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senate will pardon me to make a statement, I will state the reason why I have moved that the offer of Mr. Ford to purchase the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals and to lease the dams at that point and pay the interest on the cost of construction be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for consideration and action. I realize, of course, that there are a number of legislative problems involved in the proposition and there are a number of points of reference.

The matter involves navigation and the committee having charge of that endeavor might say that it should go to that committee. It involves hydraulic power, and committees having charge of that class of legislation might claim that the proposition should be referred there. But it also involves the question of making nitrate. One might say that should carry it to the Committee on Military Affairs, because it involves a question of the national defense. But it also involves the question in times of peace of converting that nitrogen into fertilizers for the development of agriculture.

The question before the Senate is which is the prime object of the proposal? I ask the Senate to bear in mind that less than a year ago the same matter was before the Senate, but in a different form. Then it came here by bills reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry relating to all the propositions involved in the Henry Ford offer. The Senate acted favorably on the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, although unfortunately the bills were lost in the House of Representatives.

The reason why the matter previously went to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is apparent. It was sent there, so far as the bills were concerned, because the proponent of those bills, the Senator who introduced them, asked that they be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That Senator was the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Evidently he believed at that time that the Committee on Military Affairs should not have jurisdiction of the matter, but that its prime object was one of agriculture. I believe that myself, Mr. President. If you bear in mind the history of the legislation you go back to the national defense act, when the Government of the United States made an appropriation of $20,000,000 authorizing the President of the United States to select a dam or dams for the purpose of making nitrogen and to build a plant or plants for the purpose of converting air nitrogen, and the act stated that this should be done for the national defense in time of war and to make fertilizers to develop agriculture in time of peace.

The war clouds have rolled by. The law which was embodied in the national defense act is the law to-day; it is the law which governs this proposal. Now we are in times of peace, and the primary purpose of the development at Muscle Shoals is the production of nitrogen in order that the agriculture of this land may flourish. The action of the Senate heretofore has been to give jurisdiction of this matter to the Agricultural Committee. The report of the Agricultural Committee, both in reference to the nitrate plant and in reference to the building of the dams, was approved by a majority vote in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the able Senator from Alabama, who has already spoken of the possible reference of this matter to several committees, will also recall that at one time a measure dealing with the subject to the extent of $10,000,000 was referred to and acted upon by the Appropriations Committee. Now, waiving the question whether it is desired to use the plant at Muscle Shoals for the purpose of producing power and nitrates in this instance, it seems to me there will be involved to a large extent the question of appropriations. Also, it seems to me that about the first move to be made by any committee having charge of the subject would be to examine from a legal standpoint the question of the contract, and that would perhaps indicate the necessity of sending the matter to the Judiciary Committee. The Ford proposition and contract, as I understand, is to extend over a period of a hundred years. Has the Senator from Alabama taken that matter into consideration?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I know there are outstanding existing contracts. Under options on the part of the men who constructed the nitrate plant and one other minor plant they had the right within a year's time to purchase those plants. I do not say that their options have expired, but I do say that Secretary Weeks, more than six months ago, stated that he desired to turn these plants over to private endeavor instead of having them operated by public effort; and it was clearly a matter for the Secretary of War to consider when he had the Ford proposal before him. Therefore I do not think a legal question is now involved. If it be, I suppose that Secretary Weeks would have referred to the subject in his report, which he does not do. I am also advised that this report was passed on by the law officers of the War Department.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Alabama will pardon me, I was alluding more particularly to future contracts, extending for a period of a hundred years. Perhaps the matter may have had sufficient investigation on the part of the legal authorities of the Government, but it seems to me a very large question is involved as to the contract to which we may commit ourselves for the future.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I think that is not a legal question. I have not a doubt in my mind that the Congress of the United States may enter into this contract for a hundred years if it desires to do so.

Mr. WARREN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I repeat, it does not involve a legal question; the question for determination is as to whether or not it is a wise thing to do. I myself think it is a wise action to take under existing circumstances; but it is not a question which involves a legal equation; it is a question which involves a business proposition for consideration.

However, there is a better reason than any of these why the Agricultural Committee should be given jurisdiction of this matter. It is this: This subject has been before that committee, more or less, for the last three or four years; it has been acted on by the Committee on Agriculture within the last year. The members of that committee are informed upon the subject; they are acquainted with the questions which are involved. It is to be assumed that they are in a better position to pass on the matter, having considered all the other questions that are involved, than would be some new committee which must start from the bottom and work to the top, and which has not had the information or heard the witnesses in reference to the matter.

More than that, Mr. President, I believe that there is no more important question to the life of this Republic in the future than the question of furnishing the farmers of America in the days to come with an adequate and ample supply of nitrogen for the fertilization of the soil. There has grown up in this country an intense interest in this subject on the part of the agricultural classes. I know—and I can speak with authority, because I know it personally—that all the proponents of the development who are interested in the subject from an agricultural standpoint feel that this report should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

More than that, although this is a very small point in the consideration of the question, this plant and these works are located in my own State, and, while the project is national in its scope and involves a national problem, I think under all of the existing circumstances I should have a right to some voice in the matter of reference.

I realize that when it comes back to the Senate the question will have to be debated and decided on its merits; so that there can be but one question involved. As every Member of the Senate knows, I endeavored last year to secure favorable action on the proposal to make this enterprise a function of the United States Government, to be pursued as a governmental activity, but that proposal was rejected.

The Secretary of War, in whose jurisdiction it was, took the position that it should not be carried on by the Government but should be carried on by private individuals. He took affirmative action in calling for bids and requesting some one to operate this plant and carry on the work as an individual or as a corporation and not have it carried on by the Government. Now a proposal has been made, and the only question involved is whether the Congress is going to accept the proposal or reject it. Of course, if it is not accepted, then there may be other questions involved; but there is before us now one issue, and one issue only.

We can not amend Mr. Ford's offer, because we are not making the offer; he has made the offer; he has said what he will do, and it is up to Congress to say they will take it or leave it. It is not a question for the committee to work out as to future details; it is a question as to whether we are going to accept or reject the offer. I repeat, the Agriculture Committee has been fully informed on this matter. It is the great desire of those interested in agriculture to have this subject go to the Agriculture Committee, and I sincerely hope the Senate will sustain my motion to refer it to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean that the Congress is estopped from suggesting any modification of the proposal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That would be a rejection of the proposal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It might result in continued negotiations for a time. The Senator said that there was nothing for Congress to do but accept or reject the proposal absolutely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all I see that Congress can do, because if we amend the proposal that is a rejection of it. Of course, if the Senate desires to reject the proposal, the Secretary of War may continue negotiations, if he can, with Mr. Ford or somebody else; but this is not a legislative proposal; it is a proposal from an individual citizen of the United States, and we can not tell him how he shall make the proposal or submit the contract. He has offered a contract.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Congress might very well say, "We will accept this proposal on a certain condition not contained in the original proposal." Certainly the Senator would not care to assume the position that the Congress may not make a suggestion of that kind?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Congress has a right to make any suggestion it wants to make.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, but does not the proposal itself—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to make an observation. It will require unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the motion of the Senator from Alabama. Is there objection to the present consideration of the motion made by the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, just a moment. I had not yielded the floor. I will yield in just a moment; but the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was about to ask me a question, as I understood.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator from Alabama if the proposal itself did not contain the stipulation that it was not subject to any modification?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; and if it is modified it amounts to a rejection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. The Senator has stated, according to my recollection, that this matter has been previously before the Senate, and at that time it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And was reported back from that committee. Does the Senator know of any reason or has any reason been assigned why now it should be taken away from the Committee on Agriculture and sent to some other committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not; I think the Committee on Agriculture is entitled to consider the matter, and I hope very much it will be referred to that committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I appreciate the situation in its relation to the Senator from Alabama and his interest in the matter. Personally I am also very much interested in this proposition from the agricultural standpoint, possibly as much as any of the other Senators. I feel that properly and technically it should go to the Committee on Commerce. The primary purpose of the improvement is the development of navigation and of water power, although, of course, I realize that the primary purpose which it is hoped to accomplish under the proposition of Mr. Ford is the production of fertilizer with a resulting benefit to agriculture.

The proposition involves a change in the water-power law. It involves the development of water power primarily under different conditions from those imposed by that law. It involves the development of navigation. Both of these questions are dealt with by the Commerce Committee; and I think very clearly, under the rules and practices of the Senate, the bill should go to the Commerce Committee. I desire to say, however, that I am not going to be contentious over this matter. I appreciate the fact that this proposition has been dealt with and considered heretofore very largely from the agricultural standpoint, that that has been urged probably more than anything else, and that this proposition has the eyes of the people centered upon it now more from the agricultural standpoint than from any other.

As the Senator from Alabama says, this proposition from the fertilizer standpoint has been considered by the Agricultural Committee, and that committee probably has that phase of the problem better within its knowledge than any other committee. It may be assumed that as a general proposition it does not have the knowledge with reference to water power and water-power legislation or navigation that the Commerce Committee has; but I take it if the Agricultural Committee should report this matter, and its report should involve such material changes in water-power legislation or other matters as might affect navigation, if there was a desire to have the subject referred to the Commerce Committee to consider those phases of it, the Senator from Alabama would not make any serious objection, with the assurance, of course, that that committee would act promptly on those matters. It may not be deemed desirable or advisable, when the Agricultural Committee shall report, that this be done, so I am not going to interpose serious objection to the Senator's motion. I feel that the Agricultural Committee will look into this matter very carefully. I feel that it will protect the interests of the people, and promote the interest of the farmers of the country and of agriculture generally, with a due regard to the other interests of the country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to thank the Senator for the kindly attitude he takes in reference to the matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like an expression from the Senator with reference to the suggestion I have made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I would not want to do anything or say anything that would commit the proponents of the measure to delay if we have a favorable report; but I should be willing, of course, to make any reasonable agreement that could be promptly acted upon. When the matter comes back here, however, I do not think there will be a question of that kind involved.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not ask the Senator at this time to make any specific agreement. I know his fairness, and I am satisfied that he will act fairly upon the proposition as it confronts us at the time the report is made. So, Mr. President, while I have not had an opportunity to confer with any of the members of the committee, as the matter came up suddenly this morning, so far as I am concerned, as chairman of the Commerce Committee, I am not going to oppose the motion of the Senator from Alabama. I think the sooner we get action upon the matter the better. I think the matter ought to be acted upon promptly, so with that I shall not discuss it further.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the situation is that Mr. Ford has made a certain definite offer with reference to the whole subject, entitled:

Proposal of Henry Ford for the completion and leasing of the dams and hydroelectric power plants at Muscle Shoals, and for the purchase of nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco quarry, and the Gorgas Warrior River steam plant, all in the State of Alabama.

That offer has been transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War. It is now for Congress either to accept that offer or to reject it, or possibly to submit, as has been suggested by the Senator from New York, a resolution of acceptance with certain modifications, which, of course, would get us nowhere unless those modifications were acceptable to the party making the offer, Mr. Ford. There is, however, that alternative; and the Secretary of War recommends in his report that—

If Mr. Ford's proposal be accepted by Congress, I suggest there should be certain modifications made to safeguard the Government's interests. As heretofore stated, there should be some assurance that the contracts made by his proposed company will be carried out.

A resolution could be offered which would provide, for instance, that Mr. Ford should give a surety bond or something of that sort, which no doubt he would be willing to do, but other modifications he might not be willing to accept; and therefore I think primarily we should consider the matter from the standpoint of either accepting this offer or rejecting it. If the offer is accepted by Congress, that would place the matter in this position: Mr. Ford would proceed to organize his corporation, and the agreements, the instruments of contract, would be executed by him and by the agency of the Government—the Secretary of War, I presume—and after those contracts were executed, then would come the question of taking care of the situation. Having accepted the offer and having entered into the formal contract, it would be simply a question of executing and carrying out those contracts. If further legislation should be necessary in that respect, it undoubtedly could be had, because Congress would have committed itself to the acceptance of the offer.

The present motion is, as I understand, to refer to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the letter of the Secretary of War transmitting this offer to Congress. That committee has no matter before it in the way of a proposal by the Senate, or any bill to report, or any resolution to report. I think it would be in order, if the Senator from Alabama agrees to that—and I make no objection whatever to its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—that the proceedings should be instituted by a formal resolution, and I submit the following:

Joint resolution.

Resolved, etc., That the offer of Mr. Henry Ford, submitted to the Secretary of War and dated January 25, 1922, entitled "Proposal of Henry Ford for the completion and leasing of the dams and hydro-electric power plants at Muscle Shoals, and for the purchase of nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco quarry, and the Gorgas Warrior River steam plant, all in the State of Alabama," be, and the same is hereby, approved by Congress, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into and execute on behalf of the United States such appropriate instruments of contract as will effectuate the agreement in accordance with said offer.

That is something definite, which the committee can report out favorably or unfavorably or modified as they see fit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I think he is entirely right. Whatever committee has jurisdiction of this matter, if it makes a favorable report—as I hope it will, and expect it will—of course, it must report a resolution. I think the object of making this motion for a reference is to give jurisdiction to one committee of the Senate to take up the matter, and I think it would be very proper, whatever committee it goes to, for the Senator then to introduce his resolution and have it referred; but the Senate can not act on this resolution now, because it has to receive the consideration of the committee. It would be only a question of reference.

Mr. FLETCHER. Merely a question of reference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I suggest is that we take the vote on the question of referring the document which gives jurisdiction. Then the Senator can introduce his resolution, have it referred to the same committee, and they will have the resolution before them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was simply suggesting that the resolution might now be offered, and the whole referred to that committee, and the basis of action would be the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly, the Senator is right. Either the Senator's resolution or some resolution along that line must be reported by the committee, and it would be very proper for the Senator to introduce his resolution and have it referred; but that does not affect the action on this motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not mean for it to affect it, except to be in line with it, and as a basis for the reference, really.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to suggest to the Senator that the course he proposes seems to me to be at least unusual. Here is a matter to be referred to a committee for investigation and report. What is the use of a Senator having referred to the committee at the same time a proposed report for the committee to make in favor of the matter? Of course, another Senator may draw a resolution anticipating an adverse report of the committee and ask to have that referred to the committee.

Whichever way the committee decide the case; of course they have ability enough to draw their report and resolution, either to accept Mr. Ford's offer or to reject it, as the case may be; and I fail to see any effect from the resolution of the Senator from Florida. Of course, it in no way commits the Senate, any more than if I should offer a resolution that the offer of Mr. Ford should be rejected, and have that, together with the Senator's resolution, referred to the committee. Unless the Senator thinks the mere reading of his resolution will have a persuasive effect upon the intelligence and disposition of Senators, I can see no reason for its introduction.

Mr. FLETCHER. My idea was that the committees of the Senate usually act upon bills or resolutions. I thought that was a part of their function. Here is a resolution for them to act upon. They can report it out favorably or unfavorably or modify it as they see fit. It is perfectly in line with the practice and rules of the Senate to offer a resolution as a basis for the action of the committee to which the matter has been referred, and that is my object in offering this resolution. Merely referring a communication from the Secretary of War to a committee does not give the committee any rights except possibly to have hearings about it, but there is no proposal by Congress anywhere for them to act upon. Nobody has suggested a bill. Nobody has suggested a resolution. The committee are simply left to investigate the subject. Possibly they can report out a bill eventually; but why not offer something for them to act upon, and let it take its usual course? That is my idea about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, where a matter involving action by Congress in the way of the acceptance or rejection of a proposition is referred to a committee, of course the committee, when it reports, whether it recommends that the proposition be accepted or rejected, will report a resolution embodying the views of the committee for the action of the Congress. I have no objection to the Senator's drawing for the committee a resolution anticipating a favorable report, but if his resolution is referred I simply ask that I shall have the privilege of drawing a resolution reading, in substance:

Resolved, That the proposition of Mr. Ford is hereby rejected.

And have them both referred to the committee for such aid as they may furnish to the committee.

I have no predilections about the matter. I know little about it. I do not know how I should vote upon the subject if it were here now, and I do not think the drawing of a resolution pro or con by either the Senator from Florida or myself would aid the committee or shed any light upon the subject; but if the Senator's resolution goes to the committee I want to offer one, and shall offer one, to the effect that the committee recommend the rejection of the offer without having heard any evidence upon it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that both Senators will offer their resolutions, if the matter is to be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It would contribute to the gaiety of nations.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; because, if the Senator from Florida offers his resolution, the Senator from Connecticut, fearing, perhaps, that the committee would be influenced by the resolution of the Senator from Florida, clothed in such beautiful language, would himself try to go one better by offering a negative proposition, and thus counteract the other resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was under the impression that the whole Senate had already been influenced by it.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to offset it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's resolution will probably offset all that. But, Mr. President, I would not have anything to say on this question if it were not that I do not want any misunderstanding, if the proposal is to go to the Committee on Agriculture. I think, as a matter of fact, that is where it belongs, although it could very appropriately go to the Committee on Military Affairs. In my judgment, it ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture, first, because the fundamental proposition involved in the Muscle Shoals question, at least in times of peace, is the making of fertilizers for farmers. That is really the main object to be attained.

The only other object involved is to provide a means for making explosives in time of war. So it seems to me that either the Committee on Agriculture or the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs should have jurisdiction. The question of increasing or improving the navigability of the river is only incidental. That will follow as a matter of course when the dams are constructed, and the only thing necessary to bring that about is to see, when the dams are constructed, that the proper gates are made and navigation protected.

There is another reason why the proposal ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture, and that is because in a previous Congress that committee gave a great deal of consideration to the question. At that time the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was a member of the committee and assisted the committee by his attendance upon those hearings. He is now the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, so that it would not make any difference, as far as one member at least is concerned, where the matter went as between those two committees.

At the time the hearings took place I was sick and was not able to attend more than one of the meetings, but the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, which extended over a considerable time, were quite exhaustive, and the members of that committee were enabled to obtain a knowledge of the matter which was very desirable and, in fact, necessary for a proper consideration of the subject.

But I do not want any misunderstanding which might come about from the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that it might go to the Committee on Agriculture with the understanding that when it came back, if the Committee on Agriculture had not done the right thing, it might go to some other committee. I do not want any such understanding. If it can not go to that committee with the understanding that it will have the same jurisdiction every other committee has of every bill or resolution or proposition, then take it away from them to begin with.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I know the Senator does not want to put me in a false light. I did not intend to give the impression that it should go to the Committee on Agriculture with that understanding. I merely made that as a suggestion, that is all. I disclaim any intention to have it understood that it was going to the Committee on Agriculture with any understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to have it understood that when it goes to that committee it goes as anything else goes to a committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. That the committee is absolutely free, without any strings to it whatever; and when it comes back the Senate can do what it pleases with it, of course.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. I consider the proposition as one of great importance, involving a great deal of money, and involving a policy which, under the circumstances, it is very difficult to decide upon. I confess that if it were left to me to decide today, I would not be able to tell whether I was in favor of accepting Mr. Ford's proposition or rejecting it, although I have read it twice. I do not believe the committee ought to be confined to saying yes or no to the proposition. It may be that upon a careful investigation of the question the committee will reach the conclusion that it ought to be accepted, if at all, with modifications.

In other words, Mr. Ford has made a proposition to us. It may be that when Congress gets through with the consideration of it, we may want to make a counterproposition to him, which he may be willing to accept. It has been my idea that he ought to be called before the committee and his testimony taken, and that the committee ought to go into the subject rather in detail. I believe the committee ought to send a subcommittee to the Muscle Shoals plant and make a physical examination of the property on the ground. While none of the committee are technical engineers, they can always get a better idea of a proposition when they have been out over the ground and have examined it, the same as a lawyer would go out and look over the ground if he were about to try a lawsuit in which the topography of the country or the construction of buildings might in any way become directly or indirectly a matter in issue.

Having said this much, and having, I think, with the explanation made by the Senator from Washington, cleared the atmosphere, I desire to add that if it is referred to the Committee on Agriculture, that committee should go into it fully, and when it comes back, unless reasons can be given to the contrary, there ought to be a final determination of it. I have not anything else to say, except that the Committee on Agriculture has a great deal to do. It now has hearings running which will take practically all their time nearly every day, and as far as I am personally concerned, I would be glad to be relieved of any additional work that might come to the committee on this account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution at this time?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will first let the vote be taken on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, and then I will ask unanimous consent to introduce the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to refer the communication just laid before the Senate to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For its consideration and action.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in view of one or two observations made by the Senator from Nebraska, perhaps it would not be out of place for me to say just a word.

In spite of the fact that this matter has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, I for one, speaking only for myself, do not believe it should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. May I say, also, in partial correction of something the Senator from Nebraska stated a moment ago, that I am no longer a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly, the Senator is not now a member of the committee. I stated that while the Senator was a member of that committee he participated in the hearings, and as he is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the more reason would exist, so far as he is concerned, at least, for sending it to his committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is one phase of this question I would like to discuss for just a moment. As I understand the proposed contract, the company to be formed under its terms is to proceed with the completion of the locks and the dams at a cost estimated at something over $40,000,000, to be paid for by the Government of the United States. Other provisions are included in the agreement, one that the company shall pay a certain amount of interest annually to the Government, which, taken in the aggregate, I understand, will amortize finally the expenditure made by the United States Government.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask one question? I have not read the proposition. Is it proposed that the Government shall advance $40,000,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will read paragraph 2.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the object was to get rid of it, as far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Paragraph 2 of the offer reads as follows:

2. The company shall complete for the United States the construction work on Dam No. 2, its locks, power house, and all necessary equipment, all in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared or to be prepared or approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and progressively install the hydroelectric equipment in said power house adequate for generating approximately 600,000 horsepower, all the work aforesaid to be performed as speedily as possible at actual cost and without profit to the company, it being understood that the necessary lands and flowage rights, including lands for railway and terminal connections, have been or will be acquired by the United States.

The Senator from Alabama will correct me if I am in error, but I think the proposal is that the Government shall proceed, using the company as its agent in a sense, to complete the power installation and that the Government shall pay for it. I am not criticizing that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not go into a discussion of the merits of the question, because this is a mere matter of reference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not talking about the merits, either.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the proposal, it is that Mr. Henry Ford shall pay the entire cost of completing these dams through a period of 100 years, and that he shall pay 4 per cent interest on the money during that time; in other words, that the dams shall be built by Mr. Ford, that the Government shall advance the money in building them, and that Mr. Ford shall return all the money to be paid in the future for the building of the dams by annual installments, going over 100 years, creating an amortization fund in that way, and in addition to that 4 per cent interest on the money which the Government is out. In other words, at the end of 100 years, if this contract is carried out, the Government will be out nothing, will get the dams back as the sole owner of them, and will have had 4 per cent interest on the use of the money.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think my original statement was not inaccurate that the Government is to advance the money for the completion of this project.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the point I wanted to bring out. We have a Budget system now. Just how the Senate will reorganize its committee system to meet it I do not know, but it is obvious that something will have to be done in order to meet the conditions imposed upon the Senate by another legislative body, coupled with the new Budget system.

The problem in the future for Congress and for the Senate, if this agreement shall be accepted, will be the appropriations to be made from time to time for the completion of the project, and I think it inevitable that more than one committee of the Senate will eventually be called upon to exercise jurisdiction, for those appropriations, if they follow the course which has been followed for many years, will emanate from the Committee on Appropriations and not from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or from the Committee on Military Affairs if in the first instance the last-named committee should be given jurisdiction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, of course that will occur in every legislative endeavor. The creative legislation coming from the Committee on Military Affairs, for instance, to buy new guns will be legislative, but if the policy of the House is pursued, then it must go to an Appropriations Committee after the legislation is passed. At present this is a legislative matter. After the legislative status is determined and Congress has determined whether it will or will not accept Mr. Ford's offer, then, if it accepts it, it may involve, as a further step, the question how it will be paid for.

I am not trying to foreclose the action of the committee. So far as my own judgment is concerned, in a matter of this kind, if I were the committee, I would report in favor of selling bonds to the extent requisite to finance the proposition and allow the amortization fund to take care of those bonds, and not make any strain on the Treasury at all. It can be done readily without any strain on the Treasury whatever; but that is a question for future determination.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not intend to discuss the ways and means of carrying on the proposition. I merely wanted to make the observation that there is just one committee of the Senate to-day which, in my humble judgment, is bound to assume eventually jurisdiction in whole or in part of the completion of the contract, and that is the Committee on Appropriations. It is bound to come to that committee in one form or another next year or the year thereafter. It may be inaugurated in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on what we call a legislative program, but primarily it is a financial and fiscal problem. However, I do not speak for the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator's statement, then, would apply to any legislative problem that ultimately contemplates an appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am only giving my own opinion, as I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee. The Senator would not contend that it would be unusual to refer it to the Appropriations Committee to-day, because the Appropriations Committee has also delved into this very problem, as the Senator well knows. Extensive hearings were held before it and the financial and fiscal side of it was particularly before that committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, the proposition of the legislative or creative status is no different from what it is in reference to a dozen other matters. Before the Rules Committee, of which I am a member, there is a resolution pending to put the entire control of appropriations in the Appropriations Committee. If that is adopted, undoubtedly all legislative jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee ought to be jealously taken away.

This is merely a preliminary legislative consideration, and essentially it should not go to the Appropriations Committee before its legislative status is first determined. Then I concede that unless we provide for an issue of bonds, ultimately the money to pay for the legislative contract which Congress makes must come through the Appropriations Committee, but that is a subsequent matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama to refer the communication of the Secretary of War, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for its consideration and report.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce the joint resolution which I have heretofore mentioned. I ask that it be read at length and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) approving the offer of Mr. Henry Ford of January 25, 1922, for the completion and leasing of the dams and hydroelectric power plants at Muscle Shoals and for the purchase of nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco quarry, and the Gorgas Warrior River steam plant, all in the State of Alabama, was read the first time by title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the offer of Mr. Henry Ford, submitted to the Secretary of War, and dated January 25, 1922, entitled "Proposal of Henry Ford for the completion and leasing of the dams and hydroelectric power plants at Muscle Shoals and for the purchase of nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant No. 2, the Waco quarry, and the Gorgas Warrior River steam plant, all in the State of Alabama," be, and the same is hereby, approved by Congress, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into and execute on behalf of the United States such appropriate instruments of contract as will effectuate the agreement in accordance with said offer.

CROP INSURANCE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, early in January Mr. Theodore H. Price, the editor of Commerce and Finance—a prominent financial publication of New York City—suggested the study of crop insurance as a remedy for the agricultural situation. Shortly after he made that suggestion I introduced a resolution authorizing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to investigate the practicability and desirability of a bureau of crop insurance, to be operated by the United States Government or otherwise, as might be found desirable. I ask to have that resolution set out at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 214) submitted by Mr. SHEPPARD on January 18, 1922, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the practicability and desirability of a bureau of crop insurance, to be operated by the United States Government or otherwise, as may be found desirable.

Mr. SHEPPARD. When the agricultural conference assembled in Washington on January 23, 1922, Mr. Price submitted to the conference a paper on the subject of crop insurance which I deem to be of great interest, especially at this time. I ask now to have that paper set out in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CROP INSURANCE—IS IT FEASIBLE?

[By Theo. H. Price, editor of Commerce and Finance, a paper submitted at the agricultural conference convened at the instance of the President in Washington, Jan. 23, 1922.]

In my study of the agricultural problem that we are asked to consider I find myself asking whether a partial solution of it is not to be had by a resort to crop insurance. I submit the suggestion in the form of a question rather than as a recommendation, because it is plain that much thought and investigation will be required to determine whether the hazards of agriculture are insurable. During the last two centuries the principle of insurance has been greatly extended in its application. The first "underwriters" were the merchants who wrote their names under an agreement to share the marine risks and losses to which the ships and cargoes of their fellow merchants were subject.

The business of fire insurance was next developed. Then, as the law of probabilities became better understood, life insurance began to be written, and the business has grown until in the United States alone there are 40,000,000 policyholders in life insurance companies or associations whose resources are in excess of $7,000,000,000. No one will deny the benefits of life insurance.

After life insurance came accident insurance and credit insurance, and now we can insure against losses caused by burglary, defalcation, rain, snow, hail, and tornado, as well as against war, unemployment, old age, strikes, and many other ills or accidents of life. It is said that at Lloyds in London policies have been written that called for the payment of a "total loss" to parents to whom twins were born, and just before the disarmament congress met in Washington the New York Times reported that 15 per cent was paid at Lloyds to insure that the British West Indies would not be surrendered to the United States by or before December 31, 1922, in full or partial payment of Great Britain's debt to this country.

CROP FAILURES CAUSE NATIONAL CRISES.

From a very remarkable essay upon "War and Insurance," written by the late Prof. Josiah Royce, of Harvard, just after the outbreak of the World War in 1914, I quote the following passages:

"Experience shows that the insurance principle comes to be more and more used and useful in modern affairs. Not only does it serve the ends of individuals or of special groups of individuals, it tends more and more both to pervade and to transform our modern social order. It brings into new syntheses not merely pure and applied science but private and public interests, individual prudence, and a large regard for the general welfare, thrift, and charity. It discourages recklessness and gambling. It contributes to the sense of stability. It quiets fears and encourages faithfulness.

"Floods, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, and volcanoes may interfere in various fashions with the economic as well as with the rest of the social life of the peoples thus afflicted. Apart from actual famines, the considerable failure of their crops may impair, for a season, the normal supplies of individual nations. Internal crises, social and political, may interrupt their healthy development in ways involving not only moral disasters but heavy expenses. Such evils come upon various nations with irregularly recurrent, but also with widely different weight and seriousness. Only a vast and long continued collection and an exceedingly difficult statistical analysis of the facts regarding such calamities could determine the regularities which a sufficiently large number of instances of national disaster would be, if properly studied, certain to show. Such regularities, however, if once discovered, would furnish an 'actuarial basis' upon which an insurance of individual nations against such risks could conceivably be undertaken."

And in the eleventh edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, in the article upon "Insurance," written by Charlton Thomas Lewis, Ph. D., a great authority upon the subject, I find these words:

"The value of insurance as an institution can not be measured by figures. No direct balance sheet of profit and loss can exhibit its utility. The insurance contract produces no wealth. It represents only expenditure. If a thousand men insure themselves against any contingency, then, whether or not the dreaded event occurs to any, they will in the aggregate be poorer, as the direct result, by the exact cost of the machinery for effecting it. The distribution of property is changed, its sum is not increased. But the results in the social economy, the substitution of reasonable foresight and confidence for apprehension, and the sense of hazard, the large elimination of chance from business and conduct have a supreme value. The direct contribution of insurance to civilization is made not in visible wealth but in the intangible and immeasurable forces of character on which civilization itself is founded. It is preeminently a modern institution. Some two centuries ago it had begun to influence centers of trade, but the mass of civilized men had no conception of its meaning. Its general application and popular acceptance began within the first half of the nineteenth century, and its commercial and social importance have multiplied a hundredfold within living memory. It has done more than all gifts of impulsive charity to foster a sense of human brotherhood and of common interests. It has done more than all repressive legislation to destroy the gambling spirit. It is impossible to conceive of our civilization in its full vigor and progressive power without this principle, which unites the fundamental law of practical economy, that he best serves humanity who best serves himself, with the golden rule of religion, "Bear ye one another's burdens."

INSURANCE THE TRUE SOCIALISM.

It might almost be said that if insurance were universal and included all the hazards of life it would be a practicable form of socialism, for it distributes the losses of the few among the many without diminishing the incentive to individual effort. But the question is, Can it be applied to the hazards of agriculture and would the Government be justified in undertaking it? We all know that one of the farmer's greatest difficulties is that he is compelled to be a speculator and to take risks that are not calculable. He is, in fact, a gambler against his will, for gambling is defined as hazard without calculation in contradistinction to speculation, which is hazard with calculation. The farmer must cultivate his land or see it go to waste. He has to plant some crops, such as winter wheat, in the autumn and others in the spring, but he can not have any assurance of the prices that will be obtained for them 6 or 10 months later. He is, moreover, exposed to the hazards of the weather and innumerable agricultural pests in the interval.

The merchant who is not reasonably certain that he can sell goods will not buy them or will reduce his inventories, and the manufacturer who is not assured of a profitable market for his product will shut down his factory and let his labor remain idle. But the farmer can not follow these examples. He has to plant his land at planting time or allow his investment to remain idle and deteriorate for a year.

If he decides to plant he will probably become a borrower on obligations that mature concurrently with his crop. The whole financial system of the northern hemisphere is organized upon a plan which contemplates an autumnal liquidation of agricultural debts. Within one or two months the farmer is compelled to sell the crops that represent the labor of the year just ended and the world's consumption for another year just commencing. The result is congestion and a buyers' market, in which the seller is at a great disadvantage.

What is the remedy? Surely there must be one. If it is to be found in crop insurance it should be speedily applied.

CROP INSURANCE NOT A NOVELTY.

Crop insurance is not a new idea. At least two joint-stock fire insurance companies and several mutuals have tried it, but they had no experience upon which to base rates and found that in order to get a fair average they would have to blindly accept risks so large that their capital might be jeopardized. Even to those who know but little about the science of underwriting it is plain that a very large number of widely scattered crops would have to be insured before the probable percentage of loss could be ascertained.

A rate so high that it would absolutely protect the insurer would be regarded as extortionate and no one would take out a policy, while a rate that was too low might bankrupt the underwriter if he did a large business or had many risks in one locality.

Then there is the question of determining or measuring the farmer's loss. Manifestly it would be unwise to allow him to insure his crop for any valuation he chose to put upon it. An overvaluation would be an incentive to neglect and extravagance and would lead to the presentation of many unfair or fictitious claims. On the other hand, an undervaluation would not give the protection required.

In so far as any rule has been applied by those companies who have written crop insurance the practice seems to have been to insure the actual cost of production up to a certain maximum per acre and to require that the farmer insured must furnish satisfactory proof that the amount claimed has been actually expended.

In some cases crop policies have also contained a provision making the farmer a coinsurer for 20 per cent of the risk, so that he would have an additional incentive to avoid loss. The price of the crop insured at planting time is another factor that must be taken into consideration if the indemnity provided is to cover a possible deficiency between the proceeds finally realized at harvest time and the ascertained cost of production.

It seems reasonable to assume that if prices were low when the crop was being sown the risk would be less than if prices were high. The cost of production would be smaller and the chance of an advance in values that would offset crop failure would be greater. As a generalization, therefore, we may conclude that rates ought to have a direct relation to the prevailing values for agricultural products when the policies were written. But in its other aspects the problem is not so simple.

FARM SURVEY PRACTICABLE.

The cost of producing a crop varies in different regions or on different lands. In the Atlantic States fertilizer is required to produce a good cotton crop. In Texas fertilizer is not used. The cost of labor also varies in different sections.

These are factors that would have to be taken into consideration in determining the insurable maximum of production costs.

It might be necessary to have each insured farm surveyed in order to fix rates and insurable values fairly. This would seem to involve an appalling amount of detail; but does it? Every building in almost every city and town of the United States has been surveyed in the interest of the fire insurance companies.

In most fire insurance offices there are to be found huge books of maps on which the area, height, construction, fire exposure, and hazards of every building in every city of the United States and Canada are accurately set forth. These maps are kept up to date by the company which issues them. The corrections are made by pasting the maps of new buildings over those which have been demolished.

According to the last census there are 6,448,336 farms in the United States. The number of buildings in our cities is not known, but New York City alone has over 600,000, and the total in all cities is probably well over 6,000,000. If they can be mapped as they are, the feat of surveying the farms would not seem so difficult and the information in regard to soil, area, and productivity thus made available would be invaluable.

With it as a basis equitable rates for writing crop insurance could be speedily established, and, with a crop insurance policy added to the other security that a farmer can offer, his financial problem would be much simplified.

The general use of crop insurance would benefit the farmer and the country in many other ways upon which it is not now necessary to elaborate. The fact that the farmer could if he chose protect himself against the great risks and ruinous losses to which he is now exposed is a sufficient reason for considering whether the Government ought not to provide the machinery and credit requisite if crop insurance on a large scale is to be made immediately available.

Most people are wisely opposed to having the Government enter any business that its citizens can handle, but here is a business that private capital can not undertake because of its novelty and magnitude. Would it not therefore be well for the President or Congress to immediately appoint a committee to make a careful study of the subject with a view of ascertaining whether it would be practicable and expedient for the Government to establish a crop insurance bureau from which the farmer could buy policies that would indemnify him for his actual and reasonable expenditure and from which, after a few years, the larger insurance companies who were willing to do the business could obtain data upon which to base rates?

WAR RISK INSURANCE PROFIT $17,000,000.

Shortly after the outbreak of the war on the 1st of August, 1914, the British Government undertook to insure the marine war risks to which vessels and cargoes under its flag were subject. Almost concurrently, the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. William G. McAdoo, asked Congress for authority to organize an American war risk insurance bureau for insuring hulls and cargoes under the American flag. The necessary legislation providing an initial fund of $5,000,000 was passed. The bureau was organized and was functioning by the 2d of September, 1914. It continued in existence until the end of the war. Its record is remarkable.

The total of the policies issued was $2,250,000,000. The premiums received amounted to $46,000,000, and the losses paid were $29,000,000, leaving a profit of $17,000,000. The expense of conducting this enormous business for the four years was only $165,000, or hardly more than one-third of 1 per cent upon the premiums received. When compared with the cost of conducting the insurance business under private auspices these figures seem to be almost incredible and they are an effective refutation of the frequently repeated assertion that Government management is always inefficient and extravagant.

It is, however, only fair to say that the bureau had the advantage of being able to commandeer the services of some of the ablest underwriters in America. Its director was William C. De Lanoy and its advisory board consisted of Hendon Chubb, William N. Davey, and William R. Hedge. For little or nothing these men gave their time to the work as a war duty, and while the great success of the bureau was largely due to the authority and credit of the Government it would be uncandid not to recognize the share that those named and many others had in the results achieved. As the business grew Congress appropriated a further $45,000,000 as additional working capital for the bureau, but not a dollar of the total of $50,000,000 put at its disposal was ever drawn, as almost from the first the premiums received exceeded the losses and expenses incurred.

I have been unable to obtain exact information with regard to the insurance business conducted by the British Government, but those that are "in the know" believe that it was also highly profitable and it is generally admitted that both the American and the British bureaus rendered a very substantial and necessary service to the shipping and trade of the respective nations.

IF SHIPS, WHY NOT CROPS?

In an article published in the New York Times of Monday, December 26, 1921, advocating a ship subsidy there is included a proposal that "the Government should create a nonprofit making corporation to insure its own ships and to offer hull insurance at cost to privately owned American vessels." It is explained that "for the organization of a nonprofit making insurance corporation a $10,000,000 loan will be necessary" and that the cost of handling cargo insurance is estimated at about $1,000,000 for the first year and a decreasing amount each year thereafter, the loss ultimately vanishing.

If the Government is willing to do this for shipping it ought not to hesitate in doing at least as much if not more for our infinitely more important agricultural industry, and I earnestly recommend the idea to its consideration.

The difficulties that seem so great in prospect would, I believe, disappear in practice, and it is highly probable that after the first year or two the business would show a profit and produce an income that would more than pay the cost of conducting it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The conference itself then passed a resolution on the subject, urging that an investigation be made, and I ask to have the resolution set out in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 25, 1922.

REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL INSURANCE.

Whereas the Government through scientific research has provided safeguards for agriculture and the live-stock industry against plant and animal disease; and

Whereas farmers are subject to the hazard of loss from insect depredation or other pests, or loss from the elements, against which they have no present means of protection; and

Whereas the furnishing of such protection would greatly stabilize and materially improve the credit risk of our national agriculture: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this National Conference on Agriculture recommends that the United States Congress take steps to investigate the subject of crop insurance with the view of determining the practicability or expediency of creating a crop insurance bureau.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. NORRIS, has kindly consented to hold a hearing on the resolution S. Res. 214, and this hearing will occur at an early date.

PETITIONS.

Mr. NELSON presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the president and members of the faculty of Augsburg Seminary, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying that investigation be made of alleged political and trust activities of the film interests, and also that the Senate concur in the so-called Walsh amendment to bar race-gambling tips, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN submitted a conference report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20 and 21.

F. E. WARREN,

W. L. JONES,

WM. J. HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,

WALTER W. MAGEE,

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report just read, and I move its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question or two before consent is given. I wish to ask the Senator first what was done with the appropriation for the archives building?

Mr. WARREN. The item making appropriation for the archives building and the item making appropriation for vaults in the Treasury Department were lost. The Senate conferees were compelled finally to concede the striking out of those items. The report now presented is a final report. We have already had a partial report, in which the House receded upon various amendments, but the two amendments from which the Senate conferees were finally compelled to recede are the items covering the two buildings, one a million dollars for new vaults in the United States Treasury and the other a half million dollars for a site, preparing the land, and so forth, for an archives building.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not help believing that there has been a serious mistake made on the part of the House in not agreeing to the appropriation of $500,000 for the purchase of the land upon which to erect an archives building.

When I appeared before the conference there was not a member of the conference who did not recognize the fact that there ought to be an archives building. But we are told that no appropriation shall be made by Congress toward the erection of an archives building until there is a general public buildings bill, and then it can be included in that bill. The Government has purchased a site in one particular State, and there was not money enough appropriated to erect a post-office building, so this great question of preserving the records of the Government of the United States is to wait until Congress will give the necessary amount of money for the erection of that post-office building.

So far as I am concerned, as chairman of the Public Buildings Commission, I desire to say now that I shall assume no further responsibility for the safekeeping of the Government records. I have told the Senate what the conditions are. I desire to say now that there is not a Senator or a Congressman who will take the time to visit the departments of our Government and see the condition the records are in who would hesitate a minute to vote to appropriate money for the erection of the proper building. So if within the next year or two some of the most valuable Government records are destroyed by fire I want the responsibility to rest where it belongs, and that will not be with the Senate of the United States. The Senate did its duty in making provision for purchasing the land, but now we are told we can not have it until we provide for a general public buildings bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I saw some report, and I wish to be advised whether the report was correct or not, that the opposition of the House was not upon the ground stated by my colleague, but rather upon the ground that the Government of the United States owned a large amount of unoccupied real estate in the District, and that the House was entirely willing to vote a sufficient amount for the building, but they were not willing to vote for the purchase of additional land, which they thought would inure to the benefit of real estate owners in the District. If that report is wrong, I shall be very glad to be informed.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that there is nothing whatever in the claim. If we put this building up on the Mall, where some are talking about erecting it, we could not build a plain, substantial building, such as the commission wants to build, one that will stand for a hundred or more years and the cost of which would not be largely in polished columns and marble floors. What we want is a building where we can keep the records in a fireproof place, and that is all we want. If it were put upon the Mall, where some are talking about erecting it, the building would cost twice as much as we would be able to complete it for on the land where we desire to put the building, because it would be necessary on the Mall to erect a much more expensive building than is really necessary. If I owned the whole thing myself, if I were able to raise every dollar of the money, if I owned every foot of land that the Government of the United States owns in the District and did not own that which we desire to purchase, from a business standpoint I would purchase that land and build the necessary building, and the kind of building desired, because by so doing I would save at least $500,000 to the Government, and perhaps $1,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to remind the Senator that the Senate has not yet given its consent for the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize the condition and I know that the report will have to be adopted. The House has already voted upon it. I know the attitude of the House. I am not going to object to the consideration of the conference report. All I rose to say was simply that I wash my hands of any responsibility hereafter if anything should happen to the Government records. We have them in cubby-holes all over Washington, we have them in New York, we have them in other places. Many of the most valuable records—records that could not possibly be replaced for any amount of money—are in danger to-day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I simply rose to inquire if the unfinished business is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Wyoming to consider the conference report is now before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I have to say. I say, again, that I am not going to object to the report, but I think there was an awful mistake made when the House insisted upon striking that particular item out of the appropriation bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my understanding of the procedure in the consideration of the archives building amendment is that the conferees on the part of the House contended that it is not authorized by law, and under that contention additional legislation being necessary, it was submitted to a vote of the House of Representatives. I noticed in the Record that it was argued upon the submission of the question that there is no law authorizing the appropriation.

It seems even those gentlemen who claimed that it was authorized based their argument entirely upon the original archives building act which was passed in 1914, and that they overlooked the fact existing subsequent to the enactment of the general public buildings act of 1914, which included in its provisions, among provisions for a number of other buildings, an authorization for an archives building specifying certain conditions and certain qualities which the building should have and under which it should be erected. Subsequent to that time, because the question arose as to whether or not the original act really authorized the building, and in order to remove any doubt on that subject, Congress passed a supplemental act in which, in the most specific language that could be used, employing the word "authorized," it was expressly provided that the archives building was thereby authorized. In pursuance of the terms of the original act of 1914 which provided for a commission for the selection of the site, on which the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives had places, and including certain members of the Cabinet, the Secretary of the Treasury having been authorized to acquire a site, my opinion is that under the terms of that act, if strictly and fairly construed, the Secretary of the Treasury could bind Congress on a contract for this property, because he was authorized to acquire it.

Then it would simply be a question of whether or not Congress should fulfill its obligations in connection with the property which he had acquired. He selected this particular site under that authority, and it was approved by the commission over the signatures of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice President of the United States. Furthermore, that action was in accordance and in harmony with the recommendations of a special public buildings commission, which, upon an investigation of the need of the Government for public buildings in the District of Columbia, dealt in one of the sections of its report with the question of an archives building and recommended the particular site for which the appropriation contained in this bill was intended; and the special archives building commission, to which I referred a moment ago, adopted the recommendations of the general Public Buildings Commission in the selection of this site.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think that the Government owns property in the District of Columbia sufficient in area and properly and conveniently situated for an archives building and all other public buildings without acquiring any more sites?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not agree with the Senator from Mississippi in that respect. A great deal of the property which the Government does own is intended to be kept as open property, and it should not be encumbered with buildings of any kind. For instance, there is an open space, which I believe is owned by the Government, lying between the Senate Office Building and the Union Station. I would much prefer that that remain open and that it be enjoyed by the citizens as a piece of open land.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana demands the regular order. The regular order is the unfinished business. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to House bill 2373.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not yielded the floor. I want to complete what I was saying in regard to the archives building.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington just said something about open space which ought not to be encumbered with buildings. While I am not a professional esthete or an artist, I say that open spaces with buildings in them, if the buildings are appropriate and beautiful, are not at all encumbered by the buildings; they are beautified by them; and that there ought not to be any great open spaces outside of the public playgrounds and parks of cities without some building in them. Nothing more beautifies a square in a city than a building in the center of it and a nice fountain along with it. Each one of the squares between here and the Union Railway Station ought to have somewhere near the center of it a beautiful building in keeping with the architecture of the city of Washington, which is the old republican architecture of Greece and Rome; and so far from encumbering a site it would improve it in every possible sense. It is a combination of utility with beauty that recommends itself to my mind very much.

Not only have we open spaces between the Capitol and the Union Station but we have other spaces which we have condemned long ago, on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue, for example, which we can put into service at some time. I remember, Mr. President, when it was objected that the new Pension Bureau Building, in Judiciary Square, would ruin the square, but if the building placed there had been a beautiful building it would not have done it. However, unfortunately, the people who had charge of the architecture at the time erected a brick barn there instead of a really beautiful classical building. Even the brick barn, however, did not deface the square. It has added immensely to its utility, of course, but outside of that it has not destroyed its beauty. Just as monuments are placed in squares to beautify them, so, a fortiori, if a beautiful building be placed in a square, the square is still more beautified.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I realize the good taste of the Senator from Mississippi, and it is merely a matter of taste. The practical object we have in view in this instance, however, is getting an archives building. I do not agree with the Senator from Mississippi about the use to be made of the parks and open spaces in the city. I would rather have grass and trees in the public parks. That, however, is aside from the present question. If there is no other means of getting an archives building, I will agree with the Senator from Mississippi that we build it in the middle of one of the public parks, because it is essential that we should have an archives building.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not wish to have the archives building erected in the center of a public park.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let us build it somewhere; that is the proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This appropriation did not specify the site at all; and if the conference committee was of the opinion which the Senator from Mississippi holds, that the archives building should be erected upon land which the Government already owns, then they could have somewhat changed the amendment and provided for an appropriation for the erection of the building upon land which the Government already owns and specified the land. That is a mere matter of detail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as I understand what the Senator is contending for—perhaps I am mistaken, as my hearing is not so acute as it has been—is that we should acquire the land?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That means to purchase additional land and to go outside of the areas already owned by the Government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was my proposition; but I was adding to it that, if there is objection to acquiring the land, in order to secure the main object, which is an archives building, I am perfectly willing as one Member of Congress to forego the plan to acquire new land and to accept the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi and to erect the building upon land which the Government already owns.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But if we pass a bill which contains a provision for acquiring land, then the Government would be compelled to acquire it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am stating to the Senator from Mississippi that if there is objection to that language some other language may be substituted for it—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The main object to secure the erection of a building for the uses which have been described and which everybody realizes are quite pressing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator to hand me the bill and I will suggest an amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just one moment. I merely wish to call attention, Mr. President, further to the fact that I think on three separate occasions the Senate has attached amendments to appropriation bills providing for an archives building, and I sincerely trust it will continue to do so, and that at some time when the appropriation bills come back here from the House of Representatives the Senate will make a stand for an appropriation of money for the erection of an archives building, either on Government land or upon land to be acquired for that purpose, and that the deplorable condition in which the records of the Government are now placed will be done away with. It is essential not only that the archives should be accessible and available for examination on the part of those who desire to examine them to secure the information which they contain or for historical research, but, in addition, that the waste and possibility of destruction by fire, by moisture, by dryness, and by heat, under which they are crumbling away, shall be stopped, and that the proper care of these invaluable records of the Government be taken by a Government which is wealthy and perfectly able to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I must apologize to you and to the Senate for not having known the real situation. I thought when I asked the Senator from Washington a moment ago to hand me the bill so that I might word the proper amendment to it that the subject matter was before the Senate. I now learn that it is not.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to make a few general observations in connection with the main proposition. There undoubtedly ought to be an archives building. Undoubtedly the United States Government owes it to history and to art and to its own administration of public affairs to have an archives building. Undoubtedly that archives building ought to have certain advantages. In the first place it ought to be fireproof, and in the second place—and if possible more important still—it ought to be so isolated as not to be subject to fire from other buildings.

The archives building ought to be erected in the center of some great square which the Government owns in the city of Washington and so distant from each street and so distant from each house around it as to be free from any chance of catching fire from some other building. If such an archives building is erected in the center of one of the squares which the Government owns or upon Pennsylvania Avenue, after the buildings on the property which the Government there owns shall have been removed, those two essential conditions will have been complied with. The first is that the building itself shall be fireproof—not allegedly fireproof, not fireproof according to any insurance company's report, but fireproof sure enough, like the old Treasury Building, which, by the way, is one of the most magnificent specimens of architecture in the world to-day. There is hardly anything in ancient Greece or ancient Rome that exceeds it in beauty or in substantiality. I repeat, it is essential that the archives building shall be really fireproof in its walls, in its floors, and in every part of it—in the receptacles, the shelving, and whatever else there may be to contain the archives—so that there will be nothing inflammable in the building at all except the paper itself containing the archives; but it is still more important, Mr. President, to isolate it in the center of some region of ground so that it will not be apt to catch fire from the surrounding buildings, and there is no way of doing that except by putting it in the center of a square.

There is nothing that beautifies a square so much, and does not deprive the people of a single pleasure in its enjoyment, as a building in the center of the square which shall give character to it. The Senator speaks of the grass and the trees; but neither grass nor trees nor buildings are as beautiful in themselves as when the three are together. The building surrounded by grass and in the midst of trees is the ideal union of nature and art which makes beauty.

I hope that, whatever occurs later on, we shall not compel the Government of the United States to buy a site to put this building on, but that we shall leave it at least within the discretion of the committee considering the question to determine whether or not it shall be placed upon property which we already own.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, do I understand that the unfinished business is now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is before the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2373) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have just a few words that I wish to submit to the Senate in reference to this proposition.

A great deal has been said from the beginning of the last session of Congress until this hour relative to the unfortunate condition in which agriculture generally finds itself in the United States. I think it is conceded that that condition is more deplorable than the condition of any other industry of the country, and it is the real basis of all industry. I have felt that some propositions have been presented to Congress which could not be reasonably expected to accomplish any great relief to the farmers. Here is a proposition, however, which does not offer to him any nostrum, any fictitious hopes, but allows him to help himself. The American farmer always has been of that character that he could be depended upon to help himself to the limit of his possibilities, and in so doing he has always contributed to the welfare and the general prosperity of the country itself.

It has been our proud boast that from the farms of the country have come the men who have developed the country in every department of its enterprise.

Some years ago we passed what is known as the Sherman antitrust law, which was never even remotely considered in connection with agriculture. There was not any danger then, any more than there is danger now, that the great mass of agriculturists throughout the United States could combine to the detriment of the people generally. They can not unduly enhance prices. They can not create a monopoly judged by what is known as the "rule of reason." The Sherman law was never, I say, considered as being applicable to farmers. The farmer has always, however, been subjected to conditions beyond his control, and over which he did not even remotely exercise any control. He produces his products largely without any knowledge as to what the cost is to himself, because he does not keep books. He does not account for his own work, or for that of his family, generally; but in late years some farmers have commenced to keep accounts and they have discovered that they have received no compensation adequate to the investment either of their capital or of their labor. This has been due largely to the fact that their products have been controlled by outside influences. They do not control the market, and the spread between the price which the farmer receives and what the consumer pays is all out of proportion. Wherever extortion in farm products has been practiced it has been done after the farmer parted with his products. It seems to me to be absolutely necessary, if we are to consider the economic good of the country, that this increase of cost should be avoided if possible, to the end that the producer and the consumer both might benefit. If by allowing cooperative understandings we can shorten the distance between producer and consumer and eliminate the toll gates on the way the farmer and the consumer will both be benefited.

The House bill proposes that farmers may organize—I think they can do it under the law now—for the purpose of controlling markets in the sense of taking advantage of the best market possible, consistent with the good of the country. Threats of prosecutions, however, hinder them from organizing. The House bill proposes to permit proper organization. The proponents of the amendment say that they have no objection to eliminating the possibility of section 1 of the Sherman antitrust law applying to agricultural organizations, but they lay especial emphasis on their claim that section 2 must apply to these organizations. Why, sir, if this amendment is agreed to, then I submit that the Congress has specifically stated that even though the original intention of the makers of the Sherman antitrust law was not to cover farmers' organizations, it shall cover those organizations henceforth from the passage of this bill. It would be better to defeat the measure than pass it with this amendment.

I have not been able to attend all of the discussions on this bill, because the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is in session constantly on the annual appropriation bill; but I listened to some interrogatories submitted yesterday by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. It appeared to the Senator from Ohio, as it does to me, that the Senator from Montana makes a distinction without a difference in defining the relative power of the first and second sections of the Sherman antitrust law. It seems to me there can be no restraint in trade entitled to the consideration of Congress which is not effected through a monopoly of some kind; and if we say that the first section of the Sherman law shall not apply, but the second section shall, we are giving to the Sherman antitrust law a special force which was not intended by its makers. That law was intended to cover aggregations of capital so consolidated that they could get together, determine prices, and control markets absolutely; and it was that danger which the Congress had in mind when it passed the Sherman antitrust law. No such danger is possible from the agricultural interests of the country; and if we are to help the farmers, we must do something that will enable them to take advantage of the possibilities of the markets to which they are entitled.

There may be some examples such as that to which the Senator from Montana called attention—namely, the milk supply of large cities—where possibly there might be combinations which would produce injury and injustice to the consumers of milk; but, sir, the House bill provides that that question may be reviewed by the Secretary of Agriculture—that he may pass upon the question; and while the Senator from Montana says that all he can do is to disapprove the agreement, and that he can not fix the prices, nevertheless I think the provision of the House bill should be amended so that the courts finally could make any order which is applicable to all conditions.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has offered an amendment which authorizes the court to make any decree necessary to do justice in the premises, thus giving the court absolute power, the same power that it would have now under the law.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I may have some peculiar notions in reference to the Sherman antitrust law or in reference to combinations. They are not original with me. Others have held those views, but I am one of those who believe that there are good combinations and bad combinations. I recognize that it is very difficult to frame a general law which would apply under those conditions; but I think that when we passed the Federal Trade Commission act, for instance, we thought we were investing a commission with power to pass upon certain questions which would enable the business men of the country to determine in advance whether what they were proposing to do would be in conflict with a law which was subject to various kinds of interpretations by the courts. I am in favor of that principle, and it is involved in this bill. It enables the Secretary of Agriculture to pass upon this question in case complaint is made or his attention is called to the fact that prices are unduly enhanced to the consumers of agricultural products. Then, I repeat, it goes to the courts, if it is deemed advisable on the part of either party to take it to the courts.

So, Mr. President, I am not anticipating any injury to come from the passage of this bill; and it is, as I have said, an effort to furnish self-help to the farmers in their efforts to take advantage of conditions from which they have suffered throughout our whole history, and from which they are suffering intensely now—their hitherto inability to get together and take advantage of the conditions of a market which properly belongs to them, but which is manipulated by others.

I have said thus much as giving some of my reasons why the House bill should pass with any proper amendments that may be made to safeguard and carry out the original intent of its framers. I hope the bill will pass. I am certain it would pass if we were all familiar with the conditions as they exist. Congress can not do much to restore normal conditions. We all know that to be a fact. We are attempting in Congress to legislate for conditions existing which no law can remedy. No law can help, indeed, some of the laws can hinder, a return to normalcy; but there has been no normal condition in agriculture, so far as the markets are concerned, for years and years before and during and after the war, so far as that is concerned, and it is because I want a better opportunity afforded to farmers to help themselves that I favor the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in the pending bill there is no suggestion that the farmers of this country be given any special privileges. On the contrary, Congress is merely asked to clarify the position of cooperative farm organizations which may operate business institutions or business plants in relation to the Sherman antitrust law. I do not understand the Capper-

Volstead bill to allow agriculture any exemptions. It merely states just what cooperative farm organizations may do.

The uncertainty of the legal status of farm organizations which conduct business in a collective way has had a paralyzing effect on the efforts of men and associations who are brought together so that they may more economically and efficiently administer their affairs. In some sections of the country, I am informed, officers and members of such organizations have been arrested, indicted, and even thrown into prison. United States attorneys and other officials have so construed the Sherman antitrust law as to make it cover the operations of nonstock, nonprofit farm associations.

These associations have provided a means through which the farmers may come into more direct contact with their urban customers. They have aimed to eliminate many of the costly intermediary agencies of distribution by themselves doing the work of such agencies. These efforts through organization to more economically distribute their products have in many cases aroused the suspicion of officers who are always on the lookout for offenders against the antitrust laws of the Nation.

Such vigilance, while commendable, has had an embarrassing effect on perfectly honest men who have never been able to get their legal bearings when making agreements with their fellow citizens engaged in the same occupation regarding the sale of their products. Able lawyers have contended that the provisions of the antitrust law should never be invoked against farm organizations which deal only in the things which their members produce. But there is no general agreement on this subject among men associated with the Department of Justice, hence it is very necessary to enact some measure which will clearly show just what farm organizations can do and continue to live within the law.

Personally I am convinced that the authors of the Sherman antitrust law and the Clayton Act never contemplated the application of the provisions of these measures to men engaged in the collective sale and distribution of products which they themselves bring to maturity. Such application seems to me to be altogether too strained an interpretation of what was in the mind of Congress when these bills were assented to.

The Sherman and Clayton Acts forbid combinations in restraint of trade, but they rather encourage associations designed to foster trade. Farmers are asking for this cooperative law so that they may be able to do a larger and safer business founded upon scientific trade principles. They are not asking to be released from liability for acts of commercial or industrial oppression. They are only asking that by affirmative action Congress recognize the principle of collective bargaining.

Farmers have the natural and inherent right to approach their customers through agencies of their own creation. This right should be clearly and positively recognized by Congress. If the Sherman and Clayton Acts had been generally interpreted as their authors intended they should be, there would be no necessity for the enactment of the bill which we are now considering. The right of the farmers to collectively market their products would generally have been conceded.

If I could find in this bill any privilege to agriculture which is withheld from any other element in our citizenship, I would not be among its supporters. It has been said by statesmen and publicists that the bill constitutes class legislation, that it confers favors at the expense of the urban population, and that it permits agriculture to do those things which are forbidden to other interests. I confess I am unable to so interpret the bill. To my mind it merely removes from the shoulders of the farmers burdens and restrictions which are not imposed upon ordinary commerce and industry.

The farmer is a business man. It is most commendable and only natural that he would desire to use modern methods in the conduct of his enterprise. It is not fair that he should be denied the use of these methods. Cooperation is not "combination." While there is a pretty general demand that big business be forced to yield to necessary regulation, no modern thinker will seriously propose that the business which serves all the people shall be crippled or its ability to function impaired. It is only through cooperation that the highest service to the public can be assured. This fact is recognized by agriculture just as it is recognized by industry, finance, and commerce.

Agriculture is the biggest of all business. Industrially it is a Titan. It is bigger than all the railways, the steel mills, and the coal mines in the United States combined. In the year 1919 the total value of farm products reached the staggering sum of $25,000,000,000, enough to pay America's share of the cost of the war. But this vast business was done largely by men who are unorganized, who were compelled to take whatever they could get for their products, who had no voice in naming the reward they should receive for the service they had performed. If they met and suggested that they should at least obtain cost of production, they were in peril of arrest, indictment, and imprisonment.

Other business concerns were able to get the ear of the public because they were intensely and intelligently organized. They were able to control to some extent at least the markets in which they sold their wares. But agriculture, though spread over the whole country, stretching from the extreme north to the extreme south and from the extreme east to the extreme west, was helpless. It must take what was given it, and we all know that in the past two years it has been impossible for the farmers to collect a sum which even approximates the cost of production.

Why, then, should they not be legally permitted to organize for business purposes? To establish a producers' trust appears to be entirely impossible. There is no danger that the farmers will ever be able or even attempt to corner the food supplies of the Nation. But they ought to be permitted through organization to have some say about how their products shall be distributed, in what markets they will be sold, and how much they will receive for them.

So far agriculture has been a wounded and almost helpless giant, depending entirely for the sale of its products upon agencies which it had no hand in creating. The time has come, however, when it appears to be the full purpose of the farmers to take some hand in directing the selling end of their business. They know that this can not be brought about through individual action. They know that if they are to give any real or effective attention to the sales department it must be through intelligent organization.

Collectively the farmers of the United States, according to the latest census report, own about $80,000,000,000 worth of property. This property has failed to pay anything like substantial dividends; at all events, during the past two years. Scores of thousands of good citizens have left rural America to take their places beside their brethren in the congested centers of population. They have found farm life unattractive and unprofitable. They have become tired of producing at a loss and have finally exchanged broad acres and country air for a hard present and a doubtful future in the cities.

If by cooperative effort these conditions can be ameliorated and farm life made more attractive, Congress ought to enact the necessary permissive legislation. In a country like ours there ought always to be a thriving, wholesome, progressive, and contented agriculture. It is not a wholesome sign of national progress to witness the constantly moving and ever enlarging procession of ruralists toward the centers of urban life. Every effort should be made to arrest the progress of this procession.

It is obvious that a contented and prosperous agriculture means a more wholesome and more prosperous urban population. An abandoned farm is an eyesore. It is evidence of local decay, threatening the national fiber, and if permitted to continue imperiling the national health. Let us keep our boys on the farm.

But it is useless to urge this if agriculture is to continue to be conducted at a loss. I am for this bill because I believe it will give the farmers an opportunity to so organize and so adjust their business as to make the business of farming more profitable. We who live in the cities should be the last to discourage enlightened and cooperative effort among those who provide us with our food, our clothing, and largely our shelter.

Mr. President, I speak with some interest on this subject, because I live in the greatest city of the Nation, and I am confident that the people whom I represent in that city are perfectly willing that the farmers shall organize in such a way as to bring to them not only fair prices for the things they produce, but in the end will tend largely to decrease the prices of the things the people in the cities have to buy which the farmers produce.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, although a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I was not present when the substitute for House bill 2373 was considered by the full committee on a report made by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. Of course, I am in hearty sympathy with the purposes of the bill and with what are perhaps the purposes sought to be attained by the amendment to or substitute for the bill as it passed the House; but, Mr. President, after giving some further thought to this subject my belief is that the substitute of the Senate committee would cut the heart out of the bill, would render nugatory the purposes intended to be attained by the original bill, and would render nugatory, I think, the intent of those who framed the substitute for the bill.

I appreciate the needs of the farmers, those who produce our agricultural products, whether they be in the shape of grain or in the shape of stock, milk, or fruits. The farmer has stood alone. Nearly every other business is organized. Manufacturing, mining, commercial interests, are supported and carried on usually by the great aggregations of capital, and those interests, in addition, have had the support and assistance of men long skilled and experienced in the business. They have had the assistance of counsel to guide them in their several business interests, but the farmer has been isolated, and he has been left to depend on his own unaided resources in the operation of his farm, in the carrying on of his farming industry, and in the finding of a market for his products. Yet it is the great basic industry, the one essential industry, fundamental and upon which all the others more or less depend. So he has worked and toiled at a great disadvantage as compared with the rest. The purpose of the bill is to allow him to combine, to cooperate with his fellow farmers in the matter of processing, preparing for market, and finding the market for his products. It seems to me it is one of the most reasonable and just propositions that ever came before us for consideration.

But, Mr. President, what about the proposed substitute? I said the effect of it would be to take the heart out of the bill and render nugatory the purpose which was intended by the bill. Why will that be so? It is because primarily of the close relationship, if not the almost identity, between sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. There is something peculiar even about the reading of the two sections to which I would like to call the attention of the Senate. Section 1 provides:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal.

So much for the provision relating to contracts alleged to be in restraint of trade. They are in that one sentence declared to be illegal. But are monopolies or attempts to monopolize declared in terms to be illegal? Under section 2, that relating to monopolies and attempts to create monopolies, the language is as follows:

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States—shall be liable as provided in the act. The one relates to the thing, the contract or combination; the other, section 2, begins with reference to the person or persons.

So, Mr. President, it is as though in enacting the second section of the Sherman antitrust law Congress wanted to bring together in that one section everything that could have been included in the first section and make it like what we sometimes call a common count in a pleading at common law, the one thing under which all evidence might be introduced. I submit that the evidence under a charge of combining or contracting or conspiring in restraint of trade would be the same as in a case where the party or parties were charged with monopolizing or attempting to monopolize.

What does the substitute do? The first part of it, of course, is practically the same as part of section 2 of the original House bill, but the rest of it, that which provides that nothing herein shall be construed to exempt from procedure as for a violation of the law against monopoly—such is the substance of it—upon its face invites a prosecution as for the offense of monopolizing or attempting to monopolize. Ambitious United States district attorneys or persons envious of or feeling that their business might possibly be injured by a company or an association of farmers would be quick to seize upon section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act for the purpose of instituting a prosecution.

Mr. President, I said in the beginning that there was a close relationship between a monopoly or an attempt to create a monopoly and an agreement or combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. The evidence that would fit the one and support a charge of the one would be evidence that would be brought to bear to support a charge of the other, namely, of a monopoly. The theory is that both ultimately tend to bring about the great abuse which the Sherman Act was intended to remedy, namely, the undue enhancement of prices. Now, I wish to show from the opinion of Chief Justice White in the Standard Oil case this close relationship between the two, the agreement in restraint of trade and what we would technically call monopoly.

The Chief Justice goes into a discussion of monopoly at common law and tells what it is. Under the common-law definition, and many Senators will recognize it, an allowance or permission by the king or the sovereign for some one person or persons to make, to buy, or to sell some commodity or article to the exclusion of everybody else was often granted. English law, of course, in the course of time remedied that evil. Why was it an evil? Because, of course, it tended to bring or actually brought the undue enhancement of the price of the article for which a monopoly had been given. Chief Justice White compares the definition of monopoly with the definition of engrossing at common law that old common-law offense of engrossing. Let me read:

As by the statutes providing against engrossing the quantity engrossed was not required to be the whole or a proximate part of the whole of an article, it is clear that there was a wide difference between monopoly and engrossing, etc. But as the principal wrong which it was deemed would result from monopoly—that is, an enhancement of the price—was the same wrong to which it was thought the prohibited engrossment would give rise, it came to pass that monopoly and engrossing were regarded as virtually one and the same thing. In other words, the prohibited act of engrossing, because of its inevitable accomplishment of one of the evils deemed to be engendered by monopoly, came to be referred to as being a monopoly or constituting an attempt to monopolize. Thus Pollexfen, in his argument in East India Co. v. Sandys (Skin. 165, 169), said:

"By common law, he said that trade is free, and for that cited 3 Inst. 81; F. B. 65; 1 Roll. 4; that the common law is as much against 'monopoly' as 'engrossing'; and that they differ only that a 'monopoly' is by patent from the king, the other is by the act of the subject between party and party; but that the mischiefs are the same from both, and there is the same law against both. (Moore, 673; 11 Rep., 84.) The sole trade of anything is 'engrossing' ex rei natura, for whosoever hath the sole trade of buying and selling hath 'engrossed' that trade; and whosoever hath the sole trade to any country, hath the sole trade of buying and selling the produce of that country, at his own price, which is an 'engrossing'."

The Chief Justice then comes to apply this to the rule or to the evolution of the principle recognized in this country. He says:

In this country, also, the acts from which it was deemed there resulted a part, if not all, of the injurious consequences ascribed to monopoly, came to be referred to as a monopoly itself. In other words, here, as had been the case in England, practical common sense caused attention to be concentrated not upon the theoretically correct name to be given to the condition or acts which gave rise to a harmful result but to the result itself and to the remedying of the evils which it produced.

As I have already said, and as we all understand, the result, being the controlling thing, is an undue enhancement of the price, and we may indifferently call it by the old common-law name of engrossing or we may call it a monopoly.

The statement just made is illustrated by an early statute of the province of Massachusetts—that is, chapter 31 of the laws of 1778–1779, by which monopoly and forestalling were expressly treated as one and the same thing.

The Chief Justice comes, then, to discuss the word "monopolize," and says:

Undoubtedly, the words "to monopolize" and "monopolize," as used in the section, reach every act bringing about the prohibited results. The ambiguity, if any, is involved in determining what is intended by monopolies. But this ambiguity is readily dispelled in the light of the previous history of the law of restraint of trade to which we have referred, and the indication which it gives of the practical evolution by which monopoly and the acts which produce the same result as monopoly—that is, an undue restraint of the course of trade, all came to be spoken of as, and to be, indeed, synonymous with, restraint of trade. In other words, having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade—that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc.—the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section.

Hence my reason for saying, as I said at the beginning, that the same evidence to be adduced in a charge that there has been a combination or contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade may be adduced in support of a charge that there is a monopoly or that there has been an attempt to monopolize. I think we can see the evil now of adopting the proposed substitute, which is ostensibly for the purpose of preventing monopoly. A man who desires to prosecute a combination or association of farmers has only to say, "There is here an attempt to create a monopoly" and he produces the evidence; and he would have produced the same kind and class of evidence had the charge been that there had been an agreement in restraint of trade and commerce.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I inquire from what is the Senator from South Dakota reading?

Mr. STERLING. I am reading from Chief Justice White's opinion in the Standard Oil case. I am now reading from page 61. Let me read that passage again:

In other words, having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade—that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc.—the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section—that is, restraints of trade—by any attempt to monopolize, or monopolization thereof, even although the acts by which such results are attempted to be brought about or are brought about be not embraced within the general enumeration of the first section. And, of course—when the second section is thus harmonized with and made, as it was intended to be, a complement of the first, it becomes obvious that the criteria to be resorted to in any given case for the purpose of ascertaining whether violations of the section have been committed, is the rule of reason guided by the established law and by the plain duty to enforce the prohibitions of the act and thus the public policy which its restrictions were obviously enacted to subserve.

Says the court—

In other words, the rule of reason which Chief Justice White applied in the Standard Oil case applies as well to monopolies or to attempts to create monopolies as it does to combinations or contracts in restraint of trade.

And it is worthy of observation, as we have previously remarked concerning the common law, that although the statute by comprehensiveness of the enumerations embodied in both the first and second sections makes it certain that its purpose was to prevent undue restraints of every kind or nature, nevertheless by the omission of any direct prohibition against monopoly in the concrete it indicates a consciousness that the freedom of the individual right to contract when not unduly or improperly exercised was the most efficient means for the prevention of monopoly, since the operation of the centrifugal and centripetal forces resulting from the right to freely contract was the means by which monopoly would be inevitably prevented if no extraneous or sovereign power imposed it and no right to make unlawful contracts having a monopolistic tendency were permitted. In other words, that freedom to contract was the essence of freedom from undue restraint on the right to contract.

Mr. President, the bill as it came from the other House is exactly in conformity with the principles laid down in the opinion of Chief Justice White. The bill conforms to the rule of reason, both in regard to contracts in restraint of trade and in regard to attempts to create a monopoly. According to Chief Justice White, the rule of reason applies to any contract in restraint of trade as well as to the distinct attempt, if it can be distinct, to monopolize or to create a monopoly.

What does the House bill propose to do and why should we fear that bill? The House bill, the bill for which a substitute is offered by the Senate committee, reads in part:

Sec. 2. That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall have reason to believe that any such association monopolizes or restrains trade to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof, he shall serve upon such association a complaint—

And so forth.

The undue enhancement of prices is made the test as to whether or not the Secretary of Agriculture may take steps to prevent the acts complained of, and that pertains both to monopoly and to contracts in restraint of trade.

I understood from the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that he construed the House bill as in terms and expressly authorizing the creation of a monopoly. I can not agree with that. If there is a monopoly, however, or if there is an agreement which it is feared might be in restraint of trade to such an extent as to unduly enhance prices, the public, which is injured or any person believing the public to be injured, may make complaint. It will then be for the Secretary of Agriculture to determine whether or not the agreement or the combination is such as to bring about undue enhancement of prices. Mr. President, that statement applies to anything in regard to which a combination or association of farmers is authorized under this bill. So the producers of milk would be no exception to the rule, and any attempt of any association of milk producers under this bill unduly to enhance the price will subject them to the same inquiry and investigation as it would subject those associated together for any other agricultural business.

So, Mr. President, believing, as I do, that the proposed substitute would thus seriously injure, if not altogether destroy, the effect and purposes of the bill as originally intended, I shall vote against the substitute and for the original bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator from South Dakota takes his seat I should like to make a further observation. The Senator concludes his remarks with the statement with which he introduced them, namely, that the amendment proposed by the Senate committee, referring of course to the monopoly amendment, takes the heart out of the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator also refers to the fact that he was not present at the time the bill was considered by the Judiciary Committee. I believe that is correct. The Senator, however, was present when the prototype of this bill was under consideration by the Senate on December 14, 1920. He advocated and approved the entire bill at that time, and called especial attention to the feature that he now condemns. I read from the Record, at page 316, from a colloquy between the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]:

Mr. STERLING. * * * Mr. President, my theory was simply this, as I have stated, that the real purpose of this bill was to make it certain that such associations could not be prosecuted under the Sherman antitrust law. It has never yet been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that they are acting in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and my proposition is merely that this measure is in the spirit exactly of the Sherman antitrust law as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States. The following language:

"To such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof"—brings it exactly within the "rule of reason" first announced by the court. It is not a combination in restraint of trade under the Sherman antitrust law unless the result of the combination is to unduly enhance the price of the product or create a monopoly.

To show that the feature which the Senator now condemns did not escape his attention I continue reading:

The last provision, being an amendment proposed to the bill by the Judiciary Committee, is as follows:

"Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of, or attempt to create, a monopoly or to exempt any association organized hereunder from any proceedings instituted under the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, on account of unfair methods of competition in commerce."

So that not only the bill as a whole received the approval of the Senator from South Dakota, but this specific provision received his approval.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think, perhaps, I recall the statement made, but it was not with reference to the pending bill or the substitute which has been offered; it was with reference to the original bill to which the Senate committee or a subcommittee had attached a short amendment without changing section 2, as I recall, of the original House bill, except that section 2 had been amended so as to substitute the Federal Trade Commission instead of the Secretary of Agriculture as the body which should determine whether there had been an undue enhancement of price.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator has not been condemning particularly the excision of section 2; his argument has been addressed to that amendment which forbids monopoly.

Mr. STERLING. However that may be, Mr. President, whatever I said then in regard to that proposed amendment, I have this to say now, that after I have given the subject full and careful attention and after reading the opinion of Chief Justice White in regard to the close relation between monopoly and restraint of trade, and realize the fact that the same evidence would be produced on a charge that a monopoly existed or that there was an attempt to create a monopoly as would be produced where the charge was that there had been a combination in restraint of trade, I became satisfied that we never could agree, of course, if we want to preserve anything of benefit to the farmers in this bill to the provision in regard to monopoly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, no fault can be found with the explanation now made by the Senator from South Dakota that he has changed his mind about this matter. Of course, it is perfectly obvious that he has, but he felt sufficiently familiar with the general subject when it was here on a prior occasion to debate it upon the floor against those who were opposed to the bill as it stood. He did not at that time advocate the excision of the provision nor suggest the adoption of the House bill in lieu of it.

Mr. LENROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HARRIS. As I stated on the previous call, my colleague [Mr. WATSON of Georgia] is absent on official business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent in attendance upon the duties of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] are detained on committee work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I shall support the House bill with the amendments that have been proposed. I believe that if the Senate substitute should be adopted we had better have no bill at all, for it seems to me very clear that the last paragraph of the Senate substitute nullifies all that was intended to be accomplished in the previous provisions of the bill. That I shall discuss, perhaps, at some length a little later. Before coming, however, to the discussion of the merits of the bills I wish to take up very briefly some of the objections that have been urged to the House bill.

We all listened with very great interest to the very able argument of the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], one of the ablest lawyers of this body, and the position that he takes with reference to monopoly; but I confess that after listening closely to his arguments against permitting any monopoly, even under regulation, I was surprised, at the conclusion of his speech, to hear him suggest that the Senate bill should be amended so that any producer covered by the terms of the bill should have the privilege of entering into an association formed under it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator so understood me, I must have misspoken my sentiments.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right in saying that if monopoly is to be forbidden that feature should not be incorporated in the bill; but I intended to say, if I did not say, that it should be made a feature of the House bill, not the Senate bill. That is to say, if we are going to authorize monopoly, then we should permit anyone qualified under the statute who desires to do so to be admitted to membership in an association claiming its protection.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator, I think, will concede that we had every reason to believe that in suggesting the amendment yesterday he was speaking of the bill that he supports and not the House bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was not my purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. I very gladly accept the correction, which, of course, removes any possible controversy between us upon that subject.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the distinguished chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, yesterday expressed the fear that the power delegated in the House bill to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine in the first instance whether there had been an undue enhancement of prices by reason of the association was an unlawful delegation of power; and I am frank to say that if the House bill, either in its original form or as it will be amended, did grant authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to fix prices for the future, in that event the question raised by the Senator from Iowa would be a very serious one, because, of course, authority legislative in its nature which may be exercised by the Congress can not be delegated to any administrative body unless the rule be also laid down and determined by the legislative authority. But, Mr. President, if there be no authority here to fix prices in the future then, of course, it necessarily follows that there is no rule for the legislative authority to lay down to govern the administrative body; and with the amendment that has been proposed, it is clear now that there is no authority to be vested in the Secretary of Agriculture to fix prices in the future or at all. His power with reference to dealing with restraints of trade or monopoly, and the orders that he is given authority to issue, will be directed against the cessation of the monopoly itself or the restraint of trade, and there will be no finding upon his part with reference to what is a reasonable price, either in the future or in the past, except he must find, in order to have jurisdiction to make the order, that there has been in connection with the monopoly or restraint of trade an undue enhancement in price by reason thereof.

So, Mr. President, with this amendment, I submit to the distinguished Senator from Iowa that there being no legislative authority delegated, there is no reason or proper place for a rule to be laid down to govern the Secretary of Agriculture in making that finding.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want the Senator from Wisconsin to distinctly understand the point I made. I have no doubt there is a law under which the Secretary of Agriculture or any other administrative officer can find whether an association or combination is in restraint of trade. I have no doubt that there is abundant law to guide the Secretary of Agriculture in determining whether a particular association or combination is a monopoly, or is an attempt to create a monopoly. So far the Senator from Wisconsin and myself entirely agree.

I do not believe there is any law which will enable the Secretary of Agriculture to determine whether a given price which may exist at that time for any particular commodity is an undue price. That is the point I have made.

Mr. LENROOT. Then I would like to ask the Senator this question: If an undue enhancement of the price in connection with the monopoly be a vital question, suppose it were an undue restraint of trade. In other words, suppose this bill were so changed that if the Secretary should find that there was an undue restraint of trade, we would authorize him to issue such an order which is provided in the bill. Does the Senator think we could do that?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do, because we have done exactly that thing with an administrative body.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the difference between delegating to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to issue an order, if he finds there be an undue restraint of trade concerning which there is no statutory law, and delegating such power where he finds there is an undue enhancement of price?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there is a very great difference. I want the Senator from Wisconsin to understand that I am not opposing this general proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the proposed substitute reported by the committee would be unavailing. I think it would give very little, if any, relief to the farmers of the country, because what is or what is not an attempt to create a monopoly is so indefinite and so vague that I think if that section were preserved the farmers would be subject to practically all the difficulties they now experience; but the Supreme Court has said more than once that the antitrust law is but the reenactment or re-statement in substance of the common law, which has prevailed both in Great Britain and in this country from time immemorial. Around the expression "restraint of trade" there has been built up a legal interpretation and construction so that although it may be difficult anyone has a guide to determine whether a given association constitutes an undue restraint of trade, because the Supreme Court has said that that was the common law also, that not every restraint of trade was unlawful, but when you come to price I do not know of any law anywhere which will enable any person to determine authoritatively what constitutes an undue price. If the Senator from Wisconsin can point out what those words mean, perhaps it would satisfy my mind upon the question.

I put this question yesterday: Suppose wheat were selling at $1.50 per bushel, and the Secretary of Agriculture were to enter upon the industry, is that an undue price? To what sources of information or to what guide would he resort in order to ascertain whether $1.50 a bushel was too much for wheat?

Mr. LENROOT. I would answer the Senator, to exactly the same sources of information and to the same guide which now govern our courts with relation to the interpretation of the Sherman law. There is nothing more vague or more indefinite in the term "undue enhancement of prices" than there is in the words "undue restraint of trade." One is just as shadowy as the other.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt to call attention to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in relation to this very subject?

Mr. LENROOT. I would be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I refer to the case of the International Harvester Co. against Kentucky, one of the cases referred to by the Senator from Kentucky. In that case certain statutes were under consideration. I read from Two hundred and thirty-fourth United States, page 220, as follows:

On March 21, 1906, a statute was enacted that made it lawful for any number of persons to combine the crops of wheat, tobacco, corn, oats, hay, or other farm products raised by them for the purpose of obtaining a higher price than they could get by selling them separately. (Session Laws, 1906, ch. 117, p. 429.) And later, by an act of March 13, 1908 (Session Laws, 1908, ch. 8, p. 38), not only was the legality of these last-mentioned combinations reaffirmed, but they were protected by injunction, and the sale by or purchase from the owner contrary to his agreement was punished by a fine.

When the Court of Appeals came to deal with the act of 1890, the constitution of 1891, and the act of 1906, it reached the conclusion, which now may be regarded as the established construction of the three taken together, that by interaction and to avoid questions of constitutionality they were to be taken—to make any combination for the purpose of controlling prices lawful unless for the purpose or with the effect of fixing a price that was greater or less than the real value of the article.

That was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court because it was impossible to determine the real value. I read now the conclusion of the court upon that point, an argument which, I take it, is substantially like that now suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. From what case is the Senator reading?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read from the case of the International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky (242 U. S.) this language:

It seems that since 1902 the price of the machinery sold by the plaintiff in error has risen from 10 to 15 per cent. The testimony on its behalf showed that meantime the cost of materials used had increased from 20 to 25 per cent, and labor 27½ per cent. Whatever doubt there may be about the exact figures we hardly suppose the fact of a rise to be denied. But in order to reach what is called the real value, a price from which all effects of the combination are to be eliminated, the plaintiff in error is told that it can not avail itself of the rise in materials because it was able to get them cheaper through one of the subsidiary companies of the combination, and that the saving through the combination more than offset all the rise in cost.

This perhaps more plainly concerns the justice of the law in its bearing upon the plaintiff in error, when compared with its operation upon tobacco raisers who are said to have doubled or trebled their prices, than on the constitutional question proposed. But it also concerns that, for it shows how impossible it is to think away the principal facts of the case as it exists and say what would have been the price in an imaginary world. Value is the effect in exchange of the relative social desire for compared objects expressed in terms of a common denominator. It is a fact and generally is more or less easy to ascertain. But what it would be with such increase of a never extinguished competition as it might be guessed would have existed had the combination not been made, with exclusion of the actual effect of other abnormal influences, and, it would seem with exclusion also of any increased efficiency in the machines but with inclusion of the effect of the combination so far as it was economically beneficial to itself and the community, is a problem that no human ingenuity could solve. The reason is not the general uncertainties of a jury trial but that the elements necessary to determine the imaginary ideal are uncertain both in nature and degree of effect to the acutest commercial mind. The very community, the intensity of whose wish relatively to its other competing desires determines the price that it would give, has to be supposed differently organized and subject to other influences than those under which it acts. It is easy to put simple cases; but the one before us is at least as complex as we have supposed, and the law must be judged by it. In our opinion it can not stand.

So, the court has found that a statute which makes it penal for a combination to fix prices at greater than the real value of the commodity provides a test which can not possibly be met, and therefore that the statute is unconstitutional.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether he has before him the case decided by the Supreme Court about a year or a year and a half ago, holding certain parts of the Lever Act unconstitutional?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I am frank to say I tried to get it, but I could not remember just where it was reported, and I have not been able to put my hand upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will send for it and try to get it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have examined those cases, and they decided that for a statute to provide that one had committed a crime because he had charged an unreasonable price was too indefinite for a criminal statute, that there must be a rule which the person could know had been violated, and if the jury had to find what the law was, and then apply the penalty, it was too uncertain and indefinite for a criminal statute.

But, Mr. President, in many of the trust cases tried, notably the Standard Oil cases, the question of undue enhancement of price by the combination and the monopoly was one of the most important bits of evidence, and in the Standard Oil case it was proven in every district in the United States. It is always one of the elements which is proven in a case where a corporation has obtained a monopoly. The decision referred to by the Senator from Iowa is simply a case involving a criminal statute, and the court held it was too indefinite on which to base a charge of criminality.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the case to which I referred was indeed a criminal case, as was the case, according to my recollection, to which the Senator from Iowa referred; but this very matter came back before the court of appeals of the State of Kentucky in the case of Gay against Brent, reported in One hundred and sixty-sixth Kentucky, in which, considering the decision of the International Harvester case to which I have referred, the court decided, as expressed in the syllabus, as follows:

A statute that makes the test of liability in a criminal case or the enforcement of a right growing out of a contract in a civil case depend on the question whether the price of an article has been enhanced above its real value or decreased below its real value is void for uncertainty both in respect to criminal matters as well as civil rights and liabilities.

So that it is impossible to distinguish the cases.

Mr. LENROOT. I had in mind the decision under the Lever Act to which the Senator from Iowa referred. I could not place my hand upon it, but it was my recollection, as the Senator from Minnesota has stated, that a different rule would be laid down with reference to a criminal statute and with reference to a civil proceeding. In any event, I think Senators will admit that we have the right to proceed against a monopoly solely by virtue of the existence of the monopoly. Here is a power which sets machinery in motion, but the administrative officer of the Government has the right to set it in motion only when he finds, in addition to monopoly, an undue enhancement of price; but any order that he makes goes not to the enhancement of price, nor, with the amendment that will be proposed, will a desisting from undue enhancement relieve the monopoly. It is the monopoly that is pursued in the case of the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, and not the price that is charged by the monopoly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. As I read the House bill before us, the question of monopoly is not a matter of consideration at all by the Secretary of Agriculture. There may be a monopoly, but he may not invoke his power or use his power for the purpose of suppressing it or issuing any order with respect to the monopoly. He can only act if he conceives that there is an undue enhancement of price. Of course, I presume the Senator will reply there can not be an undue enhancement of price unless there is a monopoly. There may be something in the argument, but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture may not act at all because there is a monopoly.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, but the point I was making is that the order the Secretary is authorized to issue does not go to the undue enhancement of the price. It goes to the existence of the monopoly. That is the subject of the order. That is the thing that is dealt with in the order. Under the order which the Secretary is authorized to make if he finds these facts to exist—a restraint of trade or a monopoly plus an undue enhancement of price—then he is authorized to make the order that the monopolization and restraint of trade shall cease, but a mere desisting from further exacting the unreasonable price will be no protection against the monopoly.

Now, Mr. President, as to the necessity of the legislation. I confess that I have been somewhat surprised during the debate to hear Senators argue that we ought not to make any exceptions; that the Sherman law should cover all alike in the United States, and that it is a special privilege to farmers to provide what will be afforded them in this legislation. I was especially surprised to hear Senators make that argument who themselves have, on at least two occasions, voted to exempt certain classes from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law. The first was in the Webb-Pomerene Act. I am not arguing that that was not a proper exemption, but there the beginning was made and it was there determined, and these same Senators helped to so determine it, that the Sherman law should not cover all alike; that where there were reasons for exemption the exemption was proper.

Then later on in the Esch-Cummins law the question of exempting competitive railroads from the Sherman law was before the Senate, and the same Senators, who now insist that the Sherman law must cover everybody and everything, themselves voted to exempt owners of railroads from the Sherman law and permitted consolidations which under the Sherman law were prohibited. Again I say I make no contention that that was not a reasonable and proper thing to do. I am only referring to this because some Senators have insisted that we are extending a special privilege to farmers when the Sherman law should apply alike to every man, woman, and child in the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I confess I am just a little bit surprised that the Senator should refer to the railroad act as a precedent for the pending measure, when under the railroad act we had a regulatory board that fixed all prices, and so forth, and under the pending legislation, if I construe it aright, the purpose is not to have any regulatory features at all so far as price is concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. That again only goes to the reason for the exemption. It does not go to the fact of the exemption, and that is the only purpose for which I am referring to it now.

Mr. POMERENE. It goes to the fact that the two cases stand on different feet entirely.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, of course, every case stands upon its own facts. If the Senator from Ohio believes there are no facts that authorize or warrant the Congress to deal with the farmers' organizations any differently than with the Standard Oil Co. or the oil combination, of course in that event I would expect the Senator to take the position that no such legislation as this is necessary.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Ohio has made no statement whatever that justifies that conclusion or inference by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Wisconsin insists that there is a distinction and a reason for the exemption of farm cooperative associations from the provisions of the Sherman law that can be just as well sustained and fully as warranted as are the provisions of the Webb-Pomerene Act with reference to exporters or the exemption of the railroads from the Sherman law. Of course, any Senator who does not agree with that position is fully justified in opposing the pending measure. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Ohio that it is a question not as to whether this one class of people are to be taken out from under the provisions of the Sherman law but whether there is a reason for taking them out.

Mr. POMERENE. That was referred to on yesterday and I do not know that I care to go into it very fully. I have indicated from the start that I should like very much to aid in some legislation looking to cooperative marketing, but I believe in being open and above board about matters of legislation of this kind.

The Webb-Pomerene Act had its inception in the fact that abroad there were large combinations of buyers—cartels. It even went to the extent of having the Government as the sole buying agency. In this country the farmers' organizations and the commercial organizations had to seek foreign markets and dispose of their surplus single-handed. As there was a combination of buyers abroad, it occurred to those who favored the legislation that there was not any harm in permitting a combination of sellers in this country so they could meet that situation abroad. That applied particularly to farm products, to all meat products, to copper products, to timber products, to many similar products. For that reason it was provided that they could go ahead and combine for the purposes of foreign sales, but even in that instance it was so limited in its scope that it should not go to the extent of unduly enhancing or depressing prices in this country. That was the reason for that legislation, and I have not heard any objection to it, except from those who believe absolutely that there should be no combination under any circumstances.

Mr. LENROOT. I have not at any time intimated that I did not believe the exemption in both of the cases were not fully justified. I have not criticized that in any way, but I do contend that there are reasons just as strong that warrant the legislation now pending.

The Senator has spoken of conditions abroad, of the existence of cartels and combinations abroad that made it necessary, if we were to compete, if we were to find a foreign market for our own products, to permit, without the restraint of the Sherman law, like combinations of exporters to put them upon something like an equality.

But let us apply that to the situation in the United States. What do we find? I am not making any criticism upon either the law or the courts to-day, but we find the United States Steel Corporation, controlling approximately one-half of the products of steel made and sold in the United States, given a clear bill of health by the Supreme Court of the United States. In its decision, if I read it correctly, the Supreme Court held that the United States Steel Corporation was originally a combination in violation of the Sherman law, but that it had, after its existence through many years, abandoned any unlawful purpose, that it was not a monopoly, and that it had found that it could not accomplish, even if it would, the unlawful purpose which actuated its organization.

But does any Senator suppose, if 50 per cent of the wheat farmers of the United States should form an association tomorrow for the purpose of holding their wheat or getting the best price they could for it, that the Supreme Court of the United States would not hold under the Sherman law that the wheat growers' association was in violation of the terms of the Sherman Act? Can there be any doubt about it?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator himself have any more doubt about the one case than the other?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not.

Mr. NORRIS. Then he admits that the Supreme Court has a method of distinguishing that he can not comprehend or does not possess?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose the farmers' organization, to come within the class with the Steel Corporation, would have to profess that they had seen a new light or had been to the mourners' bench and obtained forgiveness for their sins, and then would be passed on as being all right, the same as the Steel Corporation was, if the Supreme Court would follow their own precedent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. What the Senator from Wisconsin just stated presents one of the difficulties that I see in the pending legislation so far as being helpful to the farmer is concerned. If half the farmers in the country should enter into a combination to withhold their wheat from the market and thereby the price was enhanced, how easy it would be to destroy that combination entirely under the legislation that is proposed here. I desire to see put into the bill something that will really save that situation. It would leave the farmers open to the dissolution of their association precisely as they would be under the Sherman law.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not going to stand on the floor of the Senate and assert or even intimate that the Supreme Court of the United States in passing upon these various questions would apply one rule to one class and apply a different rule to another class of people. It is not necessary to consider that question in the consideration of the pending measure, because the Supreme Court has said in the Steel Corporation case that a combination of corporations unlawful in its inception, unlawful when organized—and that is what they did say about the Steel Corporation—through this course of practice, although unlawfully organized, may with the same combination and the same control over prices become a lawful organization. That being so, what is the disadvantage to the farmer of the United States?

These great corporations are formed; they are in existence to-day; they fix the prices to the farmer of the products which they make and sell. We have, therefore, that class of corporations in existence lawfully, when if farmers who are not organized attempt to create a similar kind of organization, exercising the same power, they to-day would be held, under the decision of the Supreme Court, as being in violation of the Sherman law.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I take it that the proper implication from the Senator's remarks is that combinations of steel manufacturers and others who are engaged in industrial activities, if they amount to trusts or monopolies, are bad; but because the Supreme Court in the Steel Trust case seems to wink at the monopoly which the Steel Trust apparently is, it therefore follows that we must wink at all sorts of monopolies in all other lines of industry, and particularly in agriculture. It seems to me that if the Senator concedes that combinations in restraint of trade and monopolies are bad and are injurious to the public welfare and the Supreme Court has nullified the act of Congress by a misconstruction or an interpretation at variance with what we conceive to be right, the proper thing would be to amend the act and put teeth into it and strengthen it so that there might not be combinations and monopolies, rather than to confess our impotency to act and thus pave the way for the legalization of monopolies, whether in agriculture or in any other form of human activity.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in reply to the observation of the Senator from Utah, I will suggest that we again consider the Steel Corporation case. I have forgotten the exact percentage of the total product which the court found was controlled by the Steel Corporation, but the Supreme Court held that, although the action of the United States Steel Corporation in fixing prices had all the effects of a monopoly, inasmuch as there was no agreement or combination between the United States Steel Corporation and its competitors, and inasmuch as there were competitors, and that the law could not compel competition, because of the mere fact that all of the competitors of the United States Steel Corporation adopted the same price that was adopted by the Steel Corporation that corporation could not be convicted of wrongful practice.

The Senator from Utah asks, because there are, so far as the public injury is concerned, great corporations existing to-day that have all the attendant evils of monopoly, why should we permit some other class of people to create a monopoly? Mr. President, in the first place, I want to say that the country will not very long tolerate the power of one class of people not only to fix prices and attain monopolistic power but to exercise it against another class of people and hold that other class of people to a rule of conduct to which the first class of people are not subject.

The Senator from Utah, however, knows quite as well as do I the difficulties in putting so-called "teeth" into the Sherman Act. We are compelled to choose as to permitting in the case of cooperative associations, such an association as may, on the face of the law, permit monopoly, but which every Senator knows will not result in monopoly, because there is no necessity of life to-day which is produced upon the farm which can be made the subject of a complete monopoly; and yet the Senator takes the position, I assume, that we must prohibit farmers from doing just what the United States Steel Corporation may to-day lawfully do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator is appealing to me and characterizing my position, he certainly misstates it.

Mr. LENROOT. I beg the Senator's pardon if I did so.

Mr. KING. I did not take such a position as he states at all. If the Senator will pardon me, I take this position: I think the American people, after suffering from the evils of monopoly for so many years, have, through their Congress, written into the statute books a law which they believed would prove of great benefit. The American people did not believe in monopoly in restraint of trade. They had been indoctrinated in the principles of the common law, and, as the distinguished Senator from Iowa stated a few moments ago, the Sherman law was founded upon the conceptions of the common law. We believe in the principles of the Anglo-Saxon law, the principles which were announced by Adam Smith. We do not believe in monopolies, in trusts, in combinations in restraint of trade, in the destruction and strangling of competition. My position is that that view is correct. The American people to-day are opposed to monopolies, to trusts, and combinations in restraint of trade. I believe that if the Sherman law is not adequate to deal with the industrial combinations we should strengthen it—

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from Utah think the Sherman law to-day is adequate?

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence and then I will answer the Senator—instead of passing further laws, which, in my opinion, will ultimately result in the destruction of the Sherman law and in the repeal of all laws looking toward the forbidding of monopolies and trusts and combinations.

Now, replying to the last suggestion of the Senator, I will frankly say that, with the construction placed upon the Sherman law in the Steel Trust case, manifestly that law is not sufficient, and I am in favor of strengthening it.

I believe that a law can be enacted by Congress, as laws have been enacted by the State of New York and other States dealing with intrastate restraint of trade and combinations, that will be effectual in dealing with interstate monopolies and combinations engaged in interstate commerce. There is no reason, it seems to me, why we should pause in dealing with the subject because of the decision of the Supreme Court.

In a recent decision rendered in the Hardwood Lumber Co. case there is much ground for congratulation. The court has gotten upon strong ground, and that decision, in my opinion, will destroy hundreds of price-fixing monopolies which to-day honeycomb our industry and oppress the people. I think that the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives could do no greater service than to report a bill comprehensive and broad in its terms that will strike at the root of this evil. I believe that if we pass the pending bill, we are indicating to the public that there will be no further effort to destroy monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade; that we will have confessed our impotency to deal with the subject, and we are going to turn the people over to the exploitations of corporations and trusts and combinations in all industrial activities, as well as in all of the avenues of life. I am opposed to that. I think it is a mistake.

I sympathize, as the Senator from Wisconsin does, with the farmers, but I believe that they may now form selling and cooperative organizations without coming under the condemnation of the Sherman antitrust law. This bill, however, in my opinion, will be regarded by trusts and combinations, by conspirators in restraint of trade, with glee and with rejoicing; and I warn the Senators now that if this bill is passed and becomes a law all of the illegal combinations in the United States will take courage from its enactment, and will continue their depredations without fear of the heavy hand of the law being placed upon them.

May I say further to the Senator in his time—and I hope he will pardon me—that the present Attorney General and Judge Goff, the latter of whom is particularly interested in the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law, are giving earnest attention to the provisions of the law? They have already in-augured prosecutions against the Cement Trust and against other trusts and combinations in restraint of trade, which prosecutions will culminate, I believe, in convictions. We need attorneys general—and I compliment the present Attorney General because I think he has measured up to that standard—who will have courage to invoke the law against combinations. We do not want mere injunctions; we want indictments and the penitentiary open to these malefactors who flout the law and oppress the people, and by their conduct impose unjust burdens upon the great mass of the American people.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, with much of what the Senator from Utah has said I thoroughly agree. He, however, is more optimistic than am I. I have witnessed the evolution of the Sherman law through many years; I have witnessed the Supreme Court reading into the Sherman law a provision which that court for many years and upon many occasions have said was not there, and I have witnessed the dissolution of some of the great trusts of this country under the decree of the courts, notably the Standard Oil Co. When I consider that since the dissolution of that trust the Standard Oil Co. to-day fixes the price of every gallon of oil and gasoline to both the producer and the consumer in this country, notwithstanding its dissolution; when I consider the fact that the United States Steel Corporation, which by the Supreme Court is held guiltless of violation of the Sherman law, fixes the price of all steel products, which price all its competitors follow, I can not feel as optimistic as does the Senator from Utah that it is easy to put teeth in the Sherman law in order to remedy the evils which exist. And, Mr. President, even though there were teeth in the Sherman law, I assume that the Senator from Utah, like myself, agrees that corporations are beneficial, that modern business and industry require business to be done through aggregations of individuals and corporations. Manufacturing industry can organize and form corporations without any thought upon the part of any human being that they are in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. They may control only the merest fraction of a percentage of the product; there may be no question of monopoly involved; but farmers can not organize and incorporate the business of farming as the business of manufacturing can be organized and incorporated. It is impossible to do so; and yet to-day a group of farmers associating themselves together, and proposing to do the very thing that it is perfectly legal for a corporation to do, stand in danger of being held to be in violation of the Sherman law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The suggestions of the Senator from Utah are always worthy of consideration; but I should like to ask him, through the Senator from Wisconsin—

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just how he would put teeth into the antitrust law that would reach the situation in which the United States Steel Corporation is supposed to be. It produces, we will say, practically one-half of all the iron and steel products of this country, at least those of the heavier character. Two or three years ago I was a member of a committee to inquire into the cost of production of iron and steel products. It appeared during the course of that investigation, and there is no doubt about it, that the United States Steel Corporation can produce the greater part of its output anywhere from five to fifteen dollars per ton more cheaply than can any of its competitors.

The only way in which competition can be preserved at all is for the Steel Corporation to sell its products at more than a reasonable profit. If it were to sell at a reasonable profit, there would be no competitors in the country, and it would have, by the natural operation of commercial forces, a monopoly.

The great difficulty in all this subject, of course, is with respect to the cost of production. When one enterprise can produce an article much more cheaply than another, how are you going to preserve competition of any kind unless the favored enterprise, or the one of low cost in production, sells at higher than a reasonable cost, just exactly as in the case of a farmer? How are you going to preserve competition among farmers when it costs one man 75 cents a bushel to produce wheat and it costs another man $1.50 a bushel to produce wheat?

There must be some flexibility in the transactions of commerce if you are going to have any kind of competition; and I should like to know from the Senator from Utah how he would meet the situation that I have suggested? The truth is that I think the antitrust law is the most ineffective statute that was ever passed, and it is only after 25 or 30 years of varying interpretations that it has become of any value at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. I apologize to the Senator from Wisconsin for trespassing upon his time. I do not profess to have the knowledge of this very important subject that is possessed by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], as well as other Senators who have for years given earnest attention to it. It is a question which involves our whole economic and industrial life. It is also a political question.

I do not pretend—notwithstanding I have attempted to obtain the views of political economists, publicists, and great judges—a sufficient knowledge to indicate the kind of a statute which should be drawn in order to meet the situation and preserve the principle of competition in trade and commerce, and I might add in our economic life. But in my opinion the American people and the best opinions of American economists desire that competition in trade and commerce shall be preserved. The belief is entertained that competition is fundamental in our industrial and economic life. In my opinion a statute can be drawn that will mitigate the evils of which the Senator complains and which are apparent in the law, even though it may fail to utterly prevent combinations which destroy competition.

The Senator says in his closing sentence that the Sherman antitrust law has been the most ineffective statute that has been placed upon the statute books. Perhaps I state it too broadly—

Mr. CUMMINS. I mean, relating to a great subject such as this.

Mr. KING. Relating to a great subject such as this. I do not agree with the Senator. I think that the transportation act is as ineffective in dealing with the great subject of transportation as this law apparently is in dealing with monopolies and combinations to stifle or prevent competition; but I suggest to the Senator that one reason for its apparent inefficiency may be found in the lack of interest and fidelity to duty upon the part of some executive officers of the United States.

In the first place, Mr. President, when the bill was passed there were many officials and many public men in both political parties who doubted the wisdom of the law. They felt that the law of supply and demand, without any repressive or regulatory legislation, without any impediments or supervision, would effectuate all desired reforms and bring about all of the benefits that flow from unrestricted competition. They believed that if there were combinations and monopolies they were only evanescent and that in time the law of supply and demand and natural competition and the natural forces in the economic world would destroy them.

I believe there are in the United States Senate now men who have that view—scholars, men of great ability—who believe that any effort by the Sherman antitrust law or any other statute to prevent monopolies or combinations in restraint of trade or to the play of competitive forces will be abortive; that no effort should be made to prevent combinations and monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade, because in the end, though they may work temporary harm and disadvantage, things will right themselves, the law of competition will assert itself and break down the temporary dams erected by the greed and cupidity and avarice of men engaged in business, whether manufacturing, agricultural, or of any other character.

I have not taken that view. I believe that the common-law theory that combinations in restraint of trade are illegal should be continued as a part not only of our State legislation but of our National legislation. If we do not have laws against combinations in restraint of trade and prohibitive of monopoly, then we shall be compelled to substitute the supervisory and regulatory power of the Government, and every business man in the United States will have a Federal official upon his back; and every enterprise will be supervised and directed by a bureaucratic functionary. Such regulation will be so demoralizing and so deadening and so destructive that in the end business will be so moribund that national decadence will result. It will destroy the domestic industries of the people and, of course, will prevent the United States from exporting because of the inability of American manufacturers and producers to compete with the world. An era of high prices will prevail—but paralysis and industrial disintegration will follow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not suggested the repeal of the antitrust law. I have simply said it has been ineffective. That is evidenced by what has followed the alleged dissolution of various corporations and combinations which have come under the condemnation of the court. I should like to know how to deal with the subject, and my inquiry was in perfect good faith; but of course it can not be answered by the suggestion that the transportation act has also failed to accomplish some of the beneficent results that we expected from it.

When John Sherman introduced his bill—

Mr. KING. The existing law is not his bill. The existing law was drawn by Senator Hoar.

Mr. CUMMINS. When John Sherman introduced his bill in the Senate, he did not say anything about restraint of trade or monopoly. When the bill was originally introduced, it forbade the suppression of competition; and that, with his far-seeing eye, was the thing that he sought to preserve—fair, substantial competition in business. There was a good deal of argument in the Senate, lasting for many weeks. The Senators in that day, as in this, were a little bit timid about reaching the exact result which seemed to be desirable; and so the bill was referred finally to the Committee on the Judiciary, which had not had it before that time, and either Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, or Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts—and their respective friends and descendants have been quarreling ever since with regard to the authorship of the present law—turned the bill which had been introduced for the purpose of preserving competition into the general language of the common law with respect to restraint of trade and monopoly. I am not asserting that they did not do the best they could, but I am asserting that the efforts to construe the vague and general terms of the anti-trust law have been very disconcerting to American business, and very unsatisfactory to the American people.

I would like to know how to make it better. I understand how we are trespassing on the Senator from Wisconsin, but, after all, my suggestion comes back home, because instead of making the undue enhancing of prices the test, I would like to put into the bill the elimination of fair and substantial competition as the fact to be found. If the Secretary of Agriculture, or the Federal Trade Commission, or any other body properly constituted to investigate the facts, finds that there has been eliminated from the business of the country, so far as agricultural products are concerned, substantial and fair competition, that then he passes it on to the court for dissolution, and such decree as the court may think the circumstances warrant. So I referred to the original bill introduced by Senator Sherman for that purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield for just a question.

Mr. KING. It will take me some little time, and if the Senator prefers I shall wait until he concludes, when I will attempt to make a reply to my esteemed friend from Iowa.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, all that has been said, of course, is pertinent to the real meat of this bill, yet I do wish to come back a little closer to its consideration.

However much we may all agree as to the effect of the Sherman law, I think we all will agree that the Sherman law was enacted, in the first instance, to afford a remedy for certain evils injurious to the public which were deemed to exist and admitted to exist. If it had not been for those evils, there would never have been an attempt to prohibit the mere act of combining or associating. It was an evil which the Sherman law was designed to cure, and that brings me to the question that is pending in this bill, Will the permission that is granted in this bill for association of farmers, as is provided, result in injury to the public or will it be beneficial to the public?

I think we must all agree that an abstract principle is not the thing to be considered, but the sole matter for consideration is whether a given course of action is for the public benefit or will work to the public injury. Will this cooperation be beneficial to the public or otherwise?

Granted, if you choose, that there may be an isolated case, as the association of raisin growers or even milk producers creating a monopoly, but upon the whole will this cooperation be beneficial to the public? If it is, we should not be deterred from enacting legislation that is for the public benefit because, perchance, here and there some injustice may grow out of it. There never was a law passed by any legislative body in the world that did not in some particular case work an injustice. That is probably a broad statement, yet as a general statement it is true.

What is the trouble with America to-day? What is the cause of the depression that exists? Of course, there are some causes which I am not going to speak of this afternoon, because I am not making a political speech; but, Mr. President, the business men of America and the manufacturers of America, I think, are beginning to understand that the principal cause for this continued depression is the loss of the purchasing power of the farmer of the United States.

That is due in part to the fact that conditions in Europe are such that we have a market for our surplus only in part. The fact is, every Senator knows that a very small surplus of any agricultural product means a depression in price of the total product far in excess of the influence on the price which that surplus should exert.

If the farmers of the United States could, through cooperation, have some control and agreement as to production and as to prices, not for the purpose of making exorbitant profits, but so that they might at least secure back the cost of production, we would see in the United States immediately an upward turn toward prosperity. Is there anyone who will say that association among farmers and cooperation among them do not tend to accomplish that very thing? Every Senator knows that the California Fruit Producers in cooperative association have done that very thing, but it has not resulted, with possibly one or two exceptions, in any injury to the public.

So, when we come to consider that almost one-half of our people are engaged in agriculture or absolutely dependent upon it; when we consider that the agriculturists of this country have suffered far more in this depression than any other class of people; that the reason for the unemployment in our industries to-day can be ascribed directly to the fact that the prices of farm products are so much lower than the general level of prices that the farmer has no longer any purchasing power; when we consider those things, Mr. President, from the standpoint of public benefit and public welfare alone, we are justified in enacting this legislation which will enable the farmers of this country to put themselves somewhat nearer an equality of bargaining power and control of output in production than all other industries have to-day.

I want to say a word upon the argument made by the Senator from Montana to the effect that while he is perfectly willing to legalize these associations and permit them to do the things enumerated in the first section of the Senate substitute, he is not willing to permit any monopoly or attempt at monopoly. I said in the beginning that with that last paragraph of the Senate substitute we might as well have no bill at all, for the last paragraph nullifies all that is attempted to be done in the previous provisions of the bill.

I undertake to say that if any monopoly or attempt at monopoly is continued to be unlawful, there is no case coming within the purview of the first section of the Sherman law to-day that will not remain under the condemnation of the Sherman law. Whenever there is an association formed, a part of the effect of the formation of that association is an undue restraint of trade.

If a part of the purpose of that association be to eliminate competition, can Senators say that a court may not hold that that is an attempt to create a monopoly? That is the very basis of any holding of an attempt to create a monopoly, which is still made unlawful under the Senate amendment. It is not a completed monopoly, as the Senator from Montana kept urging yesterday. He said nothing in his argument about the provisions of the Senate substitute which made an attempt to create a monopoly unlawful, whereas the fact is that wherever there might be a finding under the first section of the Sherman law that there was such a restraint of trade as to bring an association within its condemnation, that same finding can be made under the second section, which the Senator from Montana and the majority of the Judiciary Committee would leave untouched by this substitute.

So, Mr. President, I repeat that if the Senate substitute is to be adopted, we had better have no bill at all, much better have no bill at all, because then it at least could not be said that we were trying to fool the farmers of the United States, and when they are asking for bread giving them a stone.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I notice by the RECORD that the Senator from Wisconsin participated in the debate on and advocated the passage of the Senate substitute for the House bill which was before the Senate on December 15, 1920, containing exactly this provision.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. At that time the Senator apparently did not think that the provision prohibiting monopoly was in nullification of the rest of the bill. Was it because the Senator overlooked that fact at that time?

Mr. LENROOT. It was. The Senator entirely overlooked the question of attempted monopoly, and it never occurred to him until after a very full examination of this question in connection with this bill that the words "attempt to create a monopoly" covered all of the scope of the first section of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LENROOT. I said covered all; I mean a court could well hold that it covered the same ground.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In section 1 of the Sherman Act combinations and conspiracies in restraint were declared to be unlawful. Then, by section 2, it was provided that any monopoly or attempt to create a monopoly should be deemed to be unlawful. Are we to understand that the words "attempt to create a monopoly," in the second section of the bill, are meaningless, or simply surplusage, and that the Senator contends that the statute would have exactly the same meaning if that language were not there at all?

Mr. LENROOT. It is my own fault, but I did not quite follow the Senator in his question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I trust I shall be able to make it clear. As I understand the Senator, his contention is that any violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act would constitute an attempt to create a monopoly?

Mr. LENROOT. The court might hold it constituted it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If that is the case, then what significance can be given to the words "attempt to create a monopoly" in section 2? That would simply be a repetition.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it might be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me ask the Senator if it is not true that in the construction of a statute we never give that construction to it if it can be avoided?

Mr. LENROOT. There is a reason, I think, for its repetition. Section 1 covers combinations and conspiracies between two or more individuals. Section 2 may cover a single individual, a single person, which section 1 does not. Am I right?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with the Senator fully, and that seems to be a matter concerning which many are in dispute. A single individual may violate section 2, but it takes various individuals to violate section 1. However, that is neither here nor there. The two cover two different subjects.

Mr. LENROOT. But it would be very proper for the language in section 2 to condemn a monopoly or attempt to create a monopoly, because that could be committed by a single individual. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] calls my attention to the fact that the very question raised by the Senator from Montana was fully discussed in the Standard Oil case, which did escape my attention. I will take the liberty of reading the paragraph. The court said:

Undoubtedly the words "to monopolize" and "monopolize" as used in the section reach every act bringing about the prohibited results. The ambiguity, if any, is involved in determining what is intended by monopolize. But this ambiguity is readily dispelled in the light of the previous history of the law of restraint of trade to which we have referred and the indication which it gives of the practical evolution by which monopoly and the acts which produce the same result as monopoly—that is, an undue restraint of the course of trade—all came to be spoken of as, and to be indeed synonymous with, restraint of trade. In other words—

having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade—that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc.—the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section—that is, restraints of trade—by any attempt to monopolize, or monopolization thereof, even although the acts by which such results are attempted to be brought about or are brought about be not embraced within the general enumeration of the first section.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the intent of the bill is perfectly plain. The combinations are forbidden by section 1, because they almost necessarily lead to monopolies.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree with the Senator.

If the Senate committee substitute shall be enacted, here is an association of farmers, growers of agricultural products, and, of course, one of the objects of that association or one of the necessary results will be the elimination of competition between themselves and to secure better prices for their products. So I say the courts might well hold that the purpose of such a combination or association was an attempt to monopolize and therefore within the condemnation of the Senate committee substitute.

Now, I wish to say a word about the constitutional question raised, but, I understand, not asserted, by the Senator from Montana that the House bill is discriminatory in its character and beyond the power of Congress to so discriminate. I say that I do not understand the Senator from Montana asserts that he believes that is true. Indeed, if the House bill be subject to that charge, the Senate committee substitute is likewise subject to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly the Senator perfectly understands me. I suggested it in order that the matter might be discussed here, and because it gave me considerable trouble. I hope the Senator may discuss it.

Mr. LENROOT. I understood the Senator was merely presenting the argument that had been made to him raising the question. Only because the question has been raised, and not at all in conflict with the views of the Senator from Montana, I desire to spend just a moment upon it.

The Connolly case, upon which the argument is based by those who assert the lack of power of Congress to differentiate, was read at some length by the Senator from Montana yesterday. That case and all other cases that have come to the Supreme Court are based upon State legislation, with one exception, which I shall note, and are based upon violations of the fourteenth amendment, which provides that no State shall deny to any citizen the equal protection of the law. The question has been raised, while that is clearly held by the Supreme Court to be a prohibition upon the States, whether there is any prohibition upon Congress to a like effect. The question has never been squarely before the Supreme Court upon any legislation enacted by Congress, because the court in the only two cases I have been able to locate upon the subject has not found it necessary to pass upon that question unless it be in the case of United States against Delaware & Hudson Co., involving the commodities clause of the interstate commerce act. In that case, reported in Two hundred and thirteenth United States, reading from page 415, the court said:

Without elaborating we hold the contention that the clause under consideration is void because of the exception as to timber, and the manufactured products thereof, is without merit—

Senators will remember that there were those exceptions made in that act—

Deciding, as we do, that the clause as construed was a lawful exercise by Congress of the power to regulate commerce, we know of no constitutional limitation requiring that such a regulation when adopted should be applied to all commodities alike. It follows that even if we gave heed to the many reasons of expedience which have been suggested in argument against the exception and the injustice and favoritism which it is asserted will be operated thereby, that fact can have no weight in passing upon the question of power. And the same reasons also dispose of the contention that the clause is void as a discrimination between carriers.

But the question was discussed a little more directly by the Supreme Court in the next volume, Two hundred and fourteenth United States, in the case of District of Columbia against Brooke, which involved the constitutionality of an act of Congress pertaining to the District of Columbia, where one rule of taxation for sewer purposes was laid down with resident property owners and a different rule laid down with reference to nonresident property owners. The court said:

The other objections expressed the same fundamental idea, to wit, that the act discriminates between resident and nonresident owners of property, and because it does it is void. The court of appeals yielded to this contention following the authority of McGuire v. District of Columbia (24 App. D. C., 22).

The defendant in error asserts this discrimination and argues its consequences at some length, but does not refer to any provision of the Constitution of the United States which prohibits Congress from enacting laws which discriminate in their operation between persons or things. If there is no express prohibition of such power, may prohibition be implied from our form of government? Upon that proposition we need not express an opinion. If prohibition exists, it must rest on all the powers conferred by the Constitution. This court, however, has just held in the case of United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co. (218 U. S., 366) that Congress may in the exercise of the powers to regulate commerce among the States discriminate between commodities and between carriers engaged in such commerce. And it was said that the assertion that "injustice and favoritism" might "be operated thereby" could "have no weight in passing upon the question of power." In the case at bar we are dealing with an exercise of the police power, one of the most essential of powers, at times the most insistent, and always one of the least limitable of the powers of government.

The court then holds that, without it becoming necessary to decide that question, it was a proper classification and therefore in any event could be upheld.

So, Mr. President, no prohibition in our Constitution can be found that will prevent Congress from enacting legislation of this sort, irrespective of the reasonableness of the classification, but even under the fourteenth amendment, which is applicable alone to the States, legislation is upheld constantly by the Supreme Court where a reasonable basis can be found for the classification in which the discrimination occurs.

With reference to the Connolly case, if Senators will examine the subject, they will note that in that case Mr. Justice McKenna wrote a very strong dissenting opinion, and in all of the cases which I have been able to find involving the question of classification since that time Justice McKenna, who wrote the dissenting opinion in the Connolly case, writes the majority opinion in the cases, among them the one I have just read. I think I am correct in that statement.

In the case of International Harvester Co. against Missouri, in which the majority opinion also was written by Mr. Justice McKenna, the court said:

Whether the Missouri statute should have set its condemnation on restraints generally, prohibiting combined action for any purpose and to everybody, or confined it as the statute does to manufacturers and vendors of articles and permitting it to purchasers of such articles; prohibiting it to sellers of commodities and permitting it to sellers of services, was a matter of legislative judgment, and we can not say that the distinctions made are palpably arbitrary, which we have seen is the condition of judicial review.

I think a very clear distinction in any event can be made between the Connolly case and the provisions of the pending bill, because the provisions of the bill operate upon associations of the character named therein, and the very purpose of the bill, the very ground upon which it is rested, is that there is such a difference existing in the very nature of things that the only way the growers of agricultural products can be given a fair chance to market their products is by permitting these associations. However, Mr. President, no Senator on the floor has thus far asserted the unconstitutionality of this bill. I wish to suggest that the bill might not in any event be held unconstitutional, even though the doctrine of the Connolly case should be applied directly to it. There is no question about the power of Congress to do what is provided to be done in this bill. The only question that could arise would be whether having done this thing the Sherman law, or what remains of it, thereby becomes invalid because of the discrimination which has followed from the enactment of this proposed legislation; and I have no fear whatever that that question will ever be resolved by the court against the constitutionality of that measure.

Mr. President, I have spoken very much longer than I had expected to speak. I merely wish to repeat that if any relief is to be granted to the farmers of the country, if they are to be given the chance to cooperate and to improve their condition without injury to the public, and, indeed, to the benefit of the public, it may be done by Senators voting for the House bill; but if any Senators believe that no relief should be granted to the farmers; that they are entitled to nothing; that they should remain under the operation of the second section of the Sherman law, then, of course, such Senators will vote for the Senate committee substitute.

Mr. PHIPPS obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the Senator from Wisconsin takes his seat, I wish to ask him a question in order to ascertain if I understand him.

Mr. PHIPPS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to inquire if we fully understand the position of the Senator from Wisconsin. If this bill is discriminatory, as I understand the Senator, it will stand, but the Sherman Act will fall? Is that the position of the Senator?

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from Montana disagree with that? This is an affirmative piece of legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have never heard such a proposition as that asserted before. If the Sherman Act was a valid constitutional enactment at the time it was enacted, it could not become unconstitutional by reason of an amendment to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly Congress has power—I do not think the Senator will disagree with me upon that—to provide a different method of dealing with combinations than has heretofore been provided by Congress, even if it does not in subsequent legislation cover all combinations but does cover some.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no doubt that Congress may expressly or impliedly repeal the Sherman law.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But I can not follow the Senator from Wisconsin when he says that by a subsequent act of Congress the Sherman law may be held to be unconstitutional.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me answer the Senator. Supposing Congress enacts subsequent legislation, which it has the power to enact, for, without question, if there had never been a Sherman law passed, the legislation it enacted would be perfectly proper; but, by reason of the existence of the Sherman law, we have attempted to deal in one way with a certain class of people and in a different way with another class of people; and it should be held that, while in dealing with one class of people we must deal with all alike, or, although there is an evil which the Sherman law was intended to cover and to remedy, we may remove a part of that class from the Sherman law just the same as if we had made an exception to the Sherman law in this instance, which was exactly what was held in the Connolly case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will permit me, it was urged in the Connolly case that although the exception of growers of agricultural products was unconstitutional, nevertheless the remainder of the act could stand; but the court said, "No; the legislature of the State of Illinois has decreed that growers of agricultural products should not be subject to the law; therefore we can not read them into it; and inasmuch as the first section provides that all persons shall be subject to the law, and yet the legislature specifically said that the growers of agricultural products shall not be, therefore the whole law is invalid."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not desire to follow the argument of the Senator or to attempt to refute it. I merely state my own position with respect to the matter. If the legislature of the State of Illinois had passed its antitrust act without the offensive clause in it and had enacted the offensive clause at a subsequent session, the original law, in my judgment, would stand unimpaired and the qualifying clause would be held unconstitutional. It would be held unconstitutional upon the ground that it was equivalent to the reenactment of the original act with the qualifying clause. That would be the law which would be declared to be unconstitutional and not the other law, which would remain unimpaired. So here the Sherman Act exists; it is the law. If we pass this bill we pass a law which practically says, "The Sherman Act is hereby reenacted subject to the following conditions, however." Then the question would be presented as to the legality and constitutionality not of the original act but of the subsequent act, and that being held unconstitutional, the original act would remain in all of its force and effect.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, on yesterday I presented an amendment to the pending bill which is intended to enlarge the marketing facilities of the farmer. The amendment is printed and has been placed on the desk of every Senator.

As I understand, the intent and purpose of the bill is to provide better marketing facilities for the producers of farm products and to reduce the expense of marketing such products without increasing the cost to the ultimate consumer, thus enabling the farmer to realize more for his products. As the bill is drawn it applies largely to the sale of agricultural products in the form in which they leave the farm. The farmer, however, is vitally interested in the application of this plan of marketing to another class of his crops. Reverting now to the amendment, I call attention to its language. It reads as follows: "And where any such agricultural product or products must be submitted to a manufacturing process, in order to convert it or them into a finished commodity, and the price paid by the manufacturer to the producer thereof is controlled by or dependent upon the price received by the manufacturer for the finished commodity by contract entered into before the production of such agricultural product or products, then any such manufacturers may" have the facilities and the opportunity of cooperating in the selling of their products as provided in this bill for the farmer himself.

The farmer sells his milk to butter, cheese, and condensing factories; his beets to sugar factories; his chicory to chicory factories; and his fruits and vegetables to canning factories. Sometimes such factories are cooperative institutions; sometimes they are not. In many cases, however, the farmer and factory enter into an agreement before the production of such commodities, under which the price paid by the manufacturer to the farmer depends upon the price which the manufacturer shall receive for the finished product.

Obviously, the farmer selling his product under such a contract is vitally interested in the application of the principle of this bill to the sale of the finished commodity by the manufacturer.

The purpose of the amendment which I have offered is to cover this particular method of the sale of farm products. Such an extension of the provisions of the bill can not work any hardship to the ultimate consumer, as his rights are amply protected by the last paragraph of the bill.

The amendment simply gives the advantages afforded by the pending bill to the hundreds of thousands of farmers throughout the United States who are raising farm products and under contractual agreements are selling them to manufacturers upon such terms that the ultimate price received by the farmer is dependent upon the price which the manufacturer receives for the finished commodity.

Such terms of sale virtually make of every such manufacturing institution a cooperative enterprise, in which the farmer and manufacturer share in the net returns received from the sale of the finished commodity.

Through such associations as are proposed by the amendment crosshauls will be avoided and the commodities involved can be distributed in the territory most economically served. When unnecessary freight charges are incurred in the distribution of a commodity they have to be absorbed somewhere along the line, and their elimination is for the benefit of both producer and consumer. In the past both producer and consumer have suffered seriously through speculation in essential food products on the part of the agencies standing between the two, to the serious injury of both and to the benefit of no one save possibly such speculators. They are the only ones who can possibly be adversely affected through the adoption of the proposed amendment.

Speculation can be eliminated through such associations as are proposed, while the consuming public will be fully protected by the provision contained in the last paragraph of the bill as it now stands.

Some of the products mentioned are subject to most vigorous foreign competition, and the economical distribution thereof is therefore particularly essential.

I might cite as an instance the manufacture of sugar. In the case of beet sugar, produced in about 17 of our States extending from Ohio and Michigan and Colorado to California, the customary practice is for the factory to contract with the farmer for such acreage of beets as he may produce at not less than a fixed rate for a ton of beets, over and above which the farmer shall receive upon a sliding-scale basis such additional compensation as may be found possible through the ability of the factory to sell its sugar product at more than an agreed minimum price per pound. That means that the farmer producing the beets is a partner in the process of the manufacturer preparing his product for market, in that he is to receive a portion of the selling price over and above the minimum agreed upon as between himself and the factory purchasing the beets.

One of the practices which have grown up in the marketing of sugar in our country—and I refer now largely to our home production, and particularly to the beet sugar—is that each factory sells its own product through brokers and jobbers or, perhaps, through a broker to a jobber. The competition between the various factories at different times has been great, and while the price of the sugar as a rule is controlled by the foreign products coming into our market, which constitutes 75 per cent or more as against our home production of less than 25 per cent, yet the broker and the jobber are the ones coming into control of the real distribution of that sugar. They are the ones who as middlemen have pocketed inordinate profits. The most recent example of that which we had, perhaps, was in the years 1919 and 1920.

I believe that this amendment should not be objected to and that it would be beneficial, and that in practice it would not be abused as applied either to the bill as amended by the Senate committee or as originally passed by the House. There is no difference in the language of section 1 of the bill. The identical language was rewritten into the bill as reported to the Senate.

There is one additional clause in the first section of the bill to which my attention has been called, and that is that whereas the farmers of a certain community may cooperate and get together and form an organization, and this bill would permit such organization to market the products of those farmers, what is really necessary to complete this system of cooperative marketing is to permit the organizations or associations of different contiguous communities to act together through one selling agency. Some question has been raised as to the language of the bill being broad enough to permit of that combination of associations in marketing the produce of all of the farmers of some large section or territory.

In order to correct that it was suggested to strike out, on lines 15 and 16 of page 4 of the present bill, the words "Such associations may have marketing agencies in common," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Such associations may be members of a cooperative association that markets in common the products of the members thereof and the constituent members of each association forming the same.

The intention being so to broaden that language as to leave no doubt as to the right of organizations representing various farming communities to market through a common agency.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether there is any probability of getting a vote on this bill within the next day or two?

Mr. NORRIS. I should think there ought to be. We ought to be able to reach a vote on it to-morrow, I should think.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska let me ask unanimous consent for limitation of debate on the bill now, or would he rather go on?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield for that purpose. I shall not be able to finish to-night unless we run late. It is almost time to quit now.

Mr. KELLOGG. I send to the desk a proposed unanimous-consent agreement, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that from and after 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of February 8, 1922, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill (H. R. 2373) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered to the said bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. With the understanding that we shall take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder if the Senator would not agree, first, to suggest taking a recess until 12 o'clock. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is engaged in having hearings. If there is any objection to meeting at 12 instead of 11, I will withdraw the suggestion; but why not try that first?

Mr. KELLOGG. I am perfectly willing to have that done.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us have the understanding, first, that we will take a recess until 12 o'clock if this is agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I shall have no objection to that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is the length of time a Senator may consume after 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes on the bill, and five minutes on any amendment, is provided for in the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hardly know what to say about that. I want to occupy a few minutes of the time, and I have no notion about the number of Senators who want to speak upon the subject. I do not want to speak more than 20 minutes, or something like that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think we can very safely make that 20 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on amendments.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am willing to do that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator make it 3 o'clock instead of 2 o'clock?

Mr. KELLOGG. We certainly would not get through if we did. Is the Senator willing to make it 15 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on any amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Fifteen minutes is ample for me. I probably shall not take 10 minutes; but we have not been on the bill very long, considering how discussions go in the Senate, and I am afraid we may shut off some one.

Mr. CUMMINS. One of the difficulties about that is that under the ruling of the Chair, there being an amendment pending, no one can speak more than five minutes until the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. KELLOGG. Ten minutes on an amendment and 15 minutes on the bill is what I have proposed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Really, a more satisfactory way would be to make it 15 or 20 minutes on an amendment and 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would rather have 20 minutes on the amendments and 5 minutes on the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. If Senators are trying to expedite the matter and get a vote soon, that will not do it. The more time we permit on amendments the longer the debate will be, because in this case there is a substitute, and there will always be an amendment pending until the substitute is voted on. We will never talk on the bill until we get rid of the substitute, because it never will be before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Nor afterwards, unless—

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, there will always be a time when a Senator can consume his time on the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me suggest that we make it 20 minutes on the pending substitute of the committee and 5 minutes on any other amendment and 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a very good suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. That would be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator make that 3 o'clock instead of 2. If the Senate does not meet until 12, it will give only two hours until 2 o'clock, and I am sure some Senators would be apt to be cut out.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not like to make a different rule for the pending amendment—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Call it a substitute.

Mr. KELLOGG. But I am willing to agree that after 2 o'clock any Senator may speak 20 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on any amendment. That certainly will give time enough.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The difficulty about that, as the Senator will readily appreciate, is that the pending matter is a substitute, which, of course, is an amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the Senator can talk on the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but we can not talk on the main bill, as the Senator from Nebraska suggests, until the substitute is disposed of; and when the substitute is voted on and disposed of the sentiment of the Senate on the whole thing is taken.

Mr. KELLOGG. What was the Senator's proposition?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My proposition was that the debate be limited to 20 minutes on the pending substitute, and 5 minutes on any other amendment, and 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What would be the situation if the Senator from Minnesota should offer an amendment to the original bill, as he proposes to do?

Mr. KELLOGG. I would have five minutes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That might last until 2 o'clock, and then, while that was pending, there could only be discussion of five minutes. I think the House bill and the Senate bill ought to be treated as two bills, and that a Senator ought to be allowed to speak 20 minutes on either one of those measures, and then only 5 minutes on any amendment to either of them.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is what the Senator from Montana proposes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Twenty minutes on the substitute or on the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But then, the difficulty is, if some Senator offers an amendment to either of them the Chair has already held that that amendment would be exclusively pending, and any Senator who spoke, whether he was interested in that amendment or not, would be limited to five minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. But still there would come a time, if he was not interested in the amendment and was interested in the substitute or in the bill, when he could utilize his 20 minutes. He could not be cheated out of that, and he could remain quiet and contain himself while the amendment was pending and the 5-minute debate was going on in which he was not interested.

Mr. KELLOGG. As amended by the suggestion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], will the Secretary please read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement as modified.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

That from and after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, February 8, 1922, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon the bill (H. R. 2373) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products, or more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon the amendment of the committee to the said bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered to either.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to object to that or any similar unanimous-consent agreement for a final vote or for the limitation of debate at this time. This bill has been under debate in the Senate for a very few days.

Mr. KELLOGG. For four days.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. For four days, the Senator from Minnesota says; and the time has been occupied mostly by the advocates of the bill and of the so-called Senate substitute for the bill. Some of those speeches were of several hours each. I do not criticize the Senators for that, because I recognize that the subject matter is extremely intricate and very important, and that much of a Senator's time is taken up, when he makes a speech on this kind of a subject, in yielding to his colleagues, and getting into colloquies, and thus using his time.

I regard this as one of the most important subjects that have ever come before Congress in my term of service. I do not want to prevent and shall not try to prevent a vote upon the bill, but a very slight amendment offered to the Senate substitute, or even if that should be voted down, to what is known as the House bill—and there may be many of them—may bring on just as serious a constitutional debate in the consideration of the authorities and the public policy as the main bill itself. I do not think that at this stage of the proceeding Senators ought to limit themselves to five minutes, and only one talk of five minutes on an amendment which may be an entire substitute or may bring up points and suggestions which have not been hitherto considered at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. How long a time for speeches would the Senator suggest?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would suggest that no attempt be made to-day to put a limit upon debate, because—

Mr. NORRIS. Following the Senator's suggestion—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will permit me just a moment, I will complete my statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I was about to make a suggestion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has already stated that he desires to discuss this measure. His views upon this question do not agree with mine, but there is no Senator on the floor who has had a wider experience or is more learned upon such questions than is the Senator from Iowa, and he is asked to limit his remarks upon the bill to 20 minutes and upon all amendments, the nature of which he can not now foresee at all, to 5 minutes. I do not think we ought to tie ourselves with that kind of an agreement now. I see no necessity for such haste. There are very few Senators here, Mr. President. There are not one-eighth of the Senators present, and such an agreement would bind all the absent Senators without knowing whether they desire to make addresses on the subject or not.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will listen to a suggestion from the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I have the floor, I understand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rose to object, and I was giving my reasons.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to state that I agree with the Senator, and I desire to say that I am not finding fault with him at all. I realize that there is a great deal of merit in what he has said. Most of the debate has been on one side. I have the floor and expect to make some remarks in favor of the bill as it passed the House, but I am willing to yield the floor to the Senator or to any other Senator who is opposed to the bill and desires to be heard. I concede the fairness of the proposition that the other side ought to be heard as we go along, and I am willing to yield the floor now if the Senator wants to take it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I stated that I do not criticize any Senator who has spoken. I realize that the subject can not be presented in 5 minutes or 25 minutes, and to discuss both the bill as it passed the House and the Senate substitute satisfactorily at the same time—which is what we have been doing—is impossible in 15 or 20 minutes. For the purpose of bringing this matter to a conclusion, I object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, and the Senator from Nebraska may proceed.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator like to proceed now in opposition?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I am not demanding the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask if there is any other Senator here who has not spoken and desires to speak against the bill. I concede the justice of the criticism, if it might be termed such, although I do not think the Senator from Connecticut intended it as such, that most of the talking has been by those in favor of the bill. The Senators in opposition are entitled to be heard. I concede that they have a right to be heard as we proceed, and I am willing to yield the floor to anyone who wants to talk against the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I send to the desk a proposed amendment to the House text, which I ask to have lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire that it be printed?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I desire that it be printed.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the amendment may be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, section 2, line 18, strike out the word "therefrom," and in lieu insert the words "from monopolization or restraint of trade"; and, on page 3, lines 3 and 4, strike out the word "therefrom," and in lieu insert the words "from monopolization or restraint of trade."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand there is an amendment to the House text now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; a committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand it is desired that an executive session shall be held. I have no objection to going on for a while, but I shall not be able to finish my remarks this evening unless we run later than we have been doing.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator in charge of the bill would like to have the Senator go on for a little while; but we do want an executive session.

Mr. KELLOGG. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will go on for a while, unless he would be willing to have the Senate recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. NORRIS. I would rather go on for a little while now than have the Senate recess until 11 to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think it is scarcely fair to the Senator from Nebraska to ask him to split up his address in this way. It is nearly 5 o'clock now. We have not been wasting any time on the bill so far, and I think it would be only just to recess at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am as anxious as anybody else to get along with the bill. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate shall conclude its business this evening it will take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and I shall try to arrange the meeting of the Committee on Agriculture for some other time. If there is no objection to this course I will move to go into executive session now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not hear the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow. The Chair hears no objection, and the agreement is entered into.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate, in accordance with the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 8, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 7, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed heavenly Father, we would set our faces toward Thee. How much we are comforted that Thy love springs from Thy compassion rather than from our merits. Behind the poorest mortal that trembles on the verge of wreck and ruin throbs the heart of the God of love. We thank Thee more than human lips can tell. Be Thou the power in ourselves that we may work out careers of abiding usefulness and endless happiness. In every way enable us to be strong, unselfish, patriotic, and fearless in the defense of the right and achieve successfully the highest tasks of life. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record in 8-point type by inserting copy of statement made by myself before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee considering appropriations for the War Department, upon the subject "Transportation and rates," said statement being made January 12, 1922, and appearing on pages 258 to 271 of part 2 of the committee hearings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by inserting a statement which he made before the Committee on Appropriations. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the remarks referred to:

STATEMENT OF HON. CLEVELAND A. NEWTON, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF MISSOURI.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. NEWTON, I notice that you have introduced a bill, which has been referred to this committee, appropriating a total sum of $40,000,000 for the improvement of the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers. We would be glad to hear any statement you desire to make in regard to the matter.

Mr. NEWTON. I assume, of course, that these hearings will be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. There are one or two things that I would like briefly to call attention to on the subject of the general policy of these river and harbor appropriations. Prior to the passage of the act approved June 25, 1910, Congress instructed the engineers to make a report upon the improvement of the Ohio River and upon the Mississippi River between Cairo and St. Louis, and on the Mississippi River above St. Louis, or between St. Louis and Minneapolis, and on the Missouri from St. Louis to Kansas City. The engineers brought in that report, in which they estimated the amount that would be required to make those improvements.

Congress in the act approved June 25, 1910, adopted that project with the estimates of the engineers. Upon the basis of that report Congress wrote into the law, "Improving the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to and including the mouth of the Missouri River: Continuing improvement, with a view of completing said improvement within a period of 12 years," and they made at that time an appropriation of $500,000. The engineers in their report estimated that the amount required between the Ohio River and the mouth of the Missouri River would be $21,000,000. Now, 12 years have passed, and during those 12 years, in carrying out that 12-year project, Congress has actually appropriated $1,970,000. We have now on that section of the river a barge line that is actually operating. Between St. Louis and New Orleans this barge line has been operating for several years, and while they have had an 8-foot channel between St. Louis and Cairo the operating end of the barge line company complains that the channel is not a practicable barge channel. It is all right for the old-time type of packet boats to worm through, but it is not a good barge channel. For instance, a tow went down the other day from Cairo to New Orleans, consisting of one towboat and seven or eight barges, and that tow was 900 feet long and 150 feet wide.

It is hard to go around the river bends between Cairo and St. Louis with any such a fleet as that, but that tow carried enough freight, allowing 50,000 pounds to the freight car, to load 12 full freight trains. While the water was high, they had full cargoes to go down from St. Louis. A number of them made the trip from St. Louis to New Orleans with that amount of freight in six days, and they carry from 50 to 60 per cent of the same amount of freight upstream from New Orleans to St. Louis in 12 days. That is as quick as you can expect a freight train to go. As a matter of fact, shippers say that it is quicker. At the same time, in 1910, an appropriation was made for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri to Minneapolis. Congress adopted that project, with a view to completing such improvement within a period of 12 years. The 12 years have passed, or nearly so. They estimated that it would cost $27,000,000 for the improvement of the river from the mouth of the Missouri to Minneapolis, and Congress has appropriated $12,250,000 in that time. In that connection, I think that our policy ought to be changed a little. We have got a good channel from New Orleans to Cairo, and I think that the river should be improved so as to extend it to St. Louis for navigation purposes before you go any further.

I am in favor of improving it on to Minneapolis, and they have spent $12,000,000 between St. Louis and Minneapolis. But only $1,900,000 of the $21,000,000 needed for the river between Cairo and St. Louis has thus far been spent upon this important stretch of the river, upon which large operations are now being carried on. If this channel had been completed between Cairo and St. Louis, commerce to-day would be going from St. Louis instead of being stopped at Cairo during the low-water season and then being shipped on to St. Louis by other means. On the Ohio River we adopted that project in 1910. The improvement of the Ohio from Pittsburgh to Cairo was estimated to cost $63,731,000, and there have been expended $43,624,000 during the 11 years or nearly 12 years. During that period of time it was contemplated by this act, and, as a matter of fact, provided in the act, that the project should be completed within 12 years. But we have not kept faith by making the promised appropriations. As for the improvement of the Missouri River between Kansas City and St. Louis, that was provided for on page 21 of the act approved July 25, 1912. That act provided for the improvement of the Missouri River, "With a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1287, Sixty-first Congress, third session, and with a view to the completion of such improvement within a period of 10 years." That document provided that it would cost $20,000,000 to complete that work and give us a permanent 6-foot channel. Congress adopted that project and referred to that document by number and wrote into that law that it should be completed within a period of 10 years.

During that period of 10 years we have actually appropriated only $7,000,000. At that time business men of Kansas City came down here and appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and the committee said, "We will improve the river if you will use it." Then they said, "We will go back and raise a million dollars to build barges and towboats and will put them on the river and go into operation." They carried out their part of the understanding by going home and organizing a company with a capital of $1,250,000; but Congress, out of the $20,000,000 estimated as necessary, has appropriated only $7,000,000. Of course, you will realize that a river for navigation purposes is not any better than at its shallowest point. The record shows that the company made money during the high-water seasons, but when the high-water season was over they ran onto sand bars and most of the profit they had made was lost, and when the war began their boats were commandeered and put into use on the Mississippi. Here is one thing that has a general bearing on this matter, and I want to mention it in the presence of Gen. Taylor. I assumed from conversations I had with Gen. Dawes some time ago in discussing this matter that it was to be the general policy to continue work about as it was being carried on; that is, not to treat the waterways any worse than they had been treated the year before. From the figures of the Chief of Engineers I found that two years ago, or 1919, we appropriated $12,000,000, and at that time we had available in the Treasury $58,863,787.14 of unexpended balance of appropriations made in former years.

Mr. ANTHONY. For specific projects?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes; it was not for general use. It was for specific projects. That was the balance unexpended of our general appropriations previously made for rivers and harbors. We had that much available, and you appropriated $12,000,000 to go into these other projects. When you appropriated the $12,000,000 you had $72,863,787 available for river and harbor work that year. Last year we appropriated $15,000,000, and at the time we made the appropriation of $15,000,000 we had available in the Treasury $37,565,235.11.

Mr. Sisson. That was a book credit.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes, sir; that was the amount of the appropriation that was available. That made the total sum available $52,562,000. Now, I understand from the engineers, and if I am not right Gen. Taylor can correct me, that there will be practically no balance available when June comes. Is that true, General?

Gen. TAYLOR. I have brought out several times the fact that the entire work next year must depend absolutely on money that we get this year.

Mr. NEWTON. Then, if we are to treat the rivers and harbors as well next year you will have to have $62,000,000, based on the estimates from the engineers as to what they will actually need in their districts?

Gen. TAYLOR. They stated that they could use $62,000,000.

Mr. NEWTON. On necessary projects?

Gen. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEWTON. If we are to carry out the work on projects like the Ohio, the lower Missouri, and the upper Mississippi, a start should be made. You make your appropriations, and then come to us and say, "Well, why are you not using the river?" The answer is that there is no completed, dependable channel on which to operate. It has already been fully demonstrated that there is a very large tonnage of freight available for shipment on the barge line now operating between St. Louis and New Orleans, but the business can not be successfully and profitably carried on unless a better channel is provided between St. Louis and Cairo.

I understand that Gen. Taylor was asked some questions about the freight question, and I want to discuss that for the benefit of the committee. I have gone into that question rather fully.

FREIGHT RATES—TYPE OF BOATS USED.

Mr. Sisson. If you do not mind, let the record show these facts: As you know, the war broke into the river and harbor work, first, because you could not get the labor; second, because you could not get the materials; and, third, we needed every dollar we could get to fight the war. That, of course, accounts for the sudden falling off in the appropriations for river and harbor improvements.

Gen. TAYLOR. On the other hand, it accounts for the large balance that we had a year and two years ago.

Mr. Sisson. Yes; it accounts for the large amount of money you had.

I am very much interested in your freight-rate proposition.

Mr. NEWTON. I think I have something here that will interest the committee. I have here a map that I worked out from information that I got from the Interstate Commerce Commission. I want to say this, however, before I take up this rate question: I live in the Mississippi Valley, and there are other Members in the Mississippi Valley who are interested in this question equally with myself. I did not know about these hearings, and I only learned by accident that these matters were to be taken up to-day. I know of a number of Members of Congress who are very much interested in these projects, or just as much interested in them as I am. We feel this way about it: We recognize that with these large lump-sum appropriations the seaports of the country, where the big ships come, are going to make the strongest demands on the engineers when emergencies occur. A year or two ago there was a great storm on the Gulf coast that wrecked a lot of the ports down there, and the engineers had to use a great deal of the money in making those ports sound, where great ships were coming and going. In other words, those things must be taken care of, and under a lump-sum appropriation they can not help the Mississippi Valley waterways unless the appropriation is large enough to take care of those waterways, together with what is necessary at these other places. That is true, because the engineers must use discretion and must spend the money where it is most urgently required.

Now, in the study of the rate question, I will ask you to please look at this map. Look at the line between Portland, Me., and New Orleans, covering a distance of 1,686 miles. The rate on first-class freight between those points is $2.05½ in carload lots. That is the rate because there is water competition between Portland, Me., and New Orleans. Now, look at the line from Cincinnati to New Orleans, where water competition does not obtain, because the locks and dams on the Ohio River have not been completed, and you will see that the rate from Cincinnati, for one-half the distance, or 749 miles, is 1 cent more per hundred, or $2.06½. As I have said, the distance between Portland, Me., and New Orleans is 1,686 miles, and the rate is $2.05½, where there is water competition, while the rate from New Orleans to Denver, Colo., where you could not have water transportation under any conditions, is $3.04, the distance being 1,349 miles. The rate, as you will see, is $1 more per hundred. As you will see, the rate from Portland, Me., to New Orleans, for a distance of 1,686 miles, is $2.05½ per hundred, while the rate from New Orleans to Denver, a distance of 1,349 miles, is $3.04 per hundred. The distance from Kansas City to New Orleans is 879 miles, or about half the distance from Portland, Me., to New Orleans, and the freight rate from Kansas City to New Orleans is $2.48 as against $2.05½ from Portland, Me., to New Orleans. That is true because the rivers are not so improved as to afford water competition.

Mr. Sisson. That lowers the freight rate?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes, sir. Wherever you have water competition available the railroads always cut the freight rate down.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is your rate from St. Louis to New Orleans?

Mr. NEWTON. It is 20 per cent less than the rail rate. Wherever you find there is water competition you will find that the rail rates are cut down.

Now, I have called upon the Interstate Commerce Commission for the rates between certain points, and I have their letter here.

Mr. Sisson. Did you get all of these figures from the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. NEWTON. I got those figures on the map from Mr. Brent, who obtained them from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Sisson. Those figures are the official figures?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes, sir. I think that Mr. Brent is entirely reliable, and he obtained those schedules from the Interstate Commerce Commission. I asked him to get those figures and make up the map. I called upon the Interstate Commerce Commission for the rates between certain points, and the chief of the section of tariffs, Mr. Crosland, wrote me a letter and sent me these figures. These figures show that the rate on paint, in carload lots, from Boston to Seattle, a distance of 3,000 miles, across all of the rivers, prairies, and mountains of the country, is $1.83½ per 100 pounds. There is water competition between those points clear around through the canal.

Now, the rate on paint from St. Louis to Denver, a distance of about 1,000 miles, or not more than one-third the distance from Boston to Seattle, and over a level country, through a country in which there really are no mountains, the rate is $1.06½ per hundred pounds. In other words, for that haul clear across the rivers, valleys, and mountains, from Boston to Seattle, the rate is $1.83½ per hundred pounds simply because there is water competition. As against that, they charge $1.06½ per hundred pounds for hauling the freight a distance of 1,000 miles through a country where there are no mountains, and that high rate is maintained because there is no water competition. I have figures here showing the rate on lemons. The rate on lemons—and this applies to other fruits as well—from Los Angeles to Kansas City is $1.66½ per hundred pounds in carload lots, and the rate on lemons and other fruits from Los Angeles to Boston is the same. They charge the same rate on lemons and fruit of all kinds from Los Angeles and San Francisco to Kansas City, St. Louis, and Cincinnati, as they do to Boston. They used to charge less than that until we got the long and short haul provision in the Esch-Cummins bill. According to the information I have obtained from the Interstate Commerce Commission, wherever you find there is water competition with the railroads you will see that they try to cut under the water competition. Gen. Taylor was talking awhile ago about the Goltra Line. Goltra tried to put a barge line on the Upper Mississippi River from Minneapolis to St. Louis to handle iron ore. He has a large blast furnace at St. Louis. When they were preparing to go into operation the railroads went before the Interstate Commerce Commission and got a special rate on iron ore.

I heard to-day, but not from an official source, that the rate on iron ore from Minneapolis to St. Louis is now 25½ cents per hundred pounds, in carload lots. Now, you have a shorter haul and, as I understand it, better railroad facilities from Minneapolis to Kansas City than you have from Minneapolis to St. Louis, but you have no river route. Now, as I have said, they have a rate on iron ore from Minneapolis to St. Louis of 25½ cents per hundred pounds, in carload lots, but they make the rate 34 cents from Minneapolis to Kansas City. That is done in order to cut under the Goltra Line and make his river operation unprofitable. There is that difference between 25 cents and 34 cents, the lower rate being on a railroad that winds along with the river for a long distance, as against a higher rate for a shorter haul across the level prairie to Kansas City.

Now, in that connection I want to give you some figures that I am prepared to verify. The barge line is allowed a rate of 80 per cent of the rate of the railroad that parallels the river, but the rates of the railroads that parallel the rivers represent not more than 50 per cent of the average rates of the railroads of the country. I sent down to some shippers and got some of these figures, and some of them I obtained from the Interstate Commerce Commission. For instance, I obtained the rate on sugar from New Orleans to St. Louis by railroad and on hardware south.

Prior to January of this year the rate on 100 pounds of sugar from New Orleans to St. Louis, a distance of 700 miles, via all-rail route, was 44 cents, while the rate on 100 pounds of sugar from New Orleans to Camden, Ark., was 50 cents, although it is not much more than half the distance, and simply because it is off from the river. A shipper at St. Louis told me that he used to get a certain rate from St. Louis to Vicksburg. I do not remember the exact rate, but some time after that the river got away from Vicksburg, so that the boats could not go there, and when that happened the railroads raised the rates to Vicksburg because there was no water competition. The rate on 100 pounds of hardware from St. Louis to New Orleans, a distance of 700 miles, by railroad lines paralleling the river, prior to January, was 44 cents, while the rate on 100 pounds of hardware from St. Louis to Wiggins, Miss., which is off the river, was 87 cents. That was over the same roads, and the distance was 50 miles less, but boats could not go there, and therefore they raised the freight rate from 44 cents to 87 cents. In January they changed the rates, and since January 1, under the new rates, the railroads paralleling the river carry 100 pounds of sugar from New Orleans to St. Louis for 59½ cents, while the rate from New Orleans to Camden, Ark., is 69 cents.

As you will see, the differential in favor of the river haul is lower than it was before. Under the new rate the railroads paralleling the river carry 100 pounds of hardware from St. Louis to New Orleans for $1.73 instead of 44 cents, and charge a rate of $2.08 from St. Louis to Wiggins, Miss. In that case the differential is not as great as formerly. Now, in the face of that advantage, we go ahead and make appropriations to make up the deficit of the railroads. We have appropriated about $1,600,000,000 to make up the deficit of the railroads, and yet the barge line, which is hauling our freight on the river at 80 per cent of the rate of the railroads paralleling the river, is making money. I find that the total receipts of the barge line, over their total disbursements, since the 1st of April, amount to approximately $200,000.

Mr. Sisson. What barge line is that?

Mr. Newton. That is the barge line from St. Louis to New Orleans. The one on the Warrior River has not been profitable as yet, but will, no doubt, be eventually successful. They started, I think, with two towboats, and about the 1st of July they had two more. Then they had difficulty with the towboats. The people who first handled the operation were not really friendly to it. I secured some information in regard to it. For instance, I looked into the pay roll, and I found that when Mr. Tomlinson was handling the barge line—

Mr. Anthony (interposing). Who is Mr. Tomlinson?

Mr. Newton. He was under Walker Hines, when he was Director General of Railroads, and he came from the Great Lakes.

Mr. Sisson. He was Mr. Walker Hines's barge line man?

Mr. Newton. Yes, sir. Now, when this line was put into operation I went over the list. I asked him to give me a list of the pay rolls showing who was employed and what they were paid. I found that they were paying Mr. Tomlinson the same salary as director of this small line starting with old, out of date, and experimental equipment that they were paying to Walker Hines as the director general of all of the railroads of the United States, or $25,000 a year, and to Mr. Sanders, of New Orleans, they paid $15,000 a year for the Mississippi section. They paid Brent as traffic manager $10,000.

Mr. Anthony. That was under the United States Railroad Administration?

Mr. Newton. Yes; and then they ask why we do not make a profit on the barge line. They not only did that, but Tomlinson gave the contract for designing the towboats and barges to a firm in New York, some concern which designs yachts and other ocean craft and which did not know anything about the type of boats required on the Mississippi. This designer was never on the Mississippi; he did not know a blame thing about it, but he was allowed to design the barges and towboats for the Mississippi River. The operating end say they will be all right, but there is a difference of opinion about whether those barges and towboats are proper boats. He designed powerful boats with twin screws under the rear end, while the old river men say they should have been stern-wheelers. Nevertheless, those are the boats we have. I am giving you these things to show you conditions and the difficulties which have existed.

Mr. Sisson. They are very expensive boats.

Mr. Newton. Yes; the towboats cost $305,000 and the barges cost $103,000.

Mr. Anthony. Are not those towboats working all right now?

Mr. Newton. Yes; they are now working fairly well, but they have had to make many alterations, and the cost of these repairs have all been taken out of the earnings. For instance, when they put them in operation they found that the propellers were too small for the engines and the engines would race, so they had to take the propellers off and put on larger propellers. Fortunately there was enough space so they could put them on. When they got them on and put on the power of the engine the rear end of the thing wobbled like a duck's tail, and then after spending $50,000 or $60,000 on each one of the towboats they got them properly adjusted; yet they still have difficulties, because they say every once in a while a log gets under and breaks the propeller. To change this difficulty they have changed the propeller blades from steel to bronze.

In the face of those difficulties and the readjustments they have to make, they have made money—and, mind you, those boats cost two or three times what they should have cost; there is no doubt about that, and the administration requires them to set aside 5 per cent for depreciation; that is upon the theory that these towboats and barges will be worn out in 20 years, whereas the old river men have shown me barges that have been on the river for 40 years; they have actually been there that long and are still good barges, yet they make the barge line set aside 5 per cent for depreciation, based on the war-time cost, which was at least twice as much as it should have been. That will give you an idea of what they are doing; but they have made enough money to pay all their expenses, to pay the depreciation, and have enough left to pay 3 per cent on the book value of their investment. Where is there a railroad in this country doing anything like that?

I called on the director of the barge line for figures showing the amount of freight they have carried, and I find that the differential on the total amount of freight they have carried between January and the end of August was enough to save the shippers $357,593. That was the saving to the shippers.

Mr. Sisson. How long did you say?

Mr. Newton. From January, when they did not carry much because of insufficient equipment. In April they had two towboats, in June they got another, in July they got another, and they had an old one, so that they wound up with five or six, and there was a saving of that differential to the shippers in that length of time.

Mr. Sisson. What length of time?

Mr. Newton. From the 1st of January until the end of August the amount saved being $357,593. There was that saving in it for the shippers. I find there is another difficulty they are having. I am not properly prepared to make this statement before the committee, having had no notice that this bill was up for consideration until a few moments ago, but if you want to get some interesting information I suggest that you get the joint rail and water rates from New Orleans to points inland and see whether the railroads get the lion's share of the division. That is the one trouble we have had. To show you the benefit to inland points, a couple of months ago one cargo went from Omaha to New Orleans, by railroad to Cairo and by water from there on, and that differential saved that shipper nearly $5,000. If you would complete the approved project on the Missouri River from its mouth to Kansas City, you would reach the center of the wheat belt of the country, and give to the farmers of that great area cheap water transportation from Kansas City to the Gulf for all of their grain for export, and they would also have water transportation down to St. Louis, then to Cairo, and on over the Ohio River to Pittsburgh for all of their flour.

Mr. Anthony. Mr. Newton, right on that point, does not the law provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall first approve all railroad rates before they are put into effect?

Mr. Newton. Yes; and they are approving them right along.

Mr. ANTHONY. And they are not supposed to approve any rate that is not fair and equitable.

Mr. NEWTON. They are not supposed to do that, but here is what they do: Whenever a road comes in and asks it and the shippers want it, they approve it, just like they did this other rate from St. Louis to St. Paul.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then your statement in effect is an indictment of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. NEWTON. It is, and I have no hesitation in saying it.

Mr. ANTHONY. For approving rates that are not fair?

Mr. NEWTON. Exactly.

Mr. Sisson. Your argument is that the best regulatory measure of freight rates is water improvement?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes. We ought to pay the railroads compensatory rates by which they can pay their expenses and a dividend to the stockholders, but we should not permit them to make "cut-throat" rates for the purpose of destroying water competition.

Mr. Sisson. Here is the unfairness about that: They will reduce their freight rates in connection with competitive points below a figure at which the freight can be carried at a profit and then double up the charge on the interior freight, thus making up the loss on the river business, which makes a most criminal rate-making arrangement.

Mr. NEWTON. That is true, and I am wondering how long the people in the Mississippi Valley are going to stand that—that is, having unfair rates made at the expense of the people in the valley—but they are now finding it out. A business man wrote me and said, "I do not think we are being harmed because we are getting water rates on the railroads." They do from New Orleans to St. Louis, but they make it up on what comes from Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, and other places. In other words, we do not get an equitable rate where there is no waterway, but we get an equitable rate where there is a waterway. The whole thing is on a wrong basis. There is another thing I want to say to you. I am frank about, and I think I have a right as a Member of Congress to express my opinion. I know how your Budget is made up. I know that Gen. Dawes told us—we had him before the Rivers and Harbors Committee—that the only thing he could do was to supervise. He said, "I can not know the details of all these things; I have got to call on the heads of departments. I say to the War Department, 'You have got to cut so much,' and to the Department of Commerce, 'You must cut so much,' and to the other departments, 'You must cut so much,' and they go and make cuts for their departments. I can not know about the details of all these things." I know that the engineers have been the friends of the waterways, but the engineers are off in one corner of the War Department.

The General Staff is not interested in waterways. They say, "You can make your cut on the waterways and save money for the rest of the War Department." We went before Secretary Weeks on this thing, and he cut us down to $27,800,000. He started with $13,500,000, and then he got up to $27,800,000 after we made our showing. It is his recommendation to this committee, because it is his recommendation that finally goes. Dawes did not dig into that department to see how much they were giving the General Staff for other purposes or how much for rivers and harbors. They arbitrarily make their cuts in the waterways appropriations, because the War Department is not interested in them.

Now, I do not criticize the engineers, because I know they have done the best they could with the money that was allowed them. Secretary Weeks brought us down to $27,800,000 for all the rivers and harbors in the United States, which is little enough for the big harbors of the country; and with that amount we will never get to our rivers if the engineers make a fair distribution on the merits—that is, make improvements where the greatest commerce is. But, in face of that fact, yesterday he went with Secretary Hoover and Secretary Denby before the Interstate Commerce Committee and recommended to the Interstate Commerce Committee that they provide for an expenditure of $11,000,000 to build an 8-mile canal across Cape Cod, and I am informed that it will take at least $10,000,000 more to complete this canal and make it ready for use.

Mr. ANTHONY. You mean to purchase it?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes. That is more than two-thirds of all the money recommended by the Secretary of War for the improvement of all the rivers and harbors in the United States.

While I am on this question, there is another phase of it that I might mention. We have expended about $5,000,000,000 altogether in trying to build up a merchant marine; we have spent about $500,000,000 for the Panama Canal; and we have put a merchant fleet on the seas. We have done that through one arm of the Government. Through another arm of the Government—through the Interstate Commerce Commission—we are allowing the railroads to carry freight at less than cost between water points on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, thereby driving our ships off the seas. We were in the same predicament under Director Hines during the war. One arm of the Government, the Railroad Administration, spent $8,000,000 in building barges and towboats for the purpose of putting commerce on the Mississippi, while through another arm of the Government, the Railroad Administration, we carried commerce at less than cost by rail up and down the banks of the river in order to keep the boats off the river. I think it is time we changed that foolish policy. I do not think that $8,000,000 expenditure is nearly enough; I think we have been unfortunate in the situation which existed and the way it was handled.

We have in the Mississippi River the greatest river in the world. You take that river from St. Louis to Minneapolis, and I think the engineers will bear me out when I make the statement that there is not a river in this country which, according to its distance, costs as little to improve or maintain as that river. It has the surest channel in the country and has a larger number of populous cities on its banks than any other river in the country, and there is a lot of commerce to move, and I do not see why it should not be improved and used.

I have a letter from Gen. Beach to Mr. DEMPSEY. You know the State of Illinois has appropriated $20,000,000 to open up an 8-foot canal from the Great Lakes to Utica, on the Illinois River.

Mr. Sisson. To Utica?

Mr. NEWTON. Utica, Ill., on the Illinois River. They have appropriated $20,000,000. Gov. Lowden told me last year, in talking about this water question, that the State had appropriated $20,000,000, but they never built the canal because as soon as the money was appropriated and available the railroads lowered their rates and those low rates have been in effect on that canal route ever since. However, they are going to build it now, and they are now at work upon it. In his letter to Mr. DEMPSEY, Gen. Beach says:

It is estimated that under existing conditions a 9-foot waterway from Utica to that depth at the mouth of the Ohio will cost $3,057,700 for initial work and $736,550 annually for maintenance.

Now, listen to this:

An 8-foot depth is estimated to cost $1,310,000 for initial work and $77,500 for maintenance for the Illinois River from Utica to its mouth and $620,000 for initial work, and $75,000 for maintenance for the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois to St. Louis, from which point there is now an 8-foot channel to Cairo. Thus it will be seen that the total cost for an 8-foot channel from Utica to St. Louis will be $1,930,000 for initial work and $152,500 annually for maintenance. In other words, a through transportation route can be made available from Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico with the small Government expenditure of less than $2,000,000 for an 8-foot channel and about $3,000,000 for a 9-foot channel, thus affording the producers and shippers of Illinois and other adjacent territory access to and from the seven seas of the world, to say nothing of its also giving them cheap water transportation to and from all points in the great Mississippi Valley territory reached by the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries, and in spite of this fact, there is not a dollar in this proposed appropriation for that great project.

We spent $70,000,000 in Alaska to build a railroad from somewhere to nowhere. I should like to know who in the Mississippi Valley is interested in that. We spent $1,600,000,000 on the railroads and loaned them $500,000,000 more. We have spent many millions in trying to build a merchant marine, and if you can show me anything in the merchant marine that is making money I would like to see it, because I have failed to find it. Then, for all the rivers and harbors in this country $42,000,000 is not enough; it is just that pitiful policy of maintaining the work already done and making no progress at all toward completing it, and, with the war over, I think these projects should be taken up and carried to completion in the right way.

I think Mr. TRENCHER will bear me out when I say that two or three years ago the people in the State of Kansas, if they could have had facilities for shipping their wheat to market when the market was up, would have gotten a certain figure. What was the loss to the Kansas shippers, in round numbers, because they could not get cars until the market went down? I think it was $2,000,000. That is my recollection.

Now, suppose you had a barge line going right up to Kansas City. I think everybody here knows and everybody in Congress knows that just as soon as the business of this country opens up again the transportation facilities are going to be totally inadequate. Who is going to build a railroad? If you are going to relieve the congestion of this country you have got to open up your water transportation facilities, and that you can not do unless you improve your rivers. I think that Gen. Taylor will tell you, at the rate they are now going, how long it is going to take, because now they are just practically maintaining them and making no provision whatever for their completion. Out in the Middle West we recognize, as I said awhile ago, the superior rights of the coast cities, and the superior rights of the cities where the big commerce is, but we want this appropriation to be big enough so that the engineers will have enough money, after the big harbors are taken care of, to come out and improve our rivers and let our commerce develop.

The city of St. Louis has spent within the past two years $1,000,000 on modern docks; they had faith in the future of water transportation and have gone and put their own money into it, and we came near getting the necessary two-thirds majority for a bond issue of $2,000,000 more for docks in St. Louis, and commerce is begging for an increased use of the river.

Mr. ANTHONY. The appropriation we are considering is largely for the purpose of maintenance rather than to carry out projects of construction, but you evidently think the time has come for construction. Do you think the economic condition of the country is such that construction would be justified?

Mr. NEWTON. I think it would be justified where you can extend the commerce. I do not believe in the policy of wasting money here and money there in improving projects like we have been doing on certain rivers where there is no commerce, but we ought to spend money on rivers where there is commerce waiting to use them for transportation purposes.

Mr. Sisson. I do not think you mean to make your statement as strong as that, because some of the most meritorious projects have no commerce at all because there are no improvements, but the very moment improvements are made you will have commerce.

Mr. NEWTON. You did not get my idea. I think we ought to improve where the commerce can be extended and keep at it until we fully carry out such improvement as will increase the commerce. We ought to take on the projects which, when completed, will furnish waterway transportation facilities and extend those facilities so that commerce may use them. I think we ought to make that kind of an improvement, for instance, from St. Louis to Cairo. I think there ought to be enough money in this bill so that the engineers can provide a safe and permanent barge-line channel and construct it, so that you will not need to provide a half million dollars every year for dredging out the sand bars, because they will not form if you put in permanent work. If you put in permanent work you would not need so much for maintenance, would you?

Gen. TAYLOR. The expectation is that where there is permanent work the cost of maintenance will be very largely reduced.

Mr. NEWTON. I think there ought to be enough money so as to improve that river from Cairo to St. Louis and finish it, so that the commerce now being carried on that portion of the river can be safely and profitably handled. You have spent many millions on the Ohio, and yet the dams at the lower end of the river have never been completed and the river can never be used for through traffic until they are finished. That work ought to be completed immediately. When you have completed the channel to St. Louis you ought to go to Kansas City, where there is large commerce, and you ought to extend that commerce.

Maj. BROWN. Just in connection with what Mr. NEWTON said as to the preparation of the Budget, with regard to its having been prepared by the General Staff, I want to repeat what Gen. Lord said the other day, that the General Staff had nothing whatever to do with these nonmilitary items, especially the items relating to rivers and harbors. They were prepared in the first instance by the Budget officer, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. Of course, as the records show, there is no estimate of $13,000,000, the Secretary of War and the Budget officer having agreed in placing before Congress an estimate of $27,000,000.

Gen. TAYLOR. There is one thing I would like to bring out. Mr. NEWTON refers to the manner in which the money has been allotted, and spoke of it having been allotted to the places where commerce existed, and that necessarily the rivers come in after that; I would like to read the wording of the acts, which will show why it was allotted that way.

Mr. NEWTON. I do not find any fault with that.

Gen. TAYLOR. The act of 1921—and the wording is the same in the act of 1920—reads:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation, $15,000,000.

In other words, that is a pretty plain direction for us to consider the existing commerce.

Mr. Sisson. But I do not see from your apportionment that you have neglected the rivers because the proportion of money that is being allotted to the rivers is about like that you have allotted to your harbors.

Gen. TAYLOR. That is correct; we have not neglected them, Mr. Sisson; but what we are considering here is on the basis of getting $42,000,000; that would be our distribution of the money in case we got $42,000,000; but, as I said originally, if the appropriation is for a lesser amount, we will start on the basis of allotting it proportionately, and the circumstances may be such that we will have to vary materially from that proportion.

Mr. Sisson. That is, as far as possible that proportion is going to be maintained, whether you get $27,000,000 or $42,000,000?

Gen. TAYLOR. As far as possible; yes.

Mr. NEWTON. But if you are cut to $27,000,000 you would confine your work to harbors where there is absolute need for improvements, and it will be your duty to spend your money there before you go to the rivers.

Gen. TAYLOR. Before we go to the rivers where there is no commerce.

Mr. NEWTON. Certainly.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table on Wednesday, February 22, my colleague from Pennsylvania, Hon. HENRY W. WATSON, be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes on the subject of the Battle of Trenton.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his colleague may address the House for 40 minutes on February 22 on the subject of the Battle of Trenton. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, but I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming, who I see is in the Chamber, to the fact that if he is going to permit these unanimous agreements so far in advance to address the House for 40 minutes on various days he is going to have some requests from this side of the House to speak on similar subjects, and I feel that he will have to in all good grace grant that permission. I merely call his attention to it now, so that he will not be able to say he did not know anything about it.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, this is not the usual request to address the House on an ordinary legislative question. This is a request to address the House on Washington's birthday, touching the life and history of the Father of his Country. It happens that both of the requests recently made—that is, the request in regard to Lincoln's birthday and the request in regard to Washington's birthday—came from this side. It is usual for addresses to be made on those days from one side or the other, and I think ordinarily we have no disposition to deny those requests. I should have been quite as happy if some of the brethren on the other side had had in their minds some remarks to make on these anniversaries, but it so happened that both of the gentlemen who felt inclined to talk are on this side. I should be very glad to extend a like courtesy to any gentlemen on the minority side who may desire to talk on Washington's birthday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW]?

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 9724.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill H. R. 9724, making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20 and 21.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
W. L. JONES,
WM. J. HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 20: Strikes out the appropriation, proposed by the Senate, of $500,000 for the acquisition of a site for a national archives building, including $25,000 for technical services.

On No. 21: Strikes out the appropriation, proposed by the Senate, of $1,000,000 for the construction of a three-story structure in the north court of the Treasury Building, Washington, D. C.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

FLORENCE M. LAFIN.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts I ask for the consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 276.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Florence M. Ladin, mother of Cutler Ladin, jr., late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary, and that the Clerk be further directed to pay, out of the contingent fund, the expenses of the funeral of said Cutler Ladin, jr., such expenses not to exceed $250.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution, and the family of the poor unfortunate boy, who lost his life in the Knickerbocker disaster, is the recipient of the appropriation provided.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a couple of minutes?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, in this connection I think it is right to place in the Record of the proceedings of the House the fact that two of the pages of this House were unfortunately killed in the disaster at the Knickerbocker Theater. This young man, the Ladin boy, was one of them, and the other was La Verne Sproul, a nephew of Congressman SPROUL, my colleague from Illinois. I do not know whether any resolution of this kind will be presented at this time in behalf of the Sproul boy, but I hope it will. Our colleague, Mr. SPROUL, found it necessary to return to Chicago with the body of his nephew who lived with him and thus suddenly lost his life. Both of these boys had won the affection and the high regard not only of their associates but of the Members of the House who knew them, and not only their relatives but their friends in this House sincerely regret their early and untimely demise.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JENNIE SPROUL.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I also present the further similar resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 277.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Jennie Sproul, mother of La Verne Sproul, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary, and that the Clerk be further directed to pay, out of the contingent fund, the expenses of the funeral of said La Verne Sproul, such expenses not to exceed $250.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, this is the young man to whom I referred a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CLERK IN OFFICE OF LATE DELEGATE FROM HAWAII.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the further resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 262.

Resolved, That pending the election and qualification of a successor to the late Hon. J. K. Kalaniana'ole, Delegate from Hawaii, the Committee on the Territories of the House of Representatives is authorized to maintain and conduct the office of the late Delegate; and for that purpose the chairman is authorized to employ a clerk at a salary of $266 per month, the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the House: Provided, That such payments shall cease on the day that a new Delegate from Hawaii takes office.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. Will the gentleman indulge me just a moment on that?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 6, after the word "salary," insert the words "at the rate of."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, the death of the lamented and beloved Prince Kalaniana'ole, in so far as his services to the district which he represented obtained, presents a slightly different case from the death of a Member of the House from any State. Where a Member has departed this life his colleagues from that State are usually quite generous and anxious to attend to the duties of his district pending the election of a successor.

The situation is vastly different in the Territory of Hawaii, and the constantly increasing demands on the representative of that Territory have made it seem necessary in the minds of the committee to unanimously and favorably report this resolution. It has been the suggestion of many Members of the House, and that suggestion has met the approval of others familiar with the situation with whom I have conferred—

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. In just a second. In the ordinary event of the death of a Member we would pay the clerk to the deceased Member a month's salary. This probably will entail the payment of one clerk, the one who has heretofore been employed, and who is familiar with the work, for possibly three months. I am advised that the selection of a successor is made mandatory within 60 days; another 30 days might be allowed for his travel here, so that in all probability the expense would not run over 90 days.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Has the Committee on the Territories acted on this matter in the way of recommendation to the gentleman's committee?

Mr. IRELAND. Unofficially. I do not know that they have taken any action, but the delicacy of the matter of having the chairman of the Committee on the Territories take charge of the office made him feel that he did not want to present the resolution himself, and so it was presented by another Member. But I am informed that he is willing to assume the additional burdens and discharge them, pending the election of his successor.

Mr. GARNER. It occurs to me that if the Committee on the Territories is going to have the service of this clerk for the time the gentleman speaks of, there ought to have been some action by the committee itself in making the representation to the gentleman. They would then have had opportunity to discuss the amount of labor involved in the Committee on the Territories, and the gentleman would have had more information than he is now able to give the House. As I understand him, this is giving a clerk to the Committee on the Territories for a certain length of time. Do I understand aright?

Mr. IRELAND. It is employing the clerk who formerly served, but the formal direction will be under the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The reason for the resolution was that there was no other Delegate from Hawaii. That same reason would apply if, perchance, the Member from Wyoming should pass away. There would then be no other Member from that State in the House. Does my colleague think he can draw the line between employing the clerk of one Member when he is deceased and not employing the clerk of another Member who has deceased?

Mr. IRELAND. I do not think the cases cited are quite identical. In the case of a State with a single Representative the two Senators remain.

Mr. MANN. They do not remain in the House.

Mr. IRELAND. But they often do a very small portion of the great and laborious work each Member of the House does.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how you can draw a distinction between one and another.

Mr. IRELAND. This question might never occur again, but it seems important and vital to the interests of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. MANN. Such requests have many times been made.

Mr. IRELAND. And we have refused them.

Mr. MANN. And now you are setting a precedent that can not be refused in the future. It is often insisted that the clerk be employed in some capacity. That is not in the interest of the public business; in the main it is in the interest of the clerk.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Gladly.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that while the suggestion he made with reference to the Representative from State or District might apply generally in Hawaii, which is some distance, and with a great deal of business to be transacted, there is no possibility of getting any representation or any service performed here unless this clerk is permitted to remain.

Mr. MANN. Yesterday the House passed a bill without a word for Hawaii, the first time I think I have ever seen it done in the House; a long bill, and not a word uttered. I do not think that that was because there has been a clerk.

Mr. DOWELL. A great deal of business has to be transacted. This clerk is a very competent clerk. He is familiar with all the interests of the islands here, and we would not save anything, it seems to me, by dismissing him now and in that way stop all transactions pertaining to the Territory in the House. I believe that he ought to remain in his office, because it is apparent to all that no Delegate can be selected who can be here before the next election. I am heartily in favor of this resolution and I believe it ought to be unanimously adopted. I think it is the only way we can transact the business of the Territory in the proper manner.

Mr. MANN. Well, if perchance—it may happen some time; I do not know whether it will happen while I am a Member of the House—I should pass away. I have a very competent clerk; the business of my district would be much better attended to if that clerk was permitted to remain until my successor should be elected. We have a vacancy from Illinois now which has not yet been filled, although the vacancy has existed for some time. Undoubtedly it would be desired that the office of the deceased Member be kept up by the clerk in charge. Now, if that is going to be the policy, very well; but I do not see how you can draw a line between one Member of the House who has deceased and another Member who may de cease.

Mr. DOWELL. I insist that this is an exceptional case, and it can be provided for in no other manner than by this resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the resolution, that it contains legislation which this committee does not have jurisdiction to report in a privileged resolution. In substance it provides that the Committee on the Territories shall exercise the duties of the former Delegate to the House. That destroys its privileged character.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the resolution is subject to that point of order, because the first part of it says that "pending the election and qualification of the successor to the late Hon. J. K. Kalanianaʻole, Delegate from Hawaii, the Committee on the Territories of the House of Representatives is authorized to employ a clerk." It makes the whole resolution subject to a point of order.

Mr. IRELAND. Has the Speaker ruled on that?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. IRELAND. That settles it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. IRELAND. I maintain that it should not lose its privileged status simply because of the additional legislation therein. Whether it makes an appropriation for one month or for three months is immaterial. The language transferring the jurisdiction to the Committee on the Territories is perhaps surplusage. It would come under their jurisdiction in any event, and possibly it was an error to include that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was an error to include it if it was intended to make the resolution in order, because it is a well-settled principle that where something not privileged is joined with matter that is privileged the whole loses its privilege thereby, and the Chair thinks the first part of the resolution is clearly not privileged, and therefore that the whole resolution loses its privilege.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair pardon me for making a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be very glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. It occurs to me that it would not be a very serious stretching of the proposition to hold this in order. These resolutions that are passed whenever a Member of Congress is deceased, regarding the payment of a month's salary to the clerk of the deceased Member of course pertain, as the Speaker suggests, to the relations of a Member to the House. Of course we all understand that this is something more than that, but it occurs to me now that it is not a very great stretching of the rule to say that this is merely carrying out the same proposition in a little different way. It does not seem to me that the point of order really ought to be sustained against it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that the Committee on Accounts can offer as a privileged resolution the proposition that another committee of the House shall maintain the office of the former Member?

Mr. TOWNER. I think the language to which the Speaker calls attention and to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers would perhaps bear the interpretation which the gentleman suggests; but still, is not this the thing that is being done and has been done by the House heretofore? Is it not in substance that? No matter what is the language used in the resolution, if in substance that is the effect of it, ought the point of order to be insisted upon?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the Committee on Accounts should bring in a resolution providing for a clerk to one of the committees of the House, say the Committee on Appropriations, with a provision in the resolution that the Committee on Appropriations should have jurisdiction over certain legislative matters. Does the gentleman think that would be privileged?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly not, and there is no parallel between that and this proposition.

Mr. MANN. This extends the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. TOWNER. I am trying to suggest to the Speaker that this is not such an extension of jurisdiction that a point of order ought to be raised against it. Nothing is attempted in the proposition except that which we always do, only perhaps to a greater extent in this case than in others. That is the point I desire to suggest for the consideration of the Speaker, and nothing else.

Mr. MANN. This proposes to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Territories, does it not?

Mr. IRELAND. Not in the least.

Mr. TOWNER. I think not, unless I am mistaken in the assumption that this is in reality doing in substance the same thing that we do when we pay a month's salary to the clerk of a deceased Member.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, we could provide for the payment of the salary of this clerk to the Delegate for three months out of the contingent fund, I suppose.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and I think we ought to do it.

Mr. MANN. But that, however, is not the question before the House.

Mr. TOWNER. No; it is not.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] desire to be heard further?

Mr. IRELAND. No, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The opinion of the Chair has not been changed. The Chair is quite clear that the first part of the resolution is not privileged, and therefore that takes away the privilege of the whole resolution. The Chair suggests that the resolution might be presented in such form that it would be in order.

Mr. IRELAND. Then I move to amend the resolution by eliminating that part of it pertaining to the conduct and maintenance of the office of the late Delegate by the Committee on the Territories. I move to strike out the words—

The Committee on the Territories of the House of Representatives is authorized to maintain and conduct the office of the late Delegate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can offer a new resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the gentleman authorized by his committee to report a new resolution?

Mr. IRELAND. No; but I have the privilege of offering an amendment to any resolution that is offered.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman can not offer an amendment to a resolution that has been ruled out on a point of order. That resolution is gone.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to offer a new resolution.

KATIE ROSE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 267.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Katie Rose, widow of William T. Rose, late a member of the Capitol police force, a sum equal to six months' salary, and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund the expenses of the funeral of said William T. Rose, such expenses not to exceed $250.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution for a deceased employee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT TO SUPERINTENDENT OF PRESS GALLERY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 270.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint an assistant to the superintendent of the House press gallery, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $1,200 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this resolution is offered on the unanimous recommendation of the members of the press gallery. It is necessitated by the fact that the Doorkeeper needs for other purposes the attendant who is now detailed to the press gallery, and the present employee, who it is supposed will be appointed, has been with the press gallery as assistant to the superintendent for four years, and is the most satisfactory employee whom they have had in that capacity. The members of the press gallery unanimously ask the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. We now have a superintendent of the press gallery who is on the pay roll of the Government?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And it so happens that one of the officers of the House wants to use him in some other capacity?

Mr. IRELAND. No; this resolution refers to his assistant.

Mr. BLANTON. There are two there?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes. The assistant who has been there has been employed under the guise of an employee under the Doorkeeper and assigned to the press gallery.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any necessity for two employees to look after the press gallery?

Mr. IRELAND. They so represent, and I think it is so.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman investigated it?

Mr. IRELAND. I have.

Mr. BLANTON. What are the duties of the superintendent and assistant superintendent? What do they do to earn a salary from the Government?

Mr. IRELAND. I can not enumerate all of their duties. They have charge of the press gallery and take care of the number of men that are in the press gallery. It so happens that this assistant has charge of keeping track of all of the committee meetings and the subjects to be brought up, informing the Members of those meetings, keeping a bulletin, and other duties which at present have been very voluminous.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman for information if this is not the fact, that when the House of Representatives is in session there is a room on the third floor of the Capitol on the south side of the House of Representatives that is used by members of the press gallery. It is back of their gallery. Sometimes there are varying numbers of the press gallery in that room, more at some times than at others. And the superintendent merely has the duty of looking after those qualified to sit in the gallery.

Mr. IRELAND. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. What are his duties?

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman can inform himself by consulting members of the press gallery.

Mr. WHEELER. He acts as messenger.

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; there have been two employees since, I think, the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. It has been our custom to accede to the requests of the members of the press gallery, and especially when they come to us unanimously. They have never been unreasonable in their requests. The gentleman can thoroughly inform himself from the members of the press gallery, and I am sure he will be convinced that this is a reasonable request.

Mr. BLANTON. My idea is that the privilege of sitting in the press gallery is a privilege of itself, and it does not require two or three or four employees of the Government to warrant that privilege. Members of the press can have the privilege of sitting in the gallery without representatives of the Government to look after them.

Mr. IRELAND. Well, the gentleman has expressed himself, and if he is satisfied, all right. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 51 ayes and 5 noes.

So the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, be permitted indefinite leave of absence on account of death in his family.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10101, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The Clerk proceeding with the reading of the bill read as follows:

To enable the commissioners to carry out the provisions of existing law governing the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and ashes in the District of Columbia, including the purchase and maintenance of a dead animal wagon, and no contract shall be let for the collection of dead animals, and including inspection and allowance to inspectors for maintenance of horses and vehicles or motor vehicles used in the performance of official duties, not to exceed $20 per month for each inspector for horse-drawn vehicles, $26 per month for automobiles, and $13 per month for motor cycles; fencing of public and private property designated by the commissioners as public dumps; and incidental expenses, $750,000: Provided, That any proceeds received from the disposal of city refuse or garbage shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in the same proportions as the appropriations for such purposes are paid from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this appropriation shall not be available for collecting ashes or miscellaneous refuse from hotels, places of business, apartment houses, and large boarding houses.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how long the last proviso has been carried in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The last proviso has been changed in this particular: In the former law it was "large apartment houses," and in this it is simply "apartment houses."

Mr. WALSH. How about the phraseology of large boarding houses—how long has that been carried?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think that has not been carried.

Mr. WALSH. How comes it that the person who is fortunate enough to have a large boarding house can not have his ashes or miscellaneous refuse collected, whereas if they have what somebody determines to be a small boarding house they will have it taken care of?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That will be left to the discretion of the commissioners.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think it ought to be left to the commissioners to discriminate between parties carrying on business—that because they happen to have a small boarding house or establishment, although they may have a large number of boarders, they can have their refuse and ashes collected, while another party having a large boarding house, with perhaps no more patrons than a small one, can not?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the subcommittee assumed that in a matter of that kind the discretion of the commissioners would not be very far out of the way in determining what is ordinarily a large boarding house and what is a small boarding house. That is all we do, and it was for the purpose of keeping down expenses.

Mr. WALSH. If all boarding houses were included, it would further cut down the expense.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know; but it might include boarding houses that had but one boarder. That would be a boarding house, and three or four might constitute a boarding house. Does the gentleman want to put those in the same class with one with a hundred boarders?

Mr. WALSH. The expense for collecting ashes and refuse in that one instance would not be very much different from another. As I gathered it, the idea of this proviso was that people conducting business establishments would have to take care of the disposal of their ashes and refuse.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That has been the case all of the time in the bill with business places and hotels.

Mr. WALSH. Why discriminate between one class of business establishments and another class of business establishments upon the ground of size? It seems to me, if we are going to provide that boarding house keepers will have to look after the disposal of refuse and ashes, that provision ought to apply to them all, and not leave it in the discretion of the commissioners to say one boarding house is of not very large size, and that they will take the ashes from it, but will not take them from a neighboring boarding house.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that the committee, after considerable discussion about it, figured out that this was the best thing for the city, and we put it in. That is all that I can say. We have left it the same way that we had it before in respect to hotels and business places.

Mr. WALSH. You do not make any discrimination between apartment houses. There might be an apartment house with only three apartments, and they can not have the ashes collected.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the term "apartment house" has a particular significance, and there can be no difficulty about it. The only question raised in our minds was as between the different kinds of boarding houses.

Mr. MANN. What is the definition of an apartment house?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am unable to give the gentleman a correct definition, except I would say one where they rent out apartments by the year. For instance, the Rochambeau is an apartment house, as is Stoneleigh Courts, but I presume that just across the way from the Rochambeau, where there is a little place where the employees from the Rochambeau go over there, you would not call that an apartment house.

Mr. MANN. It is a very common practice to construct a building with two apartments in it, one on the first floor and one on the second floor. That is a most common practice in the city from which I come, and it is becoming a common practice in the city of Washington. A man builds an apartment house and lives in one apartment and rents another. What is the reason why he should be required to pay extra for the collection of his ashes and garbage? He pays his taxes; he does not have a home or a house as large as his neighbor, perhaps, who lives in a fine house, which is not an apartment house.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As I say, I think it is pretty well understood here what is the meaning of an apartment house—where they have a large number of rooms and where they rent them out by the year.

Mr. MANN. "Large apartment house" would cover those cases, but when you simply say an apartment house, unless they make a violent construction of the law, they can not collect garbage from a building that has only two apartments in it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have made it here so that they shall collect from apartment houses and large boarding houses, and if the gentleman does not want it in he can move to strike it out and we will take a vote upon it and let it go. It is not a matter of very great importance. It will make very little difference, if any, the commissioners said when questioned about it.

Mr. MANN. It would make a great deal of difference to the convenience and the cost to people who have a two-apartment building if you absolutely forbid the collection of ashes and garbage from such a building as that. That is apparently what is done now by striking out that word "large," which is the current law.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly, if they are going to discriminate against large boarding houses, there is justification for discriminating against large apartment houses, it would seem to me, because, as the gentleman from Illinois has well said, this would apply to apartment houses with only two or three apartments in them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting in line 17, before the word "apartment" the word "large."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 27, line 17, before the word "apartment" insert the word "large."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard upon the amendment?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think that amendment ought to be agreed to. If we had a definition of what constitutes an apartment house, that it is a large building with a number of apartments in it, very well, but there is no such definition. The present law gives the commissioners the discretion to say what is a large apartment house, but if you absolutely forbid them to consider the collection of ashes from an apartment house at all, that applies to a house with only two apartments in it. It is a very common practice for a man to have constructed or to purchase a house with an apartment on the second floor and an apartment below on the first floor, in one of which he lives and from the rental of the other apartment endeavors to pay the interest and the principal due upon the building. That method of building is to be encouraged, not discouraged, as will be done it seems to me by the positive prohibition against the collection of ashes or garbage from such a building.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota) there were—ayes 23, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for playgrounds, $109,220, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I note from the report of the committee that the item for playgrounds, payable only out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, has been cut $133,215 below the estimate of the Director of the Budget and they have been cut $16,000 below the appropriation for last year. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why this great cut in the appropriation has been made?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because, sir, I will tell you, they asked for the purchase of three playgrounds, amounting to $108,000. We only gave them one, and did not give the three large ones. It is the purchase of ground at a large price, simply a real estate proposition.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. This item was approved by the Director of the Budget and the appropriation is paid entirely out of the funds of the District. This was submitted by the District Commissioners and approved by the Director of the Budget. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and I want to submit a formal amendment to change the figures $109,220, in line 19, page 29, to $242,435, which is the amount recommended by the Director of the Budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 19, strike out the figures "$109,220" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$242,435."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to be heard further?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. No.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is an inconsistent motion. It is merely changing the total. The gentleman is not putting in anything specifying what he wants it for. It seems to me that the amendment is entirely out of order so far as that is concerned. This is merely a total. He has added to it without making any provision for expending it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Well, I have not the data to submit to—

Mr. MANN. This total is not an appropriation, this is really the sum of the items of the appropriation. It does not accomplish anything.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the bill, I have not a copy before me, carry an item specifically in amount for playgrounds?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes; there is an item for one playground.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, it seems to me that the amendment could be properly rested on that section of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There are five separate paragraphs that have just been read making up this total of $109,220.

Mr. MANN. It says in all for playgrounds so much, and that is the sum of the items of appropriation. To increase that would not increase the appropriation, but be a mere misstatement of fact.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Minnesota, I withdraw the amendment. I wish, however, to call attention to the fact that this appropriation of $133,000 is paid only out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, which would involve no additional expense to the Federal Government, and this appropriation is one which the District Commissioners state is needed and it has been approved by the Director of the Budget, notwithstanding the fact that he made a number of very drastic cuts in the estimates of the District Commissioners. I personally do not understand how the various items that make up this playground appropriation are prorated. I notice 22 watchmen only receive $50 per month, and that a clerk, who shall be a bookkeeper, is receiving compensation of $75 per month. Because of the fact that I have not been able to get the necessary information from the hearings, I am unable to put this amendment in proper shape, and therefore withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to be allowed to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

For completing the construction and full equipment of the new Eastern High School, $900,000.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. My information is that in the original estimate made by the Board of Education, and, I believe, approved by the Commissioners of the District, there was included an appropriation of $250,000 for the purchase of a site for a new building or a new location for the McKinley Manual Training School?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; there was not.

Mr. KETCHAM. There was no such recommendation made by the board?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. None that came to us through the Budget at all.

Mr. KETCHAM. My statement was that it was made by the Board of Education to the Commissioners of the District, and I think they recommended it to the Director of the Budget.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It did not extend to this item. There was nothing of that kind that came before us from the Budget or otherwise.

Mr. KETCHAM. This committee has given no consideration whatsoever to this proposition?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There was some talk. I will tell the gentleman, to a certain extent outside the record. That talk was, and it is true, that the McKinley High School is the finest manual training school in the United States, as so stated by a young man who came before us, and that it was in the best condition and best kept. Then, in addition, there was some talk that in time they were going to build another school of a similar nature. I remember asking the question, What are you going to do with that grand building? The gentleman said that they were going to turn it over to the colored people when they got around to it and build another. That is about the substance about this new building, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, if my time has not expired, I desire to make some further remarks on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think the chairman of the subcommittee has stated the facts concerning this school very nicely indeed so far as the high rank of the institution is concerned and so far as the high grade of those graduating from it.

I have taken some pains to check this matter up, and I find that the graduates of McKinley Manual Training School take high rank when they enter higher institutions of learning.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. A young man who appeared before our committee was a graduate of this McKinley High School, and he had also passed through the Boston "Tech," and he said that the McKinley High School graduate could go into the Boston "Tech" and do better than any man he ever knew of. I wish to say that in favor of the McKinley High School.

Mr. KETCHAM. I wish to say that my information is that there is one young man, a graduate of the McKinley Manual Training School, among the students enrolled in Worcester "Tech," so called, who has completed the four-year course in three years' time, indicating the high grade of instruction given at McKinley. With all that has been said, however, concerning high grade of instruction, and all that has been said of the fine young men and women that go out from it, I want to say that my observation leads me to believe that the plant in which this institution is located is but little short of a reproach to the great Capital City of the greatest country in the world.

We take just pride in many of the stately public buildings that adorn this city, and no opportunity is lost to call them to the attention of visitors from other sections of the country, as well as those from foreign lands, but so far as I am advised none of the guides to the sights of Washington point out McKinley Manual Training School in this connection. The lack of architectural attractiveness could be overlooked, however, if the plant and equipment were adequate to the needs of the school. The present enrollment is 1,515, while the normal capacity is 1,100. Fifteen hundred pupils have 660 seats in the assembly room. Three additions to the building have failed to care for the enrollment, which has increased 48 per cent in three years. All the available ground is now occupied by the building, leaving no space for athletics or military drill. Gymnasium facilities are limited to a small space, made available by taking out a partition between two ordinary classrooms. Equipment is far below the cost of that of other similar schools in this country with which comparisons have been made. In my opinion we should have here in Washington a technical high school that should set the standard for the country in plant and equipment, as it already does for scholarship and rank of its graduates. Economy in expenditures is praiseworthy, but here is a capital investment that leads to character and efficiency which should not be overlooked.

I have asked these few minutes to express my regret that the matter of a site and a plant commensurate with the high-grade work of this school and the splendid work of the graduates thereof has not been provided. If the rules permitted it would be my great privilege to introduce an amendment looking toward the purchase of a site at an early day. I have been informed that such an amendment is not in order. But I sincerely trust before another appropriation bill reaches us for consideration that through the proper legislative channels there may be provided the means whereby in the city of Washington there shall eventually be located the finest manual training school in the United States, not only so far as graduates are concerned, but also as to plant and equipment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BLIND CHILDREN.

For instruction of blind children of the District of Columbia, in Maryland, or some other State, under a contract to be entered into by the commissioners, $10,000: Provided, That all expenditures under this appropriation shall be made under the supervision of the board of education.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman about the construction of this two-room building, at a cost of $25,000, to replace the present one-room Chain Bridge Road School. Does the chairman think it a good business proposition to spend $25,000 for a two-room building?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is several pages back.

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have an old frame building there now, one room, and they are using it, and this $25,000 will build a very fine two-room addition. I agree with the gentleman that the estimate is pretty high. There is no question of that in my mind, but I do not know of any way of cutting down the estimate when they need a school of that kind, and your committee was very liberal along that line and gave them about all we thought they were entitled to. In this case we could not cut the $25,000 down.

Mr. CHALMERS. Is this a growing section? Would it be possible to erect there a portable building until a little later, when a larger building could be erected?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is not a very growing section, but your committee thought that they would give them this $25,000 building in case it was needed in the future.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. There is, as I understand it, a two-room building there now that is not fit to use, and they are replacing it. But with reference to the amount of expenditure the estimates made by the engineers for eight-room buildings amount to $17,500 per room. So there is not so much difference. They estimate at the rate of $140,000 for an eight-room building, and this is a two-room building at $25,000, making it $12,500 per room. The committee did go into the question as to whether or not these amounts were excessive, and while we suspected that they were excessive the engineers assured the committee that they could not be built for less, not only one but two.

Mr. CHALMERS. It seems to me the price is excessive.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am informed that I was in error when I said this was a two-room building out there. There is a one-room building there now.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I would like to know whether this is a modern building, with heat and everything that should go with such a building?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes, sir. We are not building anything in this city but modern buildings.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. But this is out in a suburb.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is just as good out there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COURT OF APPEALS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Salaries: Chief justice, $9,000; two associate justices, at $8,500 each; clerk $4,250, and $250 additional as custodian of the Court of Appeals building; assistant or deputy clerk, $2,250; reporter, $1,500; Provided, That the reports issued by him shall not be sold for more than $5 per volume; crier, who shall also act as stenographer and typewriter in the clerk's office when not engaged in court room, $1,200; three messengers, at $720 each; three stenographers, one for the chief justice and one for each associate justice, at $1,200 each; necessary expenditures in the conduct of the clerk's office, $1,200; in all, $42,410.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. What is the idea of including this court of appeals and the supreme court under a separate heading from that of the other courts of the District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is no good reason for it on earth. The same thing runs all through this bill. There are about five times too many subheads running throughout this bill. We tried to condense some of them, but they were very few.

Mr. WALSH. I thought perhaps there was some jurisdiction with reference to the buildings occupied, and so forth.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. MANN. This includes the police court? They are not courts of record.

Mr. WALSH. The municipal court is not?

Mr. MANN. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Salaries: Superintendent, $1,200; clerk, $1,080; matron and four teachers, at $600 each; nurse, $840; overseer, $720; two parole officers, at $600 each; seven teachers of industries, at $480 each; engineer, $720; assistant engineer, $600; night watchman, $480; two laborers, at $500 each; in all, $13,800.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. What authorization of law is there for including a clerk at $1,080 here? I notice this paragraph carries a clerk at $1,080 on line 13. Is not that a new position that has been provided for?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am inclined to believe it is.

Mr. WALSH. And the organic law that provides for this contains no authority for that position?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. As to that I could not say. My secretary said he would look it up in a moment. But my present information is that it is not. I think probably this item would be subject to a point of order if the gentleman desires to strike it out. The committee were very much in favor of putting it in.

Mr. WALSH. It has been inserted by the committee for a number of years, and no doubt they looked into the matter. I was wondering whether they got any particular information as to why this particular position should be created.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not tell now, unless I refer to the hearings; there are so many of these items. But the committee was unanimous in putting it in. They took away the treasurer last year, at a salary pretty near the same as this, and they have been without anybody to take the place. The treasurer was a lady, and they ought to have this particular clerk in the place of the one that was cut out.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, you are not getting very far along in the pathway of economy if you take away one official one year because it is said there is no particular need for her and the next year come along and provide for another.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It was not in consequence of a particular need, but she was trying to fill two positions, one down there and one up here, and we cut her out. They were in need of such an employee. The item is subject to a point of order. I admit that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to make the point of order, but the gentleman from Minnesota is so nice about it and so willing to concede the point of order that I think I will withdraw it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee as to how many boys are cared for annually in the National Training School for Boys. I notice the appropriation of $70,000. I am interested to know the cost.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There are 179 boys there, I believe. These two institutions, the National Training School for Boys and the National Training School for Girls, are being run as nearly to a business proposition as anything contained within the pages of this bill.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am just interested to know.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. You will notice there are 179, and the expense is only $70,000. I think it is very reasonable, indeed.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I do not question it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general repairs and for additional construction, including labor and material for each and every item connected therewith, $5,000; for expenses of heat, light, and power required in and about the operation of the hospital, $15,000; in all, $20,000; to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, and on July 1, 1922, the sum of $25,000 of the surplus revenues of the hospital shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. As to this $25,000 which is to be covered in as miscellaneous receipts, to whose credit does that go?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. To the Treasury of the United States. This is a Government-owned building.

Mr. MANN. It may be a Government-owned building, but 60 per cent of the cost of operation comes out of the District of Columbia. I do not see why, when the District pays 60 per cent of the cost of operation, whenever they make a surplus the surplus is to be turned in to the credit of the United States. I do not understand that method. Do we propose to make the District of Columbia put up the money, and then if there is any profit we give it to the Government?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The District puts up no more money than is necessary to pay for its indigent. The District shares with them only the expense of the indigent patients.

Mr. MANN. The District contributed toward the construction of the hospital and toward the maintenance of the hospital. We make an appropriation here for the hospital, for its maintenance and care. Now, certain patients pay. That goes to help support the hospital. But it is a partnership affair, so far as the hospital is concerned, between the Government and the District, upon the basis of the District paying 60 per cent of the appropriation. If there is a loss, that is all right; the District pays that. If there is a profit, the Government takes it. That is worse than the excess-profits tax. There you never take more than two-thirds of what a man makes. Here you take it all.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. From the statement the gentleman has made, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to frame up an amendment dividing the profits in the ratio of 60-40.

Mr. MANN. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Suppose we pass that over and come back to it later.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over this item temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to pass over this item temporarily, without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the reservation of the point of order, and the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary physicians, nurses, orderlies, cooks, engineers, clerks, laborers, and other services for the organization and operation of the Gallinger Municipal Hospital, $75,000; Provided, That during the fiscal year 1923 the number of persons whom it may be actually necessary to employ at any one time shall not exceed the proportion that the force to attend the actual number of beds available shall bear to the force required to attend the ultimate maximum capacity of 300 beds:

Provided further, That no person employed hereunder shall be paid at a rate in excess of the rate specifically appropriated for a similar grade of work for the Washington Asylum Hospital for the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a correction in the spelling of the word "excess," in line 15, on page 75. As printed in the bill it contains an extra "e."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make that correction.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Administration: For administrative expenses, including placing and visiting children, city directory, purchase of books of reference and periodicals not exceeding $25, and all office and sundry expenses, $5,000; and no part of the moneys herein appropriated shall be used for the purpose of visiting any ward of the Board of Children's Guardians placed outside the District of Columbia and the States of Virginia and Maryland, and a ward placed outside said District and the States of Virginia and Maryland shall be visited not less than once a year by a voluntary agent or correspondent of said board, and that said board shall have power, upon proper showing, in its discretion, to discharge from guardianship any child committed to its care.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order upon this paragraph. Is this existing law?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is existing law, absolutely.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know how many wards have been placed outside of the District of Columbia in the States of Virginia and Maryland during the past year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. About 100 or 125.

Mr. WALSH. How many have been taken care of in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. An average of 2,000.

Mr. WALSH. Why should this board be permitted to discharge from their guardianship any child committed to their care? Is the guardianship the result of some court proceeding?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All of these children are committed to the care of the board through court proceedings.

Mr. WALSH. Then how can the board discharge a child from guardianship?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The statute law on the subject authorizes that to be done.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the reservation of the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360; cook, $360; maintenance, $5,000; in all, $6,920, to be expended under the direction of the commissioners; and ex-soldiers, sailors, or marines of the Spanish War, Philippine Insurrection, or China Relief Expedition, who served at any time between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, shall be admitted to the home.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Have any applications been made for admissions to this home by soldiers who served in the World War?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It was not so stated to the committee.

Mr. WALSH. What is the capacity of this place?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Last year the average attendance was about 17 per day.

Mr. WALSH. What is the capacity?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have no definite information as to that. They have not said to us that they were overcrowded. As I say, the average attendance was about 17 per day.

Mr. WALSH. Where is this place located?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not tell the gentleman at the moment. I can look it up and inform him.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 74.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 74. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: Page 74, line 7, after the word "States," strike out the words "as a miscellaneous receipt," and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the same proportion as the appropriations for such institution are paid from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. How does that read, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read the amendment again.

Mr. MANN. Before the language proposed in the amendment should be added the words "to the credit of the United States and to the credit of the District of Columbia."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I not only have no objection to that amendment but I think it should be inserted. I want this money to be refunded to the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States in the same proportion—that is, 60-40—as it is paid, and if the Clerk will report the language in that form I will accept it.

Mr. MANN. After the word "States," in line 7, strike out "as a miscellaneous receipt" and insert "to the credit of the United States and to the credit of the District of Columbia," and then following that the language in the amendment—in the same proportion—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment as modified, if there is no objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 7, after the word "States," strike out the words "as a miscellaneous receipt" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to the credit of the United States and to the credit of the District of Columbia in the same proportions as the appropriations for such institution are paid from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This amendment is offered to make provision for the disposal of the surplus along the lines suggested by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. That is, 60 per cent of the surplus will be credited to the District and 40 per cent credited to the United States?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, and for the payment of commutation of subsistence for enlisted men who may be detailed to guard or move the United States property at home stations on days immediately preceding and immediately following the annual encampments, damages to private property incident to encampments, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills and parades, fuel, light, heat, care and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, horses and mules for mounted organizations, street car fares (not to exceed $200) necessarily used in the transaction of official business, and for general incidental expenses of the service, $24,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice here a provision for the hire of horses for officers requiring to be mounted. Inasmuch as the Army has a great many horses, would not it be possible to use those horses rather than to hire them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That language has been in the bill for a great many years, but they will never use it, and are instructed not to use it, except in case of an emergency. The language in a way is surplusage, but if you should take out all of the surplus language in the bill there would be a good deal of it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Have they been accustomed to use Army horses?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; they do now.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What is the reason for carrying this language in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know of any particular reason, but if the gentleman should sit down and try to cut out all of the surplus language he will be grayheaded before he gets through.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Government has been selling horses and has an appropriation for the purchase of horses, and now here is a provision for hiring horses.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have been carrying this language in the bill, as I say, for a great many years, but they have not used any part of it, and I do not think they will use any of it this year.

Mr. MANN. If they use Army horses, they would have to hire them from the Army.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This language would not limit them to horses of the Army. I do not see any reason for a direct authorization to hire horses when, as the gentleman from Minnesota says, there is no necessity for it, and that they have not been doing it.

Mr. MANN. There might be a necessity for it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not see why they should have to pay for horses that belong to the Army; it seems to me that they might make some arrangement by which they could use them.

Mr. MANN. The militia goes into camp and the officers may require horses. They can not get them from the Army without paying for them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It seems to me that a privilege could be granted upon a requisition for horses for the militia.

Mr. MANN. And the cost of the requisition would be more than the cost of hiring the horses.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not see why that should be true. It may be on account of the way they are carrying on at the present time, but the militia is a part of the Army, and the Army has suitable horses, and it seems to me that an order from the head of the Army to allow militia officers to use the horses would be all that would be necessary.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Let me read from the hearings, page 749:

Mr. DAVIS. Do you hire many horses?

Gen. STEPHAN. Very seldom; only on occasions of parades. We have a couple of horses that we use on the rifle range for hauling. We have no horses that we use for riding purposes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is the militia department. Does it state that the Army has no horses?

Mr. EVANS. There is no question about the horses being plenty in the Army. The point is authority for the militia to hire horses.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The point I am making is why can not they get the horses from the Army by an arrangement to furnish them when the proper officer makes requisition?

Mr. EVANS. And it might cost five or ten times as much as it would to use the horses of the Army under this authorization.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I will state to my colleague that under the national defense act the War Department of the Federal Government furnishes all the militia with the necessary horses needed for military purposes or military drill and to the States throughout the Union. The hiring mentioned in this paragraph may be necessary for small matters, a parade or something of that character where it may be necessary to use horses. Therefore I think the language ought to stay in the bill. They do not spend any money to amount to anything, and it can certainly do no harm to allow the language to remain in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Do they ever find it necessary to hire outside horses?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Now and then, the hearings disclose.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Salaries: Superintendent, $3,600; assistant and chief clerk, $2,400; clerks—one $1,800, one $1,600, one $1,400, two at $1,200 each; messenger, $840; landscape architect, $2,400; junior engineer, $1,500; in all, $17,940.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the chairman of the committee if this is the superintendent who has charge of the construction of buildings in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No, sir; he is not.

Mr. DOWELL. What department is this?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is Col. Sherrill, of the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds. He has an office here in the city.

Mr. DOWELL. What are the duties of his department?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are quite extensive. He has to do with more parks than any other branch of the Government.

Mr. DOWELL. I notice that it is under the heading "Public buildings." Has he any authority relative to the construction of public buildings?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The State, War, and Navy and public buildings of that character. He has to supervise those.

Mr. DOWELL. But he has no supervision over the erection of public buildings?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. None at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operation, care, repair, and maintenance of the pumps which operate the three fountains on the Union Station Plaza, $4,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is there any item carried in the bill for operating the Dupont fountain?

Mr. EVANS. There is not.

Mr. WALSH. Or have we passed that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is no item in this bill for that.

Mr. WALSH. Why should it cost $4,000 to operate three fountains at the Union Station Plaza when most of the time there is no sign of any operation of them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Three thousand two hundred dollars of that is for electric current alone.

Mr. WALSH. For light?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Electric current for operating the pumps.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. The water that is used in those fountains is used over and over again. They are not gravity fountains. There are electric pumps which throw the water through the fountains, and it flows back in and is pumped over again.

Mr. WALSH. How many of those fountains have we in the city that require electric current to operate?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This one and the Dupont.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION.

To enable the commission created by section 22 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 885), to continue proceedings toward the acquisition of lands required for a connecting parkway between Potomac Park, the Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park, $100,000: Provided, That the total area of lands finally to be acquired for said parkway shall not exceed the area and parcels described and delineated on map No. 2, contained in House Document No. 1114 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, and the additional lands in squares 2543 and 2544 described in the sundry civil act approved June 5, 1920: Provided further, That the expenditure of the funds appropriated herein shall be subject to all the conditions imposed by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1916: Provided further, That in order to protect Rock Creek and its tributaries, none of the moneys herein or heretofore appropriated for the opening, widening, or extending of any street, avenue, or highway in the District of Columbia shall be expended for the opening, widening, or extension of any street, avenue, or highway which shall or may in the judgment of the District Commissioners permanently injure or diminish the existing flow of Rock Creek or any of its tributaries, nor shall permission so to do at private expense be granted to any private person or corporation except by the joint consent and approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the officer in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman about the item at the top of page 89, to provide for the increased cost in park maintenance, $50,000. Does that mean that this is in addition to what has been expended for the maintenance of parks?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is an appropriation that was carried for a considerably greater sum than that at the beginning of the war, and we have been gradually cutting it down until we have cut it down now to what we think is proper at this time, $50,000.

Mr. DOWELL. How much was allowed last year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Sixty-five thousand dollars in the current law.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it the purpose of the committee to cut this out entirely?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. To keep on cutting as fast as we can, consistently—that is, as long as I have anything to do with the committee. Eventually we may cut it all out.

Mr. DOWELL. There is a provision for various expenditures in the items on the preceding page. Do they not cover all of the necessary expenses?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman had heard the testimony, I do not think that he would have concluded to cut them all out at this time. We are going at the rate of $15,000 or $20,000 a year.

Mr. DOWELL. It seems to me that the way to cut them out is to cut them out, and permit them to spend what is necessary, and put it in the item calling for that expenditure.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They were afraid that they would have to come in with deficits, and that is why some of these estimates are made pretty large. We cut them down just as much as we thought we ought to cut them.

Mr. DOWELL. It is the policy of the committee not to bring in deficiency bills?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is the policy, if we can bring it about.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. What progress are they making in connecting up these parks? Can the gentleman give us the result of the work heretofore done, and how near the project will be completed that was authorized in 1913?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It may last three or four years yet. If the gentleman has time to study this little map which I hand to him, he could tell more about it from that.

Mr. WALSH. From the looks of it, I do not think I would understand it, if I studied it. I know the gentleman with his usual clarity of expression could tell me in a very few words just how they are getting along.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are getting along with reasonable rapidity, but not according to my view of economy. However, the gentleman must not take my view of economy as being correct.

Mr. WALSH. The plan is to have a practically continuous parkway?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. From Rock Creek Park down here to East Potomac Park?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is there anything in the hearings to show whether it is contemplated to build a rose garden or a peony garden in any of this particular part that is to be acquired or improved?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, if the gentleman will permit, if there is to be a peony garden, they would have to get the services of the only expert on peonies in the United States, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They asked for a separate appropriation to keep the weeds down, but this committee did not grant it; and several other things they asked for we did not grant. We have cut the matter down as low as we thought proper at this time.

Mr. WALSH. What was the limit of cost for the project?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the varicolored sheet which the gentleman tried to inflict upon me contain that information?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think possibly it does. I really do not know, and I am unable to say whether there is any limit of cost to it. That would not make any difference about making appropriations, however.

Mr. WALSH. How much longer will we have to be making appropriations to acquire these tracts of land? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That will depend upon circumstances, but in the opinion of the committee it will be completed inside of three or four years.

Mr. MANN. They have been making an appropriation, I think, for some years at the rate of $200,000 a year, or thereabout. This year the commission reported that under the circumstances they thought they ought to get along with $100,000.

How long this will take may depend on what action is taken by Congress in the future. There is a bill now pending before the House to have this commission acquire Klinge Road Park.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And Piney Branch.

Mr. MANN. And Piney Branch Park, and another one down there.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The Patterson tract—$600,000 for that.

Mr. MANN. And the Patterson tract. If Congress should act favorably upon bills of that character, it would take considerable time, probably, before acquiring the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Are they considering the removal of the Botanic Garden to any of these tracts? Before the committee each year we have had up for consideration a proposal to remove the fence around that garden. Is there any serious consideration being given to the removal of the garden?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has undoubtedly visited the Botanic Garden, but evidently he is not familiar with these tracts or he would know that no amount of money could locate the Botanic Garden on any of them.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say for the gentleman's information, although I presume he knows it, that there is a movement on foot among certain gentlemen of this city to remove the Botanic Garden to some place on Anacosta Flats when we get it in due shape. That is the latest movement along that line.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. What became of the suggestion, which a distinguished Senator opposed some years ago, to move the Botanic Garden to Rock Creek Park?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The upper end. That died, so to speak, because it would not cost anything to get that land. Therefore it is dead.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there a tract of land to be purchased at Anacostia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The symptoms I say are in the air and there have been conversations, but they have not submitted to this committee anything definite along that line yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota to complete that last sentence.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The last sentence was this; we have spent millions and probably will spend more millions to improve Anacosta Flats and this year you will notice in the bill we have gotten them down to the point where $150,000 will complete everything below Bennings Bridge. As to whether subsequent Congresses will go above Bennings Bridge and buy several million dollars worth of land or not, that is left for a future Congress, but this Congress will not do it, at least this committee will not consent to anything in that connection. I think there was considerable talk that in time that ought to be improved so that we could remove the Botanic Garden there. The land is very high priced out there, and we might improve that and when the land gets high enough in price then we will remove the Botanic Garden over there. But that is all in the air. Rock Creek Park in my judgment would be a good place. It would not cost the Government anything because we own that land.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Is any part of this $100,000 to be used to buy that piece of land that runs by the Sixteenth Street Bridge in what is called Piney Branch?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I see there is a project to buy a few acres of land up there that is occupied principally by a sewer and a few trees and pay about $150,000. None of this money goes for that purpose?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the price; I think he has—

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That I have gotten it too low?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the price is $235,000, and Klinge Park $150,000, and the Patterson tract $600,000. They wanted us to put something in this bill, but your subcommittee did not put it in. I see that a bill has been introduced in the Senate for that purpose, to purchase a million dollars' worth of property.

Mr. MANN. It has been reported to the House. If the gentleman kept up to date, it is on the calendar of the House now.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to congratulate the gentleman on the wisdom of his committee, and I hope that the good efforts along that line will be continued.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I notice that a number of lots remain to be purchased under this Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission, created March 4, 1913. The number of lots yet to be purchased are 197. The total number of lots or parcels are 465.

The assessors' full valuation of all land to be purchased is $1,532,664. The difference below the assessors' full valuation of the land thus far acquired is $115,160.70, or 12.07 per cent. The United States owned on December 31, 1921, 130.35 acres, or 81.74 per cent of the total area of parkway; that the total organization expenses December 31 is $50,274.82. The grand total of all expenditures is $838,888.45. They had an unexpended balance on December 31 last of $118,011.55. So I take it that the project having been accepted, the appropriation this year being $100,000, the expenditure yet to be made being in the vicinity of $700,000, it will probably be several years—

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Three or four years. That is my understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman have any objection to inserting this table in his remarks in reference to this matter?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, but it seems to me that it would clarify and beautify the gentleman's remarks if used in connection with them, and I have no objection to that.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this table of expenditures and balances may be incorporated as a part of my remarks, eliminating the colored plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to be allowed to include in his remarks certain figures, but not the colored drawings. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the statement referred to:

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK.

For roads, walks, bridges, water supply, sewerage, and drainage; grading, planting, and otherwise improving the grounds; erecting and repairing buildings and inclosures; care, subsistence, purchase, and transportation of animals; necessary employees; incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, including purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles required for official purposes, not exceeding $100 for the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, and exclusive of architect's fees or compensation, $125,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to inquire of the chairman how much the fees amount to that are expended for architects in this park. I note they are excluded from this expense of $125,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not believe that I could give the gentleman that information.

Mr. DOWELL. Who performs such a service?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is nothing in the hearing that discloses how much, if any, they were going to use for architect's fees, but I will say to the gentleman that the amount is very small.

Mr. DOWELL. In what appropriation is this provided for?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is no building going on, and I really do not think that they will use any sum whatever. At least, there has been no specific appropriation for architect's fees connected with it. But this language is in here, and it has been in here for a great many years. And, as I say, it is impossible to cut out all the surplus language in this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. If it is cut out and this thing excluded, would it then permit the employing of architects outside?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is no appropriation for it. The only appropriation for the Zoological Park is this $125,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, should we not cut out of the paragraph "exclusive of architect's fees or compensation?"

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have no objection to its going out, but it ought to stay in, because there might be something arising some time during the next year or two where they would need to pay some architect's fees.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman has said that there is no appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is no appropriation direct for that.

Mr. DOWELL. Therefore it could not be used in the next year.

Mr. MANN. It is desirable, if my friend from Iowa will permit, to have the language of appropriation bills from year to year as nearly similar as practicable.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there a provision for an architect in the city?

Mr. MANN. There is a municipal architect, I believe, connected with the schools, or otherwise, but he would not have anything to do with the Zoological Park. The Zoological Park is not under the control of the District of Columbia at all.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is under the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. MANN. It is under the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. DOWELL. Whoever is employed here as an architect would be in independent employment, and not in connection with any other matter of the District government?

Mr. MANN. If they had any building an architect would be employed, but I understand they have nothing.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Nothing now.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FROTHINGHAM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1610. An act to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATER SERVICE.

The following sums are appropriated wholly out of the revenues of the water department for expenses of the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances and for expenses of the water department, namely—

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I wish to ask the gentleman from Nebraska if he proposes to make his statement now of the water situation?

Mr. EVANS. I was going to offer a pro forma amendment at the conclusion of the next paragraph and make the explanation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

For operation, including salaries of all necessary employees, maintenance and repair of Washington Aqueduct and its accessories, McMillan Park Reservoir, Washington Aqueduct tunnel, the filtration plant, the plant for the preliminary treatment of the water supply, authorized water meters on Federal services, vehicles, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $170,000.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to correct and restate what I intended to say in the hearings as recorded on page 340. I am made there to say that the lady to whom I was speaking had not stated the facts; but what I meant to say was "that the things that she thought were happening were not happening."

The reason that I made the pro forma amendment is for the purpose of stating to the committee the position that the subcommittee took with reference to the proposed improvement to increase the water supply of Washington. First, there was no authorization for an appropriation to pay for the improvement. Not only was that true, but so far as the House was concerned there never had been any hearings on the project. At the time that the authorization for the detailed plans was made there were no hearings had in the House. How extensive they might have been in the Senate I do not know. In looking over the plans it was the opinion of the committee that the plans were not sufficiently definite and did not go far enough, and I shall endeavor to tell you what the situation is, what the relief proposed is, and likewise why we think it is not best, at the present stage of conditions, to make an appropriation until there is further investigation.

This map was prepared by one of the engineers, who prepared the plans and made the estimates; and before I go into that I want to say something with reference to the conditions under which the engineers worked. The time was quite limited. After they had made their first report and between that and the time the deficiency bill would be considered Maj. Tyler was directed to make the plans. Shortly after he began the work he was taken down with pneumonia, and although his physician directed him to cease work, he continued until his superior officer ordered him to stop and promised that he would take up the work and finish it. That superior officer did take up the work, but he had scarcely begun until his eyes became affected, and he in turn was directed to discontinue his work. But notwithstanding that, he continued until the plan or report was presented. Therefore in what I wish to say I am in no sense intending to criticize the plan as made, but to indicate that it was not finished with sufficient detail.

The present system consists of a 9-mile conduit, with which you are familiar, on what is known as the Aqueduct Road, extending from Great Falls to what is called the District line, or Dalecarlia Reservoir. From there it is continued to what is called the Georgetown Reservoir, and then over this line [indicating] to what is called the McMillan Reservoir, at which place are the filtration beds, where the water is put into a condition for use as we draw it from the pipes.

This conduit down here [indicating] was built some 50 or more years ago. It is made of brick and stone, and while they can go through it—that is, by shutting the gates at the dam and allowing the water to run out—they have only one day in which to make any repairs before the water must be turned on again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. As I was saying, they would have but one day in which to work, and, as the engineer who appeared before the committee testified, they could not, of course, in one day make any great repairs in the aqueduct.

The aqueduct shows signs of disintegration to this extent: The plaster and mortar are falling from the bricks, and there are places where there are cracks. Its limit in the matter of conveyance of water is 90,000,000 gallons per day. And I want to say, in that respect, that in the last year, 1921, at one time 81,000,000 gallons were carried through that aqueduct. That is, the consumption for a day at least, perhaps several days, was 81,000,000 gallons, so that the capacity of that conduit was nearly reached.

The next weak place is where the conduit crosses Rock Creek. At this place [indicating] in order to get across Rock Creek, they sunk perpendicular shafts down to a level below the bottom of Rock Creek, and carried by tunnel across the channel of Rock Creek, and then up by another vertical shaft on the east side through which the water flows. It therefore is apparent that there is a pressure at all times on the bottom of that tunnel equal to that supplied by a column of water of the height of the depth of that tunnel. I can not give you that distance. That tunnel has not been dewatered in seven years, because it takes a day to dewater it, and before they can get down and do anything they must have water through it again to supply the city. It is a weak place also for this reason: While it is circular, except in two or three places, there is a bulge in it, and the last time it was dewatered that bulge was shored up, so that you see there are two weak places, this [indicating] being the worse of the two.

Mr. ARENTZ. What does the gentleman mean by "this"?

Mr. EVANS. The place where it goes under Rock Creek.

Now, I wish to tell you how the water is distributed. This part of the map colored green represents the business portion of Washington, and the water is sent from the McMillan Reservoir by gravity, also to the Anacostia Flats, which I think needs some pumping. There is a pumping plant which pumps water from the reservoir at McMillan Reservoir on to the filtration beds, and from there it is fed by gravity.

The last statement that I had was to the effect that 47 per cent of the water that is used in Washington is used through this gravity portion of the system, but the statement for the previous years shows that there was something over 50 per cent of it used, so that throughout my explanation of the matter I shall use the term "50 per cent" as more easily understood than the exact figures would be if I were to use them. The portion of the map that is dark-colored, brown or red, is the first high level, and that is supplied by a pump. The same is true of the second level, which is colored yellow. The one above, the green, is supplied by the reservoir there, which is filled by pumps from McMillan Reservoir.

With reference to these two levels, the first and the second, my understanding is that they have no reservoir, but pump directly into the distributing system, the pumps furnishing the pressure, while with reference to that in the green territory they have a reservoir, and on the remainder there they have a standpipe. The way they propose to remedy this condition is by duplicating the aqueduct from the dam at Great Falls down to what is called the Dalecarlia Reservoir. There they intend to put up filtration beds and purify that portion of the water that they do not handle through the old reservoir. It will be furnished by two lines of pipe. As to the upper one of them, I can not tell how far that goes, but it is well up north toward the higher portions of the city. The other one runs in a southeasterly direction to a point which is near the old Georgetown Reservoir. That is as far as their plan goes. You will notice that if their plan is adopted and carried out, it will furnish to what are known as the high levels the water from the filtration plant located at the western end of the District, or the Dalecarlia Reservoir, and the balance of the District or of Washington must be supplied by the old system. The reason why I have found fault with that condition is this: One-half of 82,000,000 gallons of water, the amount used in a day during June in 1921, is 41,000,000 gallons of water. There has been an annual increase in the use of water in the District of Columbia varying between 1,000,000 gallons per day and 3,000,000 gallons per day, depending upon what series of years you take. If you take the medium between the two, which is 2,000,000 gallons, and if you take into consideration the fact that it will require three years to complete this plant, at the rate of an annual increase of 2,000,000 gallons there will be an increase of 6,000,000 gallons of water used by the people of Washington when this plant is completed; and if we are now using 82,000,000 gallons of water per day we will have practically 88,000,000 gallons per day consumption, one-half of that being in the territory which is fed by gravity. If you have 88,000,000 gallons a day consumption when you begin to use your new system, you have practically got to the limit of this pipe line that runs through Rock Creek, because you are sending through the tunnel 44,000,000 gallons, and 49,000,000 gallons prevents dewatering. Therefore, if there is any chance at all for an accident, you are in practically the same condition then that you are now. The answer to that, as made by the engineers, is that in the hot portion of the year and the cold portion of the year they use water 30 per cent in excess of the average, taking into consideration the daily average. That estimate is about 5 per cent high, as shown by the tables in the report of the chief engineer covering 1921; and, while I think of it, I ask that I may include as a part of my remarks the tables which are furnished as to consumption of water, as to cost of the plant, and as to the variation in the use of water, so that the same may be printed and accessible to everyone who reads my remarks.

Now, if I am right about this statement that I have made, and if we are going to spend, as they say, practically $10,000,000 to provide a new system, we ought not to be left at the end of six years in practically the same condition in which we now are. It is easy to criticize, but my idea is that one ought to suggest something. I am not an engineer, but I have had some practical experience in works of this character, and my suggestion, made to one of the engineers, was to connect the lines of pipe which now carry the water from the McMillan Reservoir or filtration beds to the high level with this system, which will of necessity be connected with the McMillan Reservoir, by putting in a by-pass around the engine or pump, and in the case of the loss of use of this aqueduct under Rock Creek you would get for practical purposes the same amount of water back to the McMillan Reservoir that it is now furnishing to the higher levels. The engineer did not say that this idea was wrong, but he admitted that it might be worked out nicely. The line which they propose to run from the Dalecarlia Reservoir is more than sufficient to take care of the water consumption on these two levels. You could do the same thing with reference to the reservoir, by connecting the bottom of the reservoir with the pipe that pumps the water from the McMillan Reservoir to the reservoir in the highest or third level, and by putting a by-pass around that pump. I am informed that before they used the McMillan Reservoir there was a system by which this water was carried through to what we now know as lower Washington, or the business portion of Washington, without filtration, and that at some place near where I am pointing on the map, which is not more than a hundred rods from the end of their line, is the old system of distribution, and if you would connect the line that runs southeast from the Dalecarlia Reservoir with the old Georgetown system you then would have practically what would give you a way to furnish water to all of Washington, even though you did have difficulty with the tunnel. There is a letter, which has already been put in the Record, in which the estimated cost of this improvement is fixed at nearly half a million dollars—between $400,000 and $500,000. I think that estimate is too large.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. EVANS. I would rather go on until I get through with my explanation. Then I will answer any questions that I can.

When the engineer and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and I were considering this question I asked the engineer to fix approximately what would be the cost of this connection from the old Georgetown Reservoir down to the old water system. Of course, we all knew that he could not fix it exactly, but I asked him to approximate it. He gave it at $130,000, and it seems to me that that is quite reasonable. Suppose, however, that you make it $500,000; that is but a little over 4 per cent of the cost of your entire system—that is, of the improvement—and it does give you a dual plant. Permit me to say that most water systems have a dual or circulating system. For instance, if a line of distributing mains is run up Eighteenth Street and another one up Fourteenth Street, with your pumping plant, we will say, at F Street, the proper thing to do is to connect the north end of Eighteenth Street with the north end of Fourteenth Street, so that you have circulation in your system. It furnishes an additional advantage. If you should have a break in your system halfway up Eighteenth Street, you have only to shut off the short part of the system in which the break is located, and you can feed from Fourteenth Street around to the north end of Nineteenth Street and also up the south end of Eighteenth Street.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska be allowed to continue until he concludes his explanation.

Mr. MANN. Let us fix a time. The gentleman can have all the time he desires.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. What I have suggested here with reference to the other system is simply the application of that principle in a more extended way. It does not seem to me to be the proper thing to spend over $9,000,000 and then have your system so that in the course of 10 or 15 years you will be where you are now.

In talking with the engineers it was suggested that it would be much harder to repair the conduit from Great Falls down to the District line than it would be to repair the line from Georgetown Reservoir to the McMillan Reservoir. I can not conceive how that can be.

In the one case you have to put everything up and down shafts and in the other there are many gates or ways of getting into the conduit at various places from the dam down to the reservoir.

Another reason why I think there ought to be hearings on this matter is that these estimates were made when things were quite high. You have your report practically made in 1920, and if we would go into an investigation into this system by hearings had by the proper legislative committee and examine the various plans I think it would be very much better. Now, these were the reasons we had in mind besides that of the point of order when deciding as we did with reference to this appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I will yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that the legislative committee of either the Senate or the House ought to go thoroughly into this matter before they ask for an appropriation?

Mr. EVANS. In my mind there is no question about it. The legislative committee ought to take it up and consider it both as to costs and also as to efficiency. The estimates in detail with the plans ought to be examined, so that when you come to fix the authorization you will be within the limit.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under whose direct charge is the water system?

Mr. EVANS. If I understand the gentleman, the water system from the dam to the McMillan Reservoir is under the War Department and the balance is under the District.

Mr. MANN. Whatever is done this side of the first reservoir the conduit needs to be reconstructed and a new conduit in any case.

Mr. EVANS. That is my opinion.

Mr. MANN. That is something that is not dependent on doing the work this side of that.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman is suggesting what has been talked of and thought of by those who have studied the situation.

Mr. MANN. Why is it not perfectly feasible to go ahead with the construction of the additional conduit—I suppose that is what would be done, although I do not know—while you are investigating the rest of the subject?

Mr. EVANS. The solution the gentleman suggests, which is the one suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, I think is a better way. The engineer thinks it is the way they should proceed.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I will.

Mr. MAPES. In the gentleman's statement he said there were two weak points in the present system, one the conduit from the Great Falls leading into the city and the other the tunnel under Rock Creek. In discussing the proposed improvement he stated that it contemplated a new conduit paralleling the present one running to the city and then a filtration plant at the city limits which would supply the two higher levels.

Mr. EVANS. All the upper levels.

Mr. MAPES. It is not clear to me, although it seems to be to the gentleman, why it would be necessary after the completion of the proposed improvement to have the whole 88,000,000 gallons a day run through the conduit under Rock Creek, inasmuch as the water going through there only supplies the lower levels in the southeast.

Mr. EVANS. I am not sure whether the gentleman was here when I first began my explanation.

Mr. MAPES. Yes; I was here.

Mr. EVANS. I will repeat. For seven years the tunnel has not been dewatered because you can not dewater it and have any time left. Now, seven years ago, when they stopped dewatering it, the average amount of water which went through per diem was 49,000,000 gallons. When you have 88,000,000 gallons consumption, one-half of which is used by the gravity level, you have 44,000,000 gallons going through the tunnel, although you have the new conduit supplying the upper levels, and it is only 5,000,000 gallons below the average at the time they ceased to be able to get into the tunnel.

Mr. MAPES. The whole 81,000,000 gallons per day necessary to supply the city would not have to go through there after the improvement?

Mr. EVANS. It does now.

Mr. MAPES. The whole 81,000,000 gallons?

Mr. EVANS. The 81,000,000 gallons go through that tunnel.

Mr. MAPES. They do now, but it would not be necessary for them to do so after the new conduit was laid and the upper levels supplied from the proposed filtration plant at the limits of the city.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps this will help. Does all of the water go through the McMillan Reservoir?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is the one north of us.

Mr. EVANS. Yes; all the water used in Washington goes through the filtration plant out near the Soldiers Home.

Mr. MAPES. If one-half of it stops at the District line, why is it necessary to have the full 81,000,000 gallons go under Rock Creek?

Mr. EVANS. It is necessary to supply water to the gravity of lower Washington. They are afraid of the tunnel, more so than the conduit between here and Great Falls.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the gentleman, his point is that the tunnel under the creek would have to supply in the neighborhood of 40,000,000 or more gallons for the gravity system.

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. If the other were diverted.

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. And that that amount of water daily is so carried that the reservoirs could not be made to hold enough to keep using it for more than a day.

Mr. EVANS. That is it exactly.

Mr. MANN. And in a day you can not repair it.

Mr. MAPES. I have in mind the water for the lower level of the city.

Mr. MANN. That is the gravity system.

Mr. EVANS. With the exception of right where we are now, where I direct my pointer, which is called the first high, the water flows by gravity from the McMillan Reservoir and furnishes water to all this territory that is colored blue. When we put in the new system we will take off the McMillan Reservoir the burden of furnishing water to all the balance of Washington; but this blue territory uses one-half of all the water Washington consumes. We have now gotten to nearly the limit of this conduit, which, according to the engineers, is 90,000,000 gallons, and we used at times during this past year practically 82,000,000 gallons—79,000,000 gallons a day in a number of months. I think there were three months in which we passed 79,000,000 gallons of water consumption in one day.

Mr. MAPES. Does that all go under the creek?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; under Rock Creek. If there is an increase of 2,000,000 gallons in daily consumption for three years, you have an increase of 6,000,000, so that there will be days when there will be 88,000,000 gallons of water consumed in Washington.

Mr. MAPES. If you divert half of that at the District line, why would it be necessary to send just as much under the creek then as now?

Mr. EVANS. That will leave going to the gravity system 44,000,000 gallons per day. When they stopped being able to dewater the tunnel under Rock Creek they were using only 49,000,000 gallons, so that you are within 5,000,000 gallons of the point where you are unable to dewater the tunnel for repairs, and you will then have your tunnel under Rock Creek in exactly the same condition it is now and you will have no way to supply water to the gravity portion of the system in case of accident to the tunnel unless you get it from these other sources that I have mentioned.

Mr. MANN. What is the water supply in the reservoirs?

Mr. EVANS. I can not give you that, except in a general way. He said that as it is now they could only have one day—that is, it would take them a day to dewater—and then they would have a day left, which would be practically two days' water.

Mr. MANN. Of course, there is a great deal of difference in the amount of water at different times in the year.

Mr. EVANS. The average amount of water used in 1921 was 66,000,000 gallons plus.

Mr. MANN. The average does not make so much difference. What you want is the lowest amount of water.

Mr. EVANS. In the same year you had practically 82,000,000 gallons used at a certain time of the year.

Mr. MANN. But if there is a certain season in the year when they use comparatively little water, that is the test as to whether you can store enough to cover a certain period of time.

Mr. EVANS. That is the proposition of Maj. Tyler, that he intends to get into this tunnel during the fall or the spring when the use of water is at its lowest stage and repair it then.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Is it not a fact that the water coming from the Great Falls direction and from Georgetown all has to go through this main tunnel which is never dewatered?

Mr. EVANS. It is never dewatered, and it all goes through there at the present time.

Mr. KINDRED. From the standpoint of public health, is it not a fact that organic matter and silt continues to gather in this main tunnel, affording a nucleus and a field for germs which, in a measure, may destroy all of the effort made to purify the water in the filtering plants, showing the necessity for some process by which the main tunnel may be dewatered as quickly as possible?

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman I think is in error as to where the purification process takes place. At present it all takes place after the water has passed through the tunnel except the silt basins. The filtering basins are on the other side at McMillan Reservoir.

Mr. KINDRED. I thought the gentleman spoke of some elaborate filtering plant in the water system toward Great Falls.

Mr. EVANS. Correct, but the water running through that will not pass through the tunnel to which attention has been called; it will go pretty nearly west from the Dalecarlia Reservoir to those portions of the system that are needed to supply the north part of Washington. The other portion goes in a southeasterly direction. I may say there that the detailed distribution was not presented to the committee, and just how they are going to perfect it from the point near the Georgetown Reservoir I am not certain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to put a question or two to him?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand, the gentleman is of opinion that it is necessary to provide an additional water supply, and that construction of the facilities ought to be carried on as rapidly as it can be carried on?

Mr. EVANS. That is my opinion, and I think the facts that I have enumerated would suggest that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In addition to what the gentleman said in answer to a question from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I understand that the gentleman thinks that this matter of determining the method of distribution to the east of the District line need not delay the construction of the new conduit from the Great Falls to the District line and the construction of the new filtration plant at the District line?

Mr. EVANS. I do not think it will delay it at all. I may say in further answer to the question I think this ought to be done; that before the money is appropriated, or before the appropriation is made for the construction of the conduit and the filtration plant, there ought to be hearings to which I have alluded, and they ought to fix with reasonable accuracy just what the cost is going to be, and provisions ought to be made which would insure the proper construction within a proper limit of cost and under such terms as would insure the Government against loss.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Assuming the construction of the new conduit and filtration plant at the District line will cost approximately $5,000,000, does the gentleman think it would be inexpedient before this bill is finally enacted to amend it by making an appropriation of, say, $2,000,000, which is about all that could be spent up to the expiration of the fiscal year 1923, to be expended altogether in the construction or toward the construction of a new conduit to and the construction of a filtration plant at the District line, assuming that such amendment could be drawn in proper terms?

Mr. EVANS. I think it is a wise thing to do.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I may say to the gentleman, I shall not offer to amend the bill, but I hope that it will be amended before we finally act upon the bill in this House.

Mr. EVANS. Well, I should not want to see any amendment put upon the bill with conditions as they are now. I think there ought to be further investigation and certainty fixed, both as to how this is going to be distributed ultimately and—

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. In view of the fact that the Government paid for the present conduit—that is, it belongs to the Government, and the Government paid all the expenses of it, owns it—and in view of the further fact that the District has grown now to be a city of 437,000 people, with great commercial interests, does the gentleman think it fair to the people of the United States to be called upon now to spend 40 per cent of $5,000,000 to furnish this extra water supply about which the gentleman from Virginia has spoken so much?

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman has raised a question which can be justified very largely by facts. If the gentleman wishes to investigate, if he will get the first volume of the Chief of Engineer's report for 1921, and turn to page 2045, he will find the meter measurement for water used by the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman if in this purification process they are continuing to keep the water supply of the District purified?

Mr. EVANS. Washington, according to the report of the Engineers, has one of the best water systems, so far as purity is concerned, that there is in the country. There are systems that have water a little bit less hard, but those of us who come from the West think this water is the best we have seen.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does an analysis of the water disclose anything that would be deleterious to health?

Mr. EVANS. Nothing.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have understood they make analyses of this water about every day. Is that correct or not?

Mr. EVANS. That I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is it not a fact that the hearings before us have disclosed the fact that there never was any better water in the United States than now furnished the District of Columbia in all respects?

Mr. EVANS. I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. BRIGGS. I desire to ask the gentleman another question. Has the meter system been installed in the District yet?

Mr. EVANS. Quite thoroughly. I think as to those who use water, outside of what the Government uses, it is all metered; that is my understanding.

Mr. BRIGGS. I think it was stated on the floor some time at other periods when the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia was under discussion that the water was not metered in the District of Columbia, and it only encouraged waste, and there was great need for this metering; and I wondered if it was metered now, and what the effect of this metering has been in reference to the consumption of water—whether it has been reduced or increased?

Mr. MANN. We commenced forcing the installation of meters here 15 or 20 years ago.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has that been rather general?

Mr. MANN. We have been requiring it. I do not know whether they have been enforcing it or not.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will state that the consumption of water has remained almost stationary in the District for the past seven years notwithstanding the increase in population of almost one-third.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is the average consumption now?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Around 65,000,000 gallons per day. The gentleman stated that only the legislative committee of Congress had passed on this project. Is it not a fact that two Secretaries of War and the Chief of the Corps of Army Engineers, and the Waterpower Commission, which is composed of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce, have reported on this proposition, and the present Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, has in two instances, at least, urged upon Congress the imperative necessity of beginning the construction of this conduit?

Mr. EVANS. As the gentleman stated the question, I can not answer. I have here the report which was made when they investigated under the direction of Congress the matter of power and water supply. That report did not go into distribution and, as I view it, and as I think it is, the most of the investigation has covered the water supply and bringing it from Great Falls to the District line, and the rest of it has not received much attention.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. The War Department, that made the investigation, has not any jurisdiction, but before you can distribute the water you must get it to the District line.

Mr. EVANS. There is not any question about that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is it contemplated in this survey to acquire any land around the watershed at Great Falls?

Mr. EVANS. There is no intention, so far as I know, to acquire land that is included in the watershed. They have investigated it in this report, and, if you care to read it, you will see that they cover that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I object, Mr. Chairman. We have been having this for an hour or so.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You can not spend the time on any better subject.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But we can not do anything about it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think it important to acquire land in the watershed?

Mr. EVANS. My opinion is based on the report, and in that report they say it is not necessary to acquire land along the watershed, but they do require land along the conduit if they put in the addition.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Do you think the water here ought to be metered to the people, or whether or not it ought to be distributed on some other basis?

Mr. EVANS. I think it ought to be metered to them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say to the gentleman that I was convinced against that two or three years ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and I think it ought to be free to the people.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I wish to say that we make appropriation this year for more meters, and we are going to continue that system.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said two or three years ago we ought not to meter the water to the homes of the District, but that it ought to be as free as it could be made.

Mr. MANN. I think the more water in the homes the better it is.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is what I think. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], the chairman of the committee? At this time, or when the reading of the bill is concluded, will not the gentleman agree that I may have 10 or 15 minutes in which to discuss the general subject to which it relates?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. After we have read the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. That the services of assistant engineers, draftsmen, levelers, rodmen, chainmen, computers, copyists, and inspectors temporarily required in connection with water department work authorized by appropriations may be employed exclusively to carry into effect said appropriations, and be paid therefrom, when specifically and in writing ordered by the commissioners, and the commissioners in their annual estimates shall report the number of such employees performing such services and their work and the sums paid to each: Provided, That the expenditures hereunder shall not exceed $15,000 during the fiscal year 1923.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the idea of this proviso that the expenditure shall not exceed $15,000 during the fiscal year 1923?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The idea is that they could not spend more than $15,000.

Mr. WALSH. How much do you appropriate?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The appropriation is very large, four or five hundred thousand dollars in an item over here. That may be used for the purposes for which it is expressed. This is for temporary employees. I think we have enough employees already, but if an emergency arises we do not want to expend more than $15,000 for temporary employment. This has been in the law for many years.

Mr. WALSH. This is the general appropriation, and then you are providing it may be used, for this particular emergency purpose, not to exceed $15,000?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is all. It is for temporary employment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has just called the attention of the Chair to what is evidently an error in the word "receipt," page 100, line 6. It should be in the plural and not in the singular. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the bill has been read through, and before I move that the committee rise, I want to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] be granted 10 minutes to talk on any matter on which he desires to talk.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can not the gentleman make it 15? I have given the gentleman no trouble.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes out of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I shall not, as I stated awhile ago, offer a water-supply amendment to this bill because it would go out on a point of order. I have, however, placed in the Record, as has been indicated by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS], correspondence with the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Beach, which points to the propriety of an amendment which, if adopted, will avoid delay in providing new facilities, and, at the same time, in no manner interfere with the future decision of the question raised by the committee as to how the water gathered in the proposed new filtration plant at the District line shall be distributed—a question just discussed by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The view expressed by the committee relative to the distribution feature of the Tyler project differs from the view of the engineers of the War Department, and the question as to which is the correct view and the view which should receive the approval of Congress can hereafter be determined without much difficulty. Meanwhile the confessedly necessary construction of a new conduit from the Great Falls to the District line and the construction of a new filtration plant at the District line can be rapidly carried on if the bill finally includes an appropriation confined to that portion of the project. We must, it seems, rely not upon ourselves but upon the Senate to make possible such an appropriation, and likewise for other important amendments.

It is regrettable that the subcommittee which framed the bill, due in part to its wholesale acceptance of the reduction of the estimates of the commissioners made by the Bureau of the Budget and in part to limitations imposed by the rules of the House, must, along with the rest of us, look to the Senate for such action as may, and it is to be hoped will, result in the passage of a more satisfactory bill. We are compelled to rely upon the Senate to rescue the House from the unfortunate consequences of its own self-repression.

The debate that has been had has at least served to suggest that it is possible to improve the relations of Congress to the District. What I am about to say is intended to support that suggestion by outlining certain steps that might be taken in the way of modifying the legislative procedure and that would result, as it seems to me, in materially bettering the condition that now exists.

There is one fundamental change favored by some that in my judgment should not be thought of, namely, the institution of self-government in the District, if thereby is meant government similar to that of a State having a governor and legislature elected by the people, or of a city with a mayor and council elected by the people. It would be a mistake to abandon the present commission form of government when so many cities are turning to it as the desirable form, or to assimilate the local government to that of a State, which would be entering again upon an experiment which proved so almost disastrous when it was tried here many years ago.

There is another thing that invites incidental comment. It is understood that an effort is being made to obtain a constitutional amendment that would enable the District, by popular vote, to secure representation in Congress and participate in presidential elections, and this, I am inclined to believe, is a reasonable proposition. Other considerations aside, it would give the District a political status that would tend to assure it more comprehensive and tolerant treatment. But without waiting for that there is much that might be done at once.

1. Congress is the District legislature, and one trouble is on account of delay in enacting legislation. The initiation of District legislation now rests with one or the other of two large District committees—the Senate Committee of 13 members and the House Committee of 21 members. These committees act separately. A measure carefully, and often very elaborately, considered and reported by one may be considered de novo and to the same extent by the other. Why not, in order to speed legislation, establish a single Joint District Committee, to which could be referred bills originating in either House and empower it to make reports to either House, or simultaneously to both Houses, as it may determine? That this would save the waste of time attaching to independent Senate and House committee action can hardly be questioned. Nor is it open to question that the reports of such a joint committee would carry a weight and authority that separate reports do not commonly carry. The justification for such a departure from the present procedure lies in the fact that the legislative power of Congress over the District is exceptional, just as the requirements of the District are exceptional, and that it would contribute to facilitate Congress in performing the unusual functions which it must exercise in enacting all the laws that are applicable here—a task that Congress did not attempt in governing the numerous Territories that have become States, and that it does not now attempt in governing the remaining Territory of Alaska. The departure would not be a crude experiment. There is now a Joint Committee on Printing, which promotes coherence and expedition, and special joint committees have from time to time been created to discharge duties that otherwise would have been less coherently and expeditiously performed.

2. There should be more opportunity given for considering and disposing of District measures. The House is, of course, crowded with work, but that is not a good reason why District legislation should be constantly sidetracked by disregarding the rule that assigns certain days for that purpose. If there is a will to do it, time can be found. For instance, perhaps ample opportunity could be found if one-half of the time should be allotted to District business that is now taken up in what is called "general debate," when we make speeches mainly for the benefit of our constituents, a large percentage of which could just as well be printed without being delivered as delivered in advance to very small audiences.

3. And I ask here the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. MADDEN: Appropriation bills are, of course, of prime importance to the District. It is to be kept in mind that the taxpayers of the District now bear 60 per cent of the expenditures that are permitted. The burden to be borne by the Treasury under the present bill is 40 per cent of the total, or about $8,000,000. This is mentioned to show that in this respect, as in other respects, the relation of Congress to the District is exceptional not only because of the division of liability but because of the comparatively small amounts appropriated. During the debate I have ventured the belief that, while the Budget law may be all that is claimed for it otherwise, it should not apply to District appropriations. It is one thing for the Bureau of the Budget to compile for submission to Congress estimates for the expenditures of a department, but it is quite another thing to compile and submit estimates for District expenditures, which can not be done without a full knowledge and survey of the District situation, of its schools, its parks, its streets, its sewers, its public utilities, and all of the other varied activities that pertain to the well-being and progress of a large municipality. Under a State budget law the governor and his advisers are responsible for the estimates presented to the legislature. The estimates are the products of executive investigation. Department estimates are the product of executive investigation. The commissioners are the executive of the District. They are selected because of their acquaintance with local conditions, their experience, and the confidence that is felt in the fidelity with which they will guard all interests, and the District estimates should be the product of their investigation. They should not be hampered, nor should Congress be hampered, by leaving it to any other agency to advise Congress as to what should or should not be appropriated, and in that connection presupposing that the House, while it may diminish the Budget estimates, must not take the liberty of increasing them. The commissioners are the executive branch of the District government, and should be in close contact and deal directly with the legislative branch, which is Congress. To the commissioners should be intrusted the duty of submitting to Congress what, in their opinion, is needed, and Congress, without placing itself under any restraint, should decide whether the commissioners are right; and if not, to what extent they are wrong.

4. I also entertain the belief, in further recognition of the exceptional jurisdiction of Congress over the District, that there would be a gain in concentrating legislative processes by conferring upon the joint committee jurisdiction to report the District appropriation bills and incorporate therein legislative provisions. The great policy that is thought to be served by placing all appropriations in the control of a single House committee would not be impaired in any real sense by placing District appropriations, which, as stated, are comparatively small, under the control of a joint committee; nor do I see how anything but good could come from releasing such a committee from the present rule that subjects legislative provisions on appropriation bills to points of order. The embarrassment and delay caused by the House being disabled from doing in the first instance what it so frequently does after the Senate has led the way would thus be removed.

The plan I have briefly outlined would make for simplicity and expedition. May I again call this to the particular attention of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MADDEN. I am listening with very careful attention to the gentleman's very lucid statement.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The machinery for bringing legislation before Congress would thus consist of the commissioners and one joint committee, instead of the commissioners, the Bureau of the Budget, two standing committees of the House, and one standing committee of the Senate. It would be only a modification of procedure. The House would surrender no single element of power. Nothing could be finally done without the approval of Congress. The last act and the last word would rest with Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not simplify it if it were left entirely with the commissioners?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That would divest Congress of any final authority, which no one suggests, and of course it is not to be thought of.

Should it be said that the plan outlined would be a deviation from the general system of procedure now in force and a sacrifice of the theory pervading that system, the reply is that in conducting government differences of environment and circumstances can not be ignored but must always be reckoned with.

A sound political philosophy is expressed in the well-remembered lines of the great author who declared in substance that the government which is best administered is best. We should all desire for the District the best character and methods of government that can be devised.

Mr. EVANS. Does not the gentleman believe that there ought to be local self-government in the District; that is, within proper limitations?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have stated that I do not believe in instituting local self-government here if I understand the term as it is now used. That was tried for a time many years ago, and the experiment was well-nigh disastrous. I do not think the experiment should be renewed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If it is in order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how many amendments were adopted by the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that there are about 10. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 1610. An act to remit the duty on a carillon of bells to be imported for the Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage, Gloucester, Mass.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 10101.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VEGETABLE MARKET CONDITIONS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am in receipt this morning of three telegrams—one from Fort Lauderdale on the east coast of Florida, one from Lakeland in the western portion of the peninsula of the State, and one from Plant City in the southwestern portion, all regions of early vegetable-growing activities. These telegrams bear particularly on the situation with regard to cabbage, and state that cabbage is selling in the northern markets for about 10 cents a pound retail and is selling there for less than 2 cents a pound. I ask to have the telegram from Plant City printed in the RECORD as illustrative of such comments which are coming from various portions of the State on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The telegram is as follows:

PLANT CITY, FLA., February 7, 1921.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Investigation shows Florida cabbage selling on average 10 cents pound retail in northern market, although we hardly able sell it for 1½ cents per pound f. o. b. Florida shipping points. This price not enough to pay cost of packing harvesting. Growers face serious disaster unless something done to relieve situation. Wide publicity would force price down to consumer, thereby calling for larger consumption, and this would without doubt be reflected in increase price to growers on account of better demand. Big prices retail trade getting cutting down consumption, and believe if you would give matter necessary publicity would be great help.

M. H. DORSETT.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2373) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I regret very much that the point of no quorum was made. It has taken half an hour to secure a quorum of the Senate. Senators ought to have known that it would take a good while to obtain a quorum of the Senate, because I had the floor when we adjourned last evening, and it was known that I was going to speak. Under the circumstances, Senators could not be expected to attend. I wish to apologize to them. I did not make the point of no quorum; I did not have anything to do with it; and I regret very much that it was made. I will announce now that Senators may all be excused for the remainder of the day, only the reporter and the Presiding Officer remaining.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, knowing the innate modesty of the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to say that I am quite sure the Senator who made the point of no quorum was convinced that all Senators ought to be here to listen to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I infer that since the Senator from Nebraska does not want the reporter to leave he is going to speak for the RECORD?

Mr. NORRIS. I am certainly, and not for Senators. I hope that what I have to say will have a little to do in creating a public sentiment which I hope and believe will be healthy and righteous; that is my object.

To begin with, Mr. President, I want to clear up what appears to me to be some misapprehension and misunderstanding as to the real object of this bill. The bill is an old friend; it has been here before. I took great interest in it a year or so ago, when it was reported in a somewhat different form, but there seemed to be no opportunity to secure the proper kind of consideration for it at that time. It is a subject of congratulation that Senators have seen a new light. Whether the change is due to the approaching election or to some other cause, I will not undertake to discuss, but there is more interest in the measure now, and it is going to pass without any doubt.

Mr. President, most of the people, and many Senators also, designate this as a "farmers' bill." I believe that while it is not entirely out of place so to designate it, upon a broader and a fairer consideration it will be conceded that it is a bill which applies just as much to the consumer as it does to the producer. After all, Mr. President, assuming that any aggregation of citizens is honest, that any organization is honest and represents an honest intention to perform an honest and unselfish work, with that assumption we are all in the same boat, whether we are producers or consumers.

It is conceded that agriculture is in a deplorable condition; it is conceded that our food is being produced by those who toil at a price which does not pay the actual cost of production. It is conceded, I think, that agriculture is not a—but the—fundamental industry, not of our country alone but of the world, and that when we lift up agriculture we lift up everybody dependent upon agriculture, which includes everyone except those who make their money out of the products which are consumed, as such products travel from the producer to the consumer.

I was very much interested yesterday, at a hearing that was taking place before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to see two representatives of labor organizations appear before that committee in behalf of agriculture, in behalf of a bill to stabilize the price of agricultural products. While they did not pretend to be sufficiently posted to arrange the concrete parts of the bill, they did advocate, in language that was forceful and not capable of successful refutation, that something should be done to stabilize agriculture in order that those who produce the food should do it at a profit and a living profit. They said—one representative from the American Federation of Labor and one representative from the International Association of Machinists—that whenever they were employed they had always noticed that agriculture was prosperous; when agriculture failed, they lost their jobs. When those on the farms were losing money, they lost their positions or had to work at a wage that was not remunerative; and they said—and it is also true of every organization, of all classes of citizens—"Unless the farmer is prosperous, we will not be prosperous. Unless the farmer is making enough money to keep him at the business, we fail; we go hungry; we lose our positions."

Mr. President, in round numbers, the farmer is responsible for one-half of the buying of the world; and when you take away the ability of one-half of the people of the United States to buy, you bring disaster not upon the farmer alone but upon all classes of the people. So, if we will get down to what I believe to be fundamental, we will reach the conclusion that when we are legislating in such a way as to bring additional profit to those who raise the food of the country and of the world we are legislating prosperity to all classes of people.

There is no escape from that proposition; and it is idle to say that the farmer is the only man who is interested; that the producer is the only man who has an interest in this kind of legislation. It interests everybody to the same extent that it does the producer. When the producer fails to produce the consumer will not be able to consume; and if farming is unprofitable and remains so, as is admittedly true now—the farmer is not getting enough for his product to pay for the cost of production—if that continues, he will cease to produce, and the balance of us will go hungry. We will pay prices that will be fabulous, that will be so high that unless we are wealthy we will not be able to purchase the necessities of life. So, Mr. President, we can not consider the matter from the standpoint of the consumer only; and something must be done to relieve the condition, not only temporarily, but, in my judgment, permanently.

This is a bill that attempts to relieve from the effect of the Sherman antitrust law the farmers and other producers of agricultural products. If the Sherman antitrust law were effective, as its authors intended that it should be, if we had no trusts now, this legislation would not be necessary, and I would not have much interest in it; but, as a matter of practice, as a matter of practical application, the farmer is almost the only man who is affected by the Sherman antitrust law. It is all right to speak in beautiful and glowing terms, as Senators have, about laws that shall prohibit monopoly and restraint of trade. I wish we could prohibit monopoly. We have not done it. We have not prohibited restraint of trade, and it does not make very much difference whether the Supreme Court, after long and tedious litigation, decides a combination to be a monopoly and dissolves it, or whether it decides that it is a philanthropic institution working for the good of humanity and is not a monopoly, like the Steel Trust; the result is about the same. Whether you dissolve it or not, it keeps on doing business in the same way, at the same old stand. Everybody knows about it. Everybody possessed of ordinary intelligence and experience in life knows, for instance, that the Steel Trust is a monopoly and controls prices. I said "everybody"; I will exempt from that the members of the Supreme Court. They have not found it out.

The farmer now says, "Let us be allowed to cooperate, do away with the middle man, and reach the consumer by a shorter route with our products," and everybody raises his hands in holy horror and says, "Great God! That will be a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act"; and yet the farmer must buy nearly everything that he buys in a trust-controlled market. He buys his binder from the Harvester Trust. He sells his hogs and his beef to the Packer Trust. He sells his hides to a trust, and he buys them back from the same trust at a profit of about 10,000 per cent. He has nothing to do with fixing the price of what he sells. He has nothing to do with fixing the price of what he must buy. The trusts control him in all he buys and control him in all he sells, and he says, "Now, I should like to combine with my neighbors and cooperate and act as a corporation, following my product from the farm as near to the consumer as I can, doing away in the meantime with unnecessary machinery and unnecessary middle men." That is all this bill attempts to do; and I am not in favor of splitting hairs or drawing a technical conclusion from a very finely argued trust case that has been decided either one way or the other by the United States Supreme Court.

The Standard Oil Co.—and, by the way, when the farmer cranks up his old flier he must patronize the Standard Oil Trust, although the Standard Oil Co. has a clean bill of health from the Supreme Court. One of the famous five to four decisions says that it is a trust, and it is dissolved, and so it proceeds to go on regardless of the dissolution.

Not very long ago the governor of my State called a special session of the legislature, the principal object of it being to levy a tax upon gasoline. It was defeated, as a matter of fact, when the legislature convened, and adjourned just a few days ago, but when I saw the announcement that a special session was going to be held I thought it would be interesting to find out just how the farmers of Nebraska had been paying tribute to the Standard Oil Co. for the gasoline that they used. I thought it would be interesting to find out just what effect the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. had had upon the people of Nebraska—this great trust that the Supreme Court dissolved—and so I looked up to see how they were supplied.

I found, Mr. President, that in the main the people of Nebraska are supplied with their gasoline and other kindred products by the Standard Oil Co. of Nebraska. It originally had been a part of the great Standard Oil Co. As a matter of fact, it is yet, just as much as ever; but the records show that the Supreme Court dissolved it and set it adrift to paddle its own canoe. It had at the time of that dissolution a capital stock of $600,000. This dissolution took place on the 15th day of May, 1911; and, as I say, at the time of that dissolution it had a capital stock of $600,000. I do not know of what that consisted. I do not know how much water there was in that capital stock or whether there was any water in it. I think it is pretty safe to say, however, that it was not all cash contributed by those who held the stock, not because I know anything about that particular corporation, but I know in a general way how such corporations are organized, and how the stock is made up; but I am going to assume that that $600,000 was all paid in in cash. It was part of the Standard Oil Co. It has been dissolved since then on paper, but is still owned, as a matter of fact, in the same way, and is still doing business in the same way; and this is what has happened since 1911: There has never been another dollar of money paid in, but the capitalization has increased from $600,000 to $3,000,000. Their business is to sell oil to the farmers and to the business men of Nebraska. They are simply middlemen. Now, if they had paid no dividends on their stock in the meantime, there might have been some excuse for this wonderful increase in capital stock, but let us see what they did.

In 1912, the year after they were dissolved, they declared a dividend of $960,000. On their investment of $600,000, assuming that it was an investment, that would be a dividend of 160 per cent. That was their profit in 1912.

In 1913 they declared a dividend of $270,000 on their capital stock, which I have assumed was honestly invested. That was a dividend of 45 per cent. I am speaking of the Standard Oil Co. of Nebraska. They do nothing except buy oil and sell it. They constitute the middleman for most of the consumers of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator state how the capital was increased, by what process?

Mr. NORRIS. By a paper process.

Mr. ROBINSON. By what authority? Under the law of Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume so. I have not the details of it. Before I get through, however, I am going to give the dates and the actual increases as they took place.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator's investigation covered the question as to what relationship the capitalization of the Standard Oil Co. of Nebraska had to the actual value of its property?

Mr. NORRIS. No. I am assuming, to begin with, that it started with $600,000 capital, and that that was honest capitalization. That is an assumption which is probably erroneous, but of which the company itself certainly can not complain. In each of the years 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920 this corporation declared a dividend of $200,000, which on their capital stock originally invested would be a dividend each year of 33 1/3 per cent. In 1921 they declared a dividend of $300,000, which would be a dividend on their investment of 50 per cent.

So, while the Legislature of Nebraska were considering the proposition of levying a tax on gasoline for the consumers to pay, it would have been exceedingly interesting, it seems to me, if they had taken note, at least for publication purposes, of the profits which the oil company had been making while the farmers of Nebraska had been producing corn, hogs, cattle, and wheat at a loss. It ought to be some satisfaction to those farmers, who have toiled from 14 to 16 hours a day to produce food to help feed the people of this country and the world, and to produce it at a loss—it ought to be some satisfaction to them, I presume, to know that while they were doing it, part of their expense, which went to the Standard Oil Co., had a very beautiful result and enabled a great many men to live in luxury and happiness without toiling or spinning.

The Standard Oil Co. of Nebraska is engaged solely in marketing petroleum products within the State of Nebraska, just one State. According to the latest available information on file it has 335 stations for distribution. It purchases most, if not all, of its supply from the Standard Oil companies, namely, the Standard Oil Co. of Kansas, the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, and the Midwest Refining Co. The Midwest Refining Co. is almost, if not entirely, owned by the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana.

I said I would tell the Senate how its capital stock had been increased. In 1911, when the company was dissolved, when it ceased to be a trust, it had a capitalization of $600,000. On April 15, 1912, that capitalization was increased to $800,000 by the payment of a stock dividend, no additional money being put in.

It would be interesting to know that in 1912 it declared a cash dividend to its stockholders of 160 per cent, and, in addition to that, a stock dividend of $200,000. That is "going some," Mr. President, in a State where the farmers and the producers of foodstuffs are toiling and producing their products at a loss.

On June 20, 1913, another stock dividend was declared of 25 per cent. Let us see how much cash dividend they declared that year. They declared a cash dividend in the same year of 45 per cent. I am figuring that 45 per cent upon their original investment, on the actual money they put in, $600,000. That made the capital stock a million dollars.

On May 16, 1921, that is to say, last May, in the very year when every farmer and every stock raiser had worked all year at a loss, when everything he had produced and sold, he sold at a loss, and, as I said, part of his expenses were contributions he had to make for oil and gasoline to the Standard Oil Co., see what they did. While the farmer was toiling at a loss they increased the capital stock of that company to $3,000,000.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I am very much interested in the statements the Senator from Nebraska has been reading, and I have no doubt they are true; but this bill does not reach the subject. If you want to get a cure for a situation like that, you must have cooperative buyers' associations. This relates to cooperative selling associations. Let the farmers of Nebraska form a cooperative association for buying oil, and buy it by the whole sale, and in that way they can get a remedy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I said awhile ago, when I started in on this line of argument, that whether the Supreme Court or any other court decided that any trust was not a trust, or decided that it was a trust and dissolved it, the result was always the same; they kept right on. I am not sure but what the advertising they get in their litigation is worth the money it costs them to go through court and get a certificate either of good character or bad character. It is tails I win and heads you lose, as far as the public are concerned, and the farmer has been practically the only man who has been controlled by the trust. I want to give him an opportunity, and I would be willing now to vote to give him an opportunity, since our trust legislation has absolutely failed, to organize any kind of a trust he wants to, whether it is a selling trust or a buying trust, or both. He can not be any worse, and it is not a square deal to say to the farmer, "Everything you buy you must buy from a controlled proposition, a trust; the price of everything you sell will be fixed by another monopoly," and not give him an opportunity to get into the same kind of a game.

As I said, they increased the capitalization in 1921 to $3,000,000. That was a stock dividend of 200 per cent, and the same year they declared a cash dividend of 50 per cent on the original investment of $600,000.

That was probably the worst year the farmers had. Right in the very State where that was being done by the Standard Oil Co., which had been dissolved by the Supreme Court, and was supposed to be giving a square deal, while it was doing that kind of business, the farmer, as I said, was doing everything he did at a loss, unable to meet his notes at the bank, unable, after he had produced the crop and harvested it, to get enough out of it to pay for producing it.

I have letters from owners of land who had rented their land to tenants, where the tenant in that year, 1921, had produced a very heavy crop of corn. In the fall, after the corn had been produced, after a summer's work, the tenant saw that he was losing every day, pulled up stakes, and left the farm, and said to the landlord, "I leave it. My year's work is all there. You can have it all if you will relieve me from my obligation."

I have letters, and in one case I have the facts in the shape of testimony before the committee, showing actual cases where that occurred, and men undertook to step into the shoes of tenants, where they had to hire the corn husked, hire it shelled, pay board for the men who husked it and shelled it, hire it hauled to the market, and lost on every bushel of corn, absolutely, selling it at the market price. There was only one hope of coming out whole, and that was to have a failure of the crop. The more corn you produced, the more money you lost. You lost about a cent and a half to 2 cents on every bushel of corn if your farm was 7 miles away from the station, so that you could haul only one load to the market a day.

So in 1921 this "busted" trust, this reformed trust, paid a cash dividend of 50 per cent and a stock dividend of 200 per cent, while the people in the main who were buying their products, paying the trust prices, were producing everything at a loss.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, can the Senator state the market value of that stock at the time the stock dividend was paid?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I can not.

Mr. ROBINSON. With respect to the illustration the Senator used as to the value of certain agricultural products, I know of instances in which tenants who produced cotton, and realizing that they could not secure enough out of their interest in the crop to pay the expenses already incurred, moved away and left the crop, and the landlords were unable to gather the cotton by offering the crop for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, offering the tenant's share?

Mr. ROBINSON. Offering the entire crop in some instances. Realizing that the crop was going to waste, they offered to give anyone the crop for picking it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. After it had been matured?

Mr. ROBINSON. After it had been matured; and they were unable to get it gathered in that way. That, of course, was not often the case; but there were numerous instances where the tenant's share of the crop was not a sufficient inducement to cause another to gather it, and there were some instances where the offer of the entire crop was not a sufficient inducement to cause anyone to gather it.

Mr. NORRIS. That only illustrates that what I said in regard to corn and wheat applies to cotton. I can demonstrate, I can prove as one would prove in a lawsuit before a judge and jury, that in many instances where a large heavy crop of corn has been produced by a tenant he was unable, and the landlord was unable after the crop had been produced, to get anyone to take his place and deliver the entire crop to market and risk taking the share of the tenant in payment. In some instances where it was attempted they lost money on the operation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a further statement in that connection—

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The same is true of the entire rice crop produced in the year 1920 and harvested in the latter part of that year and the early part of 1921. That crop was produced at a cost of from $1 to $1.70 per bushel, and was sold at from 20 cents to 50 cents per bushel. It was an astonishing loss.

Mr. NORRIS. It is no answer to say that it was a result of the war and that natural conditions prevailed, because unnatural conditions have prevailed. There would have been a hardship, I admit. I do not claim that the bill will remedy everything. The condition that I have shown of the profits of a corporation that did nothing but get its rake-off as the product went from producer to consumer, the enormous, the unconscionable profit, in the very year when the agriculturist was failing, shows that that is one of the contributing factors to the farmer's failure. One was organized and was a trust, a monopoly. The other was unorganized, and it was a case of every man for himself.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator might bring out clearly the fact that a stock dividend is paid out of the profits of the company, that instead of paying money to the stockholders in the form of a cash dividend that amount of cash is turned into the capital of the company and an equal amount of stock issued to the stockholders, serving a very good purpose, so far as the company is concerned, in avoiding, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the payment of a corporation income tax.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. I think everybody understands that a stock dividend is a dividend from the profits of an institution. If the stockholders have not been paid a reasonable cash dividend in addition to the stock dividend, then the stock dividend is justifiable. In other words, if we had a corporation here amongst us that had made, let us say, a profit of 8 per cent on the business and we declared a stock dividend of 8 per cent and no cash dividend, I would not complain of that so much. But in the case referred to in 1921 there was a stock dividend of 200 per cent on the original invested capital, and in addition a cash dividend to the stockholders of 50 per cent. That is inexcusable. It is one of the things contributing to the depression in which the agriculturist or farmer finds himself. It is the difference between organization and lack of organization. It shows the power of organization organized into a monopoly. Although it can hang on its wall a clean bill of health signed by the Supreme Court of the United States, it makes no difference. It shows the power of a monopoly organization over a body of men who are unorganized, who have no organization.

Now, Mr. President, in the same State in the same year it was not only the man who produced grain that lost. I think I read once before to the Senate the letter, but it applies here so well that I think I shall relate it again, a letter from a banker in my State during the year 1921. He owned a farm 2 or 3 miles from the little town where he operated a country bank. He had some cattle. He was fattening some steers. A steer died one day. On Saturday he got word of the steer being dead and on Sunday he took the local butcher with him in his automobile and they went out and together skinned the steer. The next day the tenant on the farm brought the hide in and sold it to the local dealer, the representative of the packers there who was buying hides. He did not get enough for the hide of that steer to pay the butcher for helping him to skin it. The next day his wife bought a pair of shoes and had to pay $15 for them at the local shoe store.

Another letter came to me from a man who has a hay ranch in the Platte River Valley, one of the finest hay valleys in the United States, if not in the world. It was his business to raise hay, to bale it, and to ship to the Omaha market. I had his letter in the year 1921 wherein he related that the fall before he had put up on that ranch 1,500 tons of hay in the stack. Late in the spring, somewhere about June, 1921, he wrote me, at about the time when this corporation was making these enormous profits, that the hay was practically rotting. He said from the day that hay was put in the stack until the time he wrote the letter there had never been a moment when he could sell the hay on the market for enough money to pay for the baling, the freight, and the hauling from the field to the station. Throw away any use of the ranch for a year. Throw away all the expense of putting the hay in the stack the fall before. Throw all such items in the discard. He said the freight was just twice what it was the year before. If the freight had been the same as it was the year before there would have been several times when he could have made a little money, not even a reasonable profit, but he could have gotten out whole, and it would have paid him to bale the hay and ship it.

So it is not only one class of producers, but all classes; all classes of people who are unorganized. I am not in favor of splitting hairs about this organization. Personally, as far as my opinion would go as a lawyer, I do not think that what is contemplated by the farmers of America, what they claim they want to do in the hearings before the committee, would constitute a violation of the Sherman antitrust law. I have said so to them a good many times. But, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] said the other day, those who are interested in preventing his organizing, in preventing a cooperative movement on his part to do away with the middlemen, industriously circulate reports that this kind of organization would be in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. The farmer is scattered all over the country, timid, and does not have the fortune to back him in fighting through the courts any lawsuit, whether it is justly or unjustly begun, and naturally he is afraid to go into a cooperative organization for fear, not that he will be convicted and sent to jail, but that he will be harassed, that there will be litigation extending through all the courts and through all the years. He is naturally timid and stays out of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. He can not secure any assurance that the dissolution of his trust would prove salutary and beneficial to his business.

Mr. NORRIS. No; he can not. At least I do not know of any way that he could. Perhaps if he was organized and had power and money enough behind him, he might get that assurance by fighting on through the courts. That must be considered, it is true, when we talk about enforcing the antitrust law, particularly the criminal part of it. I was once a firm believer in it. I remember the Democratic Party made a campaign once and was successful and elected Woodrow Wilson principally on the theory that they were going to send the magnates to jail. The stump speaker during that campaign usually ate a trust or two before breakfast to keep himself in good, healthy condition. They won that fight, but they did not put anybody in jail. After thinking it all over, and after watching the attempts that have been made and the efforts that have sometimes been put forth by various officials, I am inclined to excuse them for not doing it, because it is impossible to convict $100,000,000. There are too many ways, too many instrumentalities, too many darkened alleys where they have their power and their influence that will reach into all the avenues of life and prevent a conviction.

I can not conceive of a monopoly without it is a monopoly in the interest of the public itself, like the Post Office or something of that kind. I can not conceive of a private monopoly without the power of the State even to fix the price, much as that scares us as a rule. We will have to come to it in time unless some other means is found by which these great aggregations of wealth can be controlled and handled. I am not at all afraid, if the farmers cooperate, that they will be able to fix a price or form any combination that will be injurious to the public. It must be conceded that it would be a benefit to the consuming public if we would eliminate, wherever possible, the middleman and all the machinery that lies between the producer and the consumer. It is conceded that it can not all be eliminated. It is conceded that there is too much in existence and that it is too expensive.

Cooperation on the part of the producer is one step toward bringing about that desired condition. The farmers contend that the cooperation which they expect to bring about under the provisions of the bill, if it shall be enacted into law, is for the purpose of reducing the cost to the consumer as much as it is to increase the price to the producer, and to eliminate unconscionable profits in the products. If they can succeed in an organization, for instance, of wheat farmers that would gather in everybody and hold the price of wheat at a figure that would be unconscionable and unjust and unreasonable, it would be sufficient time then for the Government to interfere. If they do that, there must be machinery provided by which it can be prevented. But I do not see how Senators or others can be come hysterical over a danger of that kind of condition confronting us when we know, as far as anything human is possible to be known in advance, that it is going to be a physical impossibility for the wheat producer, the cotton producer, the corn producer, scattered as they are over thousands and thousands of miles of territory, to form a combination, that would bring that about. If they form a cooperative organization that will eliminate the middleman, then they will benefit themselves and they will benefit everybody who consumes any of the things that they produce.

Mr. President, in addition to the case of the Standard Oil Co. we have another illustration of the alleged dissolution of a trust that did not dissolve, and it is one immediately connected with the farmer. Several years ago an action was commenced against the so-called Harvester Trust. The International Harvester Co. was alleged to be a trust. A trial was had and the court decided that it was a trust and ordered it dissolved.

It is not always the fault of the court; I do not know whether it ever is the fault of the court that trusts which are ordered dissolved avoid the result of dissolution proceedings and do the same things over again for which they have previously been condemned for doing. Here is what happened in the case of the so-called Harvester Trust. Before the action was originally commenced, when it was known that the Attorney General of the United States was about to commence an action against the International Harvester Trust to dissolve it the representatives of that trust conferred with the Attorney General of the United States with the view of agreeing upon a consent decree. They submitted to the Attorney General a form of decree to which they would be willing to agree, but the Attorney General brushed it aside, one of the good and sufficient reasons for his doing so—there may have been others—being that the dissolution did not provide for the separation of the McCormick Co. and the Deering Co. Every man who comes from a farming section of the country knows that two of the greatest agricultural implement corporations in the world are the McCormick Co. and the Deering Co. So the Attorney General said before he commenced that action, "I will consent to no decree which leaves the corporation intact with those two dominant elements in it." Hence he commenced the suit. That suit followed the tedious course of most suits. Finally, after a trial, the suit was decided in favor of the Government. The court held that the International Harvester Co. was a trust contrary to the Sherman antitrust law and ordered its dissolution.

What happened? After a great deal of bombast and advertising about the dissolution of this great trust a decree was filed which was consented to by the Government, through the Attorney General or his representatives—I do not know that the Attorney General himself had personal knowledge of it—and by the defendants, which was practically the same decree that the trust offered to have put into legal effect before the case was commenced, a decree which left intact in the trust those two dominant elements, the McCormick Co. and the Deering Co., and they are there to-day. The International Harvester Co. can say, and say truthfully, "We have been dissolved by the Supreme Court; we have been given a clean bill of health by the highest court of the land, because we have complied with that decree; we now have religion; we are now good."

Every man in the United States, however, who has had anything to do with farm implements, including every dealer, knows that that trust is just as intact and just as active and just as forceful as it ever was and controls the prices of farm implements to the same extent that it previously did. All the added expense comes out of the farmer. There is not anything which the farmer can buy in the way of a tool or an implement, from a shovel to a plow, or a self-binder harvester or a harrow or a piece of harness or a wagon but he must get it from a trust-controlled concern.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator from Nebraska think that the efforts of the court to dissolve these great trusts have been so ineffective that instead of discouraging the formation of new trusts they have really encouraged them?

Mr. NORRIS. I am inclined to think that that is correct; at least, such combinations have wonderfully multiplied. There may be other causes for their increase, but certainly the dissolution of the trusts has not been effective, or we should not have seen the tremendous multiplication of combinations that has taken place within the last few years.

Mr. SIMMONS. So far as the public is concerned, the big trusts which the court has dissolved are still doing business, and still exacting the same high tribute from the people?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. They do not seem to have been embarrassed at all by the dissolution, but seem rather to have secured safety; so naturally those who have contemplated taking advantage of combinations have been encouraged to enter into a new venture.

I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska another question. The Senator has spoken about the extent of the organized business of the country. Does the Senator offhand think of any important business in this country, outside of that of agriculture, which is not now operating under some effective method of organization or association which would be equivalent to organization?

Mr. NORRIS. There may be some such, but offhand I can not call any to mind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Since the Senator from Nebraska has been discussing this question in a most interesting way, I have myself been trying to work it out; and it seems to me that the rule in this country is that all business outside of farming is organized and operating in concert. There may be some exceptions, but the rule is the other way.

Not only that, but as soon as the product of the farmer has passed out of his hands and assumed a different shape—for instance, where the farmer's product has been converted into some other product of which the farmer's product is the raw material—it falls into the hands of men whose business is organized. That is true of the wheat grower. When his wheat is converted into flour, the finished product is then in the hands of the millers, who, I understand, are pretty thoroughly organized. There may be no trust amongst the millers, but there is an association, and through that association the price of their product is regulated.

Cotton is sold and goes into the possession of the manufacturer. The minute it goes into the hands of the cotton spinner, notwithstanding I do not think there is what may be called a trust—in fact, I am sure there is not what may be called a trust amongst the cotton spinners of the country—yet there is an association by which prices are regulated to such an extent that certainly there is no ruinous competition.

The same method applies to tobacco and, I think, to practically nearly everything which the farmer produces. While he is in possession of the raw material, it is impossible for him to organize because there are so many farmers, unless they are permitted, as this bill proposes to permit them, to form associations for the purpose of establishing sales agencies, and so on.

The point I have in mind, Mr. President, is that practically everything, as the Senator has said, which the farmer does not produce but has to buy, under our present system of doing business in this country, either through the instrumentalities of trusts or combinations or of associations or agreements, through which arrangements prices are fixed and maintained, is enhanced in price by reason of organization, while everything that he produces, as the Senator has very forcibly said, must be sold in the open market for whatever price this organized business, into whose hands his product falls, is willing to give.

The Senator is absolutely correct in the statement that as a rule—I think it is certainly the rule in most lines of agriculture under present conditions—the farmer is not realizing a sufficient profit upon his operations to make his business self-sustaining. I am familiar with the situation in my section of the country because I myself am largely interested in agriculture. I live in a section where cotton, tobacco, corn, and other farm products are grown. I think the rule is that the tenant classes, especially during the last two years, have made only the barest living—and the tenants live very close—and in many instances they have not made that. I know of my own knowledge many instances similar to those cited by the Senator where the crop, after it has been grown, would not yield more than enough to pay the expenses of harvesting it.

Mr. NORRIS. And yet when the same product reached the consumer he had to pay an exorbitant price for it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The ultimate consumer had to pay a very high price for it.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, notwithstanding the hardship to the producer, if the consumer got the benefit of his hardship, there could be something, at least, said in its favor; but the consumer does not reap any benefit, for by the time the product reaches the consumer the organized agencies which control or handle it have raised the price away beyond what is reasonable and away beyond what would be necessary if the producer secured a fair living price for the product.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to make this general statement: In the section of the country in which I live, which is a fine agricultural section, three out of ever five tenants—and I measure my words in making the statement—ended last year's operations without a dollar left after paying their mortgages contracted to secure fertilizer and the supplies which the tenant and his family consumed during the year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his contribution to the subject, which I think is right to the point and valuable.

When I was speaking about the conditions in my own State, and when I was giving illustrations of the loss of the agriculturist and the big profit of the corporation I neglected to state one other thing that it seems to me the citizens, and particularly the agriculturists and farmers of that State, ought to have taken into consideration when they were asked to levy a tax on gasoline through the instrumentality of the special session of the legislature that has just adjourned. One of the causes of the depression of agriculture has been the enormous freight rates. I gave some illustrations of that, where the freight rate alone stood between a profit and a loss. It, of course, is not the only thing. It is not a thing that is going to be touched by the enactment of this particular legislation; but in considering the farmer's condition and the psychology that must control him we ought to take into consideration everything that helps to bind him down to the earth while he is toiling to save the world, and freight rates constitute one of the causes of his difficulties.

In 1921, while this condition was going on and while the farmers were producing in that State at a loss, the Burlington Railroad—a road that scatters its network all over a good portion of the State—declared a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. While the Standard Oil Co. was getting its big profit, the railroad was getting its dividend of 10 per cent, and the farmer was producing at a loss, buying of the Standard Oil Co. and contributing to the railroad company, and while this 10 per cent cash dividend was being paid to the stockholders it was following a stock dividend of the Burlington Road of $60,000,000 that just a short time before that had been given to the stockholders of that company.

Mr. President, it may be said that other railroads were failing during that time, and that may be; but, to my mind, the people of the United States will not permanently stand for a policy that will fix freight rates at such a figure that the worthless road, badly managed, with its stock bulged out with water, or perhaps even doing business in a country where it never ought to have been built, can make a profit upon its capital stock and thus enable an efficient management to reap enormous dividends. Those two propositions can not permanently exist side by side. The people who pay the bills and contribute the money for this unholy rake-off will not always stand it; and it is just as certain as the rising and setting of the sun that a policy can not always exist under which those who toil must toil at a loss and contribute to those who neither toil nor spin, but sit in their palaces at mahogany desks and draw in the rake-off in the shape of a middleman's profit. The consumer and the producer, both of them in the same boat, both of them harassed, both of them annoyed, both of them robbed by the corporations and the profiteers that exist between them, will some time get together. Let us hope, Mr. President, that they may get together in a peaceful way, and that no revolution may follow such as has followed in past history where such policies have continued to go unrestrained and unhindered, because a suffering humanity will not always stand it.

I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of my remarks and as an appendix to them an address by Mr. Carl Vrooman, formerly Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, made at the recent Agricultural Conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SPEECH OF CARL VROOMAN, FORMER ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE, AT NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL CONFERENCE, WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 26, 1922.

Markets for the farmers' surplus crops are the only things that can save our country from an impending financial smash. Domestic credit, with which to hold crops on a falling market, is a pitfall, not a remedy. Our agricultural surpluses, for which there is neither an effective domestic demand nor a foreign cash demand, amount to only about 5 per cent of our total crops, and are worth only about a billion dollars. Yet they have depressed the value of the other 95 per cent of our crops at least four or five billion dollars. In other words, instead of being a national asset they are an appalling liability. If we could get rid of them in no other way, we could make several hundred per cent on the operation by giving them away.

Yet when we are asked to sell them on credit based upon reasonable security objection is made that we might incur a few losses. These few losses, however, if regarded as in the nature of gifts, would, as already explained, make us an enormous net profit by increasing the value of the entire remainder of the national crop.

It is further argued that owing to the fluctuations of international exchange Europe is not willing to buy our agricultural surpluses on credit. This is a palpable misstatement of fact. Practically every country in Europe is continuously asking us for credit and ever more credit. One has only to read the advertisements in the New York, Chicago, and Boston papers to see that foreign bond sales are being floated every day in all of our principal financial centers. But the awkward part about this situation is that when we loan Europe money or defer the payment of interest due Europe can and does take that money and with it purchase Argentine corn, cattle, and wheat, while our surpluses continue to rot on the farms for lack of foreign markets.

The most pressing question before our people is, Shall we rehabilitate our agriculture, commerce, and industry by selling on credit those sinister liabilities, our agricultural surpluses, or shall we continue to loan Europe money with which to rehabilitate Argentine agriculture and business?

If we continue to follow the latter plan, our international bankers will continue to make big commissions out of Europe's necessities while American economic conditions will go rapidly from bad to worse. If, on the other hand, we change a heavy liability into an asset by selling our agricultural surpluses abroad on credit, every legitimate business in the United States will gradually be enabled to work its way back to life and normalcy. To every citizen the call comes, choose ye this day whom ye will serve—Shylock or America.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I favor the House bill instead of the Senate substitute to authorize farmers to form cooperative associations. I realize that certain amendments to the House bill will be proposed and should be adopted.

As I understand the House bill, it specifically authorizes farmers to form associations of a cooperative character for marketing their products. In those associations each farmer, regardless of the amount of money he puts in, is to have one vote, and on his investment he is to be limited to dividends not exceeding 8 per cent. It is also provided that these associations may arrange to have marketing agents in common, so that the associations can cooperate with each other. A precautionary provision is put in that any attempt to create a monopoly resulting in an undue enhancement of the price of the products may be checked through the agency of the Secretary of Agriculture, who, after his findings duly had, may issue an order for that purpose, which order is subject to review by the courts.

As I understand the Senate substitute, it provides practically for the same thing, except that it adds a paragraph which is practically a warning that any attempt to create a monopoly will be subject to full prosecution under the antitrust laws of the United States.

As I view it, that warning is not only unnecessary but would be very detrimental. If we can believe testimony that has been given before the committee, the farmers have been deterred from forming these cooperative associations by the fear that they would be subjected to prosecution under the antitrust laws of the United States. I do not know to what extent that may be true, but undoubtedly farmers would be timid about going into associations of this sort if they had any reason to believe that they would subject themselves to such prosecution; and it seems to me it would nullify this act altogether to insert that threatening provision which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] advocates.

Mr. President, it never has seemed to be reasonable that those engaged in agriculture and in the production of farm products should have been included under the antitrust laws of the United States. We all remember what caused the antitrust law to be passed originally, some 30 years ago. There was not any complaint that any agriculturists had combined to extort unreasonable prices or to restrain trade. There was no complaint of that sort, because it is practically impossible for the millions of people engaged in agriculture so to unite as to create a trust or to control production or to restrain trade. The antitrust laws of the United States were passed to cure a well-defined evil. The custom had grown up of combining the manufacturing and mercantile establishments of the United States into great combinations. They had been able, as we know, in many cases not only to destroy competition in certain lines and to monopolize the market—monopolize it, often, under the protection of an excessive tariff, for which our Republican friends were responsible—but they had been able, by uniting these concerns, to wipe out independent manufacturing enterprises. Thus we saw growing up in the manufacturing and business world great concerns called trusts, exercising almost sovereign powers, and exacting whatever prices they pleased for their products, the result of which was the growth of some of the enormous fortunes of the United States.

It was to cure that evil that the antitrust law was passed and later amended. It was not intended to apply to agriculture, and it has always seemed to me a preposterous claim that it should apply to agriculture, and I should be glad to vote for an amendment which would absolutely withdraw agriculture from the jurisdiction of the antitrust laws of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Agriculture at the present time is prostrate. The ruin in agriculture in the West and in the South is widespread, and it is a concern, it seems to me, of the Congress of the United States, not only because there are millions of people involved in this bankruptcy, but it is a concern of the Congress of the United States because the prosperity of the agricultural classes is of tremendous importance to the other classes of the United States—of tremendous importance to the other classes because these millions of people interested in agriculture are the ones who must buy the manufactured products of the United States. The farmers are the ones who must make business good in the factories and upon the railroads of the United States, and there is no single class of interest in the United States which should receive the fostering care of Congress to the same extent that agriculture should because of its relation to other interests.

I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The question I had in mind when I rose a few moments ago was this: The senior Senator from Nebraska has heard the interesting remarks of his colleague, I presume? Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have.

Mr. CUMMINS. I also assume he believes, as we all believe, that the farmer is paying an undue price for everything he buys on account of the combinations and trusts from which he must buy?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is true to a large extent.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, if that is true, why should not the farmer be permitted to enter into a combination or combinations to unduly increase the price of his product?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a very pertinent question, and I do not know why, if the country generally is playing at that game, the farmer should not be permitted also to play at it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But I take the position, Mr. President, that it is not possible, by reason of the very nature of the farmer's business and because of the millions of men engaged in the industry, for the farmer to combine to anything like the same extent the manufacturer or mercantile interests can combine, for the purpose of affecting prices.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with that. I do not believe it is possible; but why forbid it? When he must buy from everybody at an unreasonable price, why should he not be permitted to combine, if possible, and sell at an unreasonable price?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He certainly should not be prohibited from making any cooperative effort that is possible to secure better prices for the things which he must sell.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; yet the very bill to which the Senator has just said he gave his approval provides that he shall not combine in order to sell at an unreasonable price. That is my objection to section 2 of this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have endeavored to make it clear that I would be willing to go further than this bill goes; but this is the bill before us. I know it is not possible to put through the Senate or to put through Congress a bill absolutely exempting the farmer from any restrictions whatever. We are not to be allowed to vote on or to put through Congress a bill specifically authorizing farmers to form trusts, and I presume that would be the only thing that could be done.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it entirely possible to pass through Congress a bill exempting farmers from the operation of the antitrust law, which is so illy understood, and which has been so inefficiently administered, except as to a few products which are capable of being monopolized. We all know that cotton can not be monopolized, that wheat can not be monopolized, that corn or hogs or cattle, things that are grown in very large territories of the United States, can not be monopolized. Why not do the thing we want to do, to relieve the growers of those products from the operation of the antitrust law?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would be entirely willing to vote for such a bill. I am in exact accord with what the Senator from Iowa has stated, and being the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, if he will lead the way, I will support such a measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should have been very glad to have led the way if this bill had been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I think that really was the proper committee for the consideration of the bill; but it was referred elsewhere. I am expressing my own view of what ought to be done.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is also expressing mine, although, Mr. President, I doubt whether even then in the very nature of the farmer's business it would be possible for him in his cooperative agencies or cooperative associations, even permitting those associations to work together, to bring about any very great improvement in the marketing of his products. I believe something could be done, but in the very nature of the farmer's business, with the millions of men engaged in it, it is not possible to make such combinations very effective.

Mr. President, I have said that the farmer never should have been included in the antitrust bills of the United States, the bills to prohibit the undue restraint of trade. The farmer is not in trade. His goods are marketed upon exactly the opposite theory from the marketing of the goods of men who are in trade.

A man with a manufacturing institution produces his product with a very accurate knowledge of what it costs to purchase his raw material and to employ his labor, and he puts his product upon the market at a price which he himself fixes. The farmer, on the other hand, is compelled, when his product is ready for market, to sell it on the market at the price which the buyers on that market fix. If it is wheat he is selling, he sells it at the price which the elevator in the town nearest to him offers for that wheat, and that elevator takes the price from the grain center nearest by, and that center takes it, perhaps, from the New York market, and that, perhaps, from the London market.

So when the farmer markets his goods he is not marketing them at the price he puts upon them. The price at which he markets them has no relation whatever to the cost of production. He has labored nearly a year to produce his crop, and when it is produced he is compelled, through his necessities, almost immediately to throw it upon the market and take whatever price is offered to him.

My judgment is that this country should in some way develop a system of agricultural credit, so that the farmer may be relieved from that necessity of throwing his crop upon the market immediately he has finished its production after months and months of labor. There ought to be some system of personal credit by which he could hold that crop for a few months and market it gradually, because the very necessities of the agricultural classes, which compel them to throw all their crops upon the market simultaneously and almost instantly, result inevitably in an undue depression of the market.

Suppose the manufacturing institutions of the United States were working upon the same theory. What sort of prices could they procure? Suppose they had to spend months of the year, or perhaps the whole year, in preparing their manufactured products for market, and then throw them upon the market and accept whatever prices were bid for them? Ruin would inevitably face the manufacturing institutions. As it is now, the manufacturing institutions are buying their raw material month by month, they are employing their labor month by month, and they are marketing their goods month by month all through the year, and the result is they are reasonably in a position where they can get living prices for what they have to sell.

Not only that, but when there is a check in the demand for the products which they are making they can reduce the production. They can do as they are doing in this country at the present time, discharge their men, cut down their forces, and run their factories upon what is called 25 or 30 per cent capacity, and merely feed out to the market what it will consume at their prices.

The farmer can not do that. The production of agricultural products is practically the same year by year. There is little variation, except such as is caused by the weather. The production of wheat does not vary to a large per cent, nor of cotton, nor of corn, except as the production is made to vary by the weather. The farmer has to produce. His only hope is to make his whole farm productive, and if he is a wheat raiser he starts in in the fall preparing his ground for the seed, he plants his winter crop in the fall, and he does not market it until the following July. He is not in a position to do as a manufacturer does. He can not control his markets and he can not make his own prices, and he never ought to have been made subject to the provisions of the antitrust law. He had not brought about in any degree the evil from which the country had suffered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is compelled to go the limit of production.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As the Senator from Mississippi says, he is bound by the very nature of his business to go to the very limit of production upon the ground which he has, and the agriculturist has become a victim in this country of every fluctuation in business or credit which has cut off his markets, or impaired his markets, as they are greatly impaired at the present time.

The difficulties in Europe, the impaired purchasing power of Europe, the destroyed credit of Europe, and the absence of a commercial credit for dealing with Europe, have put the farmers of the United States in a position where they have been compelled, from their very necessities, to throw their crops upon the American market almost as soon as they were harvested and to take for them whatever is offered. The result is that in the West and in the South, because of prices being cut in two, we have widespread bankruptcy at the present time. Millions of producers in the West and in the South have worked a year, yes, they have worked practically two years, and the crops they have raised they have had to sell at prices which have not paid them for the cost of production, and there are millions of farmers in the country to-day who not only are unable to sell their products for enough to pay for the cost of production but they are unable to pay their taxes and unable to pay the interest on their mortgages.

They are facing foreclosures of the mortgages on their farms. There are whole counties in the western part of the United States that are going to be financially embarrassed because of the failure and inability of the farmers to pay their taxes, and I suppose that condition is the same in the South.

Mr. President, I think more attention must inevitably be given by Congress to the interests of the agricultural classes of the United States. Not only this bill, which to my mind does not go far enough, but Congress must pass other bills. The time has arrived when the Government of the United States must provide some system of credit which will do away with the necessity of the farmers of the country throwing their products upon the market the instant they are harvested. It is not to the interest of the people to have the agriculturists of the country forced to throw their products into the hands of the middleman as soon as they are produced.

It does not benefit the consumer to any extent, because the middleman who carries these crops and purchases them at these cut-throat prices gets a materially higher price when the time comes for the consumers to buy them. I think it should be the care of Congress not only to relieve the farmers of this country from any possible fear that they are liable to be prosecuted if they form cooperative associations, but we ought to have affirmative legislative provision for the formation of these cooperative associations, and we ought to have affirmative legislative provision under which we can build up a system of credit to help agriculture in carrying its crops a reasonable length of time, and marketing them in a gradual way, as the producers of other articles manufacture and market their products.

I am for this bill in the strongest form in which it can be passed, to exempt the farmers from any fear of antitrust laws, and I am for any other legislation which can be devised to make farming once more a profitable business. Until it does become profitable there will be a depression in this country which will exist for an indefinite period. You can not start up the mills and factories in the East until the farmer is able to buy, and as long as he is wearing his old clothes, and as long as he is forced to do without, there will be depression in the East.

I was in Cleveland the other day and was told that there were 100,000 men in that city alone out of work. In my opinion the number of idle men in the country, instead of being overestimated, is underestimated at the present time. Instead of our being upon the point of reviving business in the United States, I think we are in the grip of a depression which is going to last a good while yet.

In my opinion, another thing that the Congress ought to do, and the administration ought to take the lead in doing it, is to do something to revive international commerce. The United States is the greatest producing Nation in the world. We have more surpluses to sell than any other country in the world. We know by experience that our manufacturing institutions have been so increased in their productive capacity that we can manufacture and sell two or three thousand million dollars worth of manufactured products more than the American people can consume. We know we can raise an indefinite amount of grain, we can raise a great deal more wheat and corn and other grain than the American people can consume, we can raise a great many more cattle, a great many more hogs, two or three times as much cotton, a great deal more tobacco, and produce two or three times as much copper than the American people can consume.

Our surpluses are perfectly prodigious, and the trouble at the present time is that we are not able to sell our surpluses. The result is that factories are working at 80 per cent capacity. Farmers are in distress because they are unable to sell their products at anything like a fair price. The copper mines in the West are closed and have been closed for over a year. Six or seven million bales of cotton in the South are stored in warehouses, where it is mortgaged for more than it can be sold for. We have a business depression which is one of the worst which has ever gripped the country, and it is largely because we are not able to sell our surplus products to the rest of the world.

My idea of the way to sell these surplus products to the rest of the world I have expressed in my bill for a bank of nations. I am endeavoring from time to time to elucidate that plan. I believe we have to do in international commerce exactly what every nation in the world has done in its domestic commerce, establish a credit upon which the goods can be sold. We are trying to sell goods to the rest of the world now for cash. Suppose we tried to do business in the United States for cash. There would be an enormous shrinkage of business, even below what it is now, because the experience of civilization has shown, and our experience in the United States has demonstrated, that 95 per cent of our business is conducted on a credit basis.

If we attempted to go to a cash basis, to pay money at the time of transaction, our business would shrink to very small proportions; and yet that is what we are trying to do in international commerce to-day. We are demanding cash for cotton. When we ship it to Europe we are demanding cash in New York. When we ship packing-house products to Europe cash is demanded for them, or if they are shipped over there they are shipped to some personal representative who does not deliver them until they are paid for. When wheat is exported it is sold for cash in advance.

There is no reason on earth why a responsible concern in Europe should not be put in the position where it can buy the products of the United States upon the basis of a commercial credit. There is no reason on earth why a cotton mill in Germany should not have the same credit, the same length of time to pay for its cotton, that a cotton mill in New England has.

The cotton mill is manufacturing wealth every day. The cotton mill has credit in Germany, and there is no reason why that cotton mill should be required to pay cash in advance in New York before it gets its cotton. The German Government may be bankrupt, but the producers of Germany are not bankrupt and they ought to be given, under some form of international cooperation, a basis of credit, so they can buy the products of the United States upon that commercial basis of credit. The cotton mill in Germany, when it buys cotton in the United States, should have three or four months to pay for it. As its goods are manufactured into its finished product it will have the money with which to pay for that cotton when the three or four months have expired. Such a credit will greatly increase its ability to buy cotton. So with other products which we export.

I think it is high time for the United States to arouse itself to the fact that as the greatest exporting nation in the world, as the greatest surplus-producing nation in the world, as the nation which has the greatest and the most valuable raw materials in the world, it is interested in establishing in the international field what every nation has established in the domestic field—a system of banking and currency—which is the only thing that can give credit for commercial transactions. I am not going to discuss my bank of nations bill, but that is what I have in mind and that is a matter to which I think the Congress of the United States should some day give pretty serious attention.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, during the able speech of the Senator from Nebraska he said that the prosperity of all the country could not return until the purchasing power of the farmer has been restored. I have an article from the Southwestern Stockman Journal, a leading agricultural paper of the Southwest, printed in Arizona. It is, in part, as follows:

THE AGRICULTURAL BLOC.

[From the Southwestern Stockman Farmer.]

Scarcely do we pick up a paper or a magazine nowadays that we do not find some place therein an attack, more or less covert, against what is termed "the agricultural bloc."

Most of our readers, if not all of them, know the "agricultural bloc" is a bipartisan organization of about an equal number of Democrats and Republicans in Congress who have combined to support a program of legislation designed to give the farmers a square deal.

This bloc has the support of the American Farm Bureau and kindred organizations. Time after time it has intervened in party matters and has been especially useful in defeating special-interest legislation in transportation, tax, and tariff bills before the present Congress. Those who expected tax burdens to be shifted to the consumer; those who expected vast profits through prohibitive tariffs; those who made promises of special privileges in return for political support in the last election and are now unable to deliver—all these and more are jealous that the producers should now arise in indignant wrath and determined purpose that the farmers of the Nation shall no longer be made to absorb the losses attendant upon the return of normalcy.

Seven billions of dollars in round figures measures the farmers' loss in 1920 crop values alone. His land values have slumped, but he knows that these will return.

This stupendous loss at a time when the volume of loan money was greater and interest charges heavier than at any time in the history of America marks a page of gross inefficiency and inequality in the processes of our national life.

Did the great financial concerns in America book losses while the farmer was relieved of seven billions of dollars of wealth? On the contrary, it was a year of unexampled prosperity for them.

 Did the steel industry write off billions in losses? Did not the great railroad organizations find Congress willing to pass legislation that protected them from gigantic losses?

The bare and brazen facts stand out that the farmer has had to take the brunt of things in these turbulent times. His buying power reduced by the ruthless decree of events has reacted against the manufacturer whose products he has had to buy sparingly. His limited purchasing power has curtailed railroad traffic and high rates have been a brake on the wheels of commerce. His enforced depletion of purse has kept him from building as well as from buying and has reflected in less employment of labor in the factory and plant as well as in the field.

Combinations of capital were able in 1919 and 1920 to "bloc" Congress for much legislation, but exercised greater power in administrative circles. Banking and investment interests preferred those lines of credit that belonged to groups which had power and knew how to use it. Agencies to facilitate farm credits and loans, the culmination of two decades of effort, were attacked and dragged wearily through the courts. Multiplied millions of dollars went into frozen credits to avoid taxation. For a time the cry of distress that went up from agricultural sections was like the cry in the wilderness. In the wild scramble business men overlooked the historic analogy—that agricultural prosperity and business prosperity and agricultural depression and business depression have always gone together in pairs.

And so to-day scarcely does a mail come to our desk that does not have the complaint of the politician that the "bloc" endangers party solidarity; or that disaster will overtake us if the farmers demand a curtailment of charges by middlemen and agencies of exchange.

Real prosperity will not return until the purchasing power of the farmer returns. The purchasing power of the farmer will return when his product can pay transportation charges and marketing charges and leave him enough to supply the humble wants of his family. In its final analysis the problem is a simple one. The reasons for the "agricultural bloc" are sound and we hope it will have all the power it needs until the abuses that called it into existence have been abolished.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the present situation or condition of agriculture, I think, must command the interest of every good citizen. The depression can not well be exaggerated. However, I hope that in describing the depression and the hardships which the farmers of the country are now suffering, we will not forget that it has not always been so. I hope that the effect of the discussion will not be to discourage the people of the country who are engaged in this occupation.

During my life in Iowa, running now over 40 years, I have seen Iowa farms increase in value from $15 per acre to $500 per acre. There must be some reason for that. Agriculture certainly has not always been unprosperous, for if it had been this advance in the value of the real property upon which they operate could not have occurred. I think the depression is temporary, but I believe it to be our duty to do everything in our power to relieve it. I am afraid that in the passing of the pending measure we are keeping the promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope. I think there are defects in both these bills, the House bill and the Senate committee bill, which will well-nigh destroy any value which the farmers of the country might hope to realize from either of them.

I think combinations of farmers may be entered into for three general purposes: First, in order to lessen the cost of production. There are many ways in which combinations may be formed that will lessen the cost of production of whatever commodity the farmer may be engaged in producing. I think very worthy combinations may be entered into which will lessen the cost of marketing; that is, bringing the commodity to the place at which it is sold; and there certainly can be no objection whatever to any combination of that kind. There is not the slightest reason to believe that any combination to engage in lessening the cost of marketing—that is, in eliminating the middleman—could be found antagonistic to or in conflict with the antitrust law.

Combinations may also be formed, and, I think, ought to be permitted, having for their object the increase in the market price of the commodity. While that may be objectionable in some limited fields, recognizing, as I do, that the market price of farm products is generally below the cost of production, I do not object to combinations that have for their specific purpose the increase in the market value, so that the commodities may be sold at a fair and reasonable profit to those who produce them.

However, we find in section 2 of the House bill what I fear will neutralize the effects which are hoped for it and may be the most effective weapon against the farmer that can be found in the law, much more effective than is found in the antitrust law itself.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have a good deal of sympathy with what the Senator from Iowa is saying. I am willing to exempt farmers from the operation of the antitrust law, but this bill has been for three years before Congress and there seems to be great difficulty to getting even this moderate bill through. Has the Senator from Iowa any assurance that if we provided an absolute exemption of farmers from the antitrust law the bill would pass the Senate and the other House?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt whatever that the House bill will pass the Senate, and I do not intend to offer any amendment to it. I have no hope that it can be amended. I prefer the House bill to the Senate committee substitute; but I simply want my views to be on record, so that in the future if the price-fixing arrangement which is contained in section 2 of the bill shall turn out to be very disastrous to the farmers of the country it may be known that I, at least, was not deceived or deluded at the time the bill was passed. Section 2 of the House bill provides:

That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall have reason to believe that any such association monopolizes or restrains trade to such an extent that the price of any agricultural product is unduly enhanced by reason thereof, he shall serve upon such association a complaint.

And so forth. If he finds, first, that there is a monopoly or that there is a restraint of trade, he must then inquire whether that monopoly or that restraint of trade has resulted in unduly enhancing the price of the particular commodity which may be involved in the investigation.

I do not believe that Congress can confer such authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture. As I understand the Constitution under which we are passing laws, when we attempt to invest an administrative officer with an authority of that kind we must give to him the rule or the guide which is to govern him in reaching his conclusion, whatever that conclusion may be. What is unduly enhancing the price of a given commodity? What is the test of a fair and reasonable price of a commodity which is simply the subject of general exchange in private enterprise and private industry? There is not a Senator here who can tell his fellow Senators what he would do under the authority that is bestowed upon the Secretary of Agriculture in this section. There is no guide; there is no standard.

I asked the other day, and I ask now, suppose that last year, as was the case, the farmer was particularly unfortunate in the prices he received for his products, that he made no profit whatever in his enterprise; but this year, let us assume that the supply is more limited, and that it is possible to increase the price; can the price be so increased that the farmer may recoup his losses of last year or secure the profits that he ought to have made last year? Who can answer that question? Is the Secretary of Agriculture at liberty to compare the profits which the farmer is making or ought to make with the profits that other enterprises are making or ought to make?

Is the Secretary of Agriculture at liberty to compare the price of a given commodity with the wages which men receive who are to consume that commodity? Is he to measure the price that prevails in the market with the purchasing power of other commodities or of other services? We are doing a vain and a futile thing from the legal standpoint in attempting to invest the Secretary of Agriculture with the authority to declare what is or what is not an undue price for an agricultural commodity.

But, further, how is the Secretary of Agriculture to determine whether the increase in price which may have occurred is due to the association of farmers or whether it is due to natural causes? The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has just pointed out that the great need of the farmers of this country—and I agree with him—is a foreign market; some place in which to sell or some persons to whom may be sold our surplus products. The state of the world changes year by year. In some years the farmer can sell in foreign markets a very large surplus, and in other years he can sell but a small surplus; in some years the harvests in Europe and in South America are scant and meager, while in other years they are abundant and plentiful. All these considerations must have their effect upon the market price of the products which the farmer supplies to the same market.

If any human being can tell me how a Secretary of Agriculture can survey the outside world and also our own country and specifically determine whether a given combination or association of farmers has resulted in bringing about an undue price, even though he may find the price itself to be undue, he will have accomplished something that to me, with my limited capacity, is utterly impossible. I am afraid of giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to say that a price that may be obtained at any given time is an undue price, for, while I think that if the law were challenged in the proper way it would be found to be without authority, yet the Secretary of Agriculture will do that thing. If a labor union representing a vast number of men who consume the products of agriculture appears before the Secretary and says "These prices are too high, and they have been made too high by the combination which is specified"—

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the point which he has been discussing, will he yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that the Senator is attacking the bill upon the ground that there is no rule established in the bill to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain what is an undue enhancement of prices. The Senator has further contended that it would be impracticable for the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain what would be an undue enhancement; but leaving out the question of the difficulty of administering the law, I want to ask the Senator if the legal difficulty which he raises—and I think there is a great deal of force in what the Senator says with reference to that—could not be cured simply by providing that the Secretary shall act if he shall find that the price has been enhanced beyond the point of a reasonable profit? Would not that establish a rule which would relieve the provision of the objection which the Senator makes to its legality? I am not, of course, discussing the practicability of administering it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That might make it easier for the Secretary of Agriculture to discharge his duty.

Mr. SIMMONS. But would it not furnish a rule under the law?

Mr. CUMMINS. But that has very great difficulties attending it also. A reasonable profit to whom? A farmer in North Dakota may raise wheat for 75 cents a bushel—I do not know that he can, but he may—on land worth $50 an acre. A farmer in my State may find that it will cost him a dollar a bushel to raise wheat upon land worth $200 an acre. To whom, then, would the Secretary of Agriculture look in determining whether the producer was selling at a fair and reasonable profit? All that he could do in the world would be to ascertain, if possible, the average of what all the wheat in the United States cost, and then the value of all the land upon which it was grown, and then, taking due account of the actual cost of producing the wheat, ascertain whether, as a whole, wheat was being sold at a profit or at a loss.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. This requirement that the Secretary of Agriculture must find that the monopolization or restraint has unduly enhanced prices is not a requirement that the Secretary has to find whether every price in the country, or a particular price, is unreasonable. It is a condition precedent to his proceeding against a supposed or a charged monopoly or restraint of trade; and if he can not find that the monopoly or the restraint of trade has unduly enhanced prices, of course he will not bring any suit. He does not have to find what is a reasonable price. If the charge of monopoly is so flimsy that he can not find that the price has been unduly enhanced by the monopoly, he simply does not bring any suit or make an order. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that may be an answer to the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], but it is not an answer to mine. It becomes the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon an application, to ascertain whether the price has been unduly enhanced. He will undertake to do that, I say, without any guide and without any rule. We do not supply him with the very least suggestion of the manner in which he should proceed in ascertaining whether the price had been unduly enhanced.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. If, instead of finding whether there had been any undue enhancement of prices, the Secretary were charged with finding whether there was an undue restraint of trade, I should like to know from the Senator what facts, either laid down in statute law or in common law or in any decision of the Supreme Court, the Secretary of Agriculture would consider in determining that question?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Wisconsin asked me that question a day or two ago—

Mr. LENROOT. I did.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I do not know that I can answer it more satisfactorily than I did then. There is no such thing as undue restraint of trade. That is a description which the Supreme Court has given to restraint of trade. If it is not undue restraint of trade, it is not restraint of trade at all. For 250 years the courts have been laying down rules with regard to what constitutes restraint of trade, and we have all the information, all the guides, and all the standards which the courts during all these years have laid down upon this subject in order to ascertain what is a restraint of trade that is contrary originally to the policy of the common law, and now contrary to the statute which we know as the antitrust law. That constitutes the difference between ascertaining what is restraint of trade and what is an undue price.

Mr. LENROOT. In view of all that the Senator has said, and the rules that he says have been laid down as to what constitutes undue restraint of trade, does the Senator think there is anything that will enable any person to know whether he has approached the realm of undue restraint of trade because of any rule laid down by the courts of this country?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do, Mr. President. I think the decisions of the courts are very illuminating on this subject, although they are not in harmony. I quite agree that one may reach differing conclusions from the examination of the law which has been established now for these many years; but, nevertheless, it is a law which is recognized by the whole civilized world, and I need but point out the distinction. The Supreme Court has sustained the anti-trust law, and has convicted men guilty of restraint of trade. It has also held, however, that when Congress attempted to say that a man should be punished if he sold any commodity at an unreasonable profit or at an unreasonable price, such a law was unconstitutional and without authority, because it did not furnish to the citizen any guide that would enable him to determine at a given time whether he was committing a lawful or an unlawful act. There is that difference between restraint of trade and undue enhancement of price.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true so far as the decision is concerned; but, as a matter of practical fact and experience, does the Senator think that a citizen of the United States, under the rule laid down in the Standard Oil case of undue restraint, and the rule of reasoning to be applied, has any rule or facts by which he can determine what is an undue restraint of trade any more than what is an exorbitant price?

Mr. CUMMINS. I must again answer that I think there is some more light, unsatisfactory as it may be; but there is no question about the attitude of the courts toward undue price or unreasonable price. It is admitted that it will not guide the citizen. The citizen must have something more than that to warn him before he can be convicted of a crime. Now, it is said that the Secretary of Agriculture does not need any more than that; that he can arrive at a result that will be lawful, and upon which he may proceed to the prosecution of a given combination or association, without any further light or information than merely the declaration that one who is guilty of unduly enhancing a price in a market place must desist, and if it be a corporation must be dissolved. If I were dealing with the subject, I should not know how to arrive at that result.

I do not believe that the Secretary of Agriculture will know; but he will act, because he is required to act, and he will find either that the advance in price, if there has been an advance, is an undue advance, or that it is a reasonable advance; and when he acts the whole agricultural world will be governed by his action, and even though the statute gives him no authority to fix a price for the future, his decision will as inevitably control the price for the future as the seasons will go on, and you will find—and that is the whole point of the observations I am making—that the farmer will be the one producer in this country whose price is fixed for him by an administrative officer.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. The Standard Oil Co. can sell at any price it pleases. The Steel Corporation can sell at any price it pleases. The harvester company can sell at any price it pleases. There will be no one to control or to regulate them or to suggest that the price at which they are selling their products is an undue price; but the farmer will have had it said to him that a certain price is greater than it should be, and the association which brought about that enhancement is to desist from its efforts and be dissolved. Of course another corporation or another association can be substituted for the one condemned, and it will know that it can approach but not reach the price which has been fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

I have the very highest regard for the present Secretary of Agriculture. I have known him many years. He is a high-minded, broad-minded, just, and honorable man; and I want it to be understood that I am not speaking of any particular Secretary of Agriculture. If I were to trust anybody in the world to fix a price, it would be the present Secretary of Agriculture, but he will not always be the Secretary of Agriculture, and I would not be willing to sacrifice a principle anyhow, no matter how much confidence I have in the particular man who is to exercise the authority which is to be reposed by the statute.

I predict that the farmer will find in this bill the authority he desires for organization, but he will also find in the bill an obstacle that will prevent him from ever reaching the prosperity to which I think he is entitled. I think he is entitled to enter into his associations for the purpose of protecting himself not only in production but in marketing his products, and I do not believe that any administrative officer of the Government ought to be authorized to sit in judgment upon him. If we are to have anybody sit in judgment upon him it ought to be a court, duly organized and controlled and governed by the laws which we enact and those which have been handed down to the courts throughout the long development and progress of our civilization.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I suggested to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], when he was on the floor the other day, that I would like his views—and I make the same suggestion to the Senator from Iowa—I would like to have his views as to the wisdom and the propriety of selecting an administrative officer or an executive officer, such as the Secretary of Agriculture, to pass upon questions which this bill commits to him, and I suggested to the Senator from Montana that if we commit to the Secretary of Agriculture the question of determining what is a fair price for grain, or for the products embraced within this bill, then the next step will be to commit to the Secretary of Commerce the same power with respect to the products of the manufacturing plants of the United States, and then we will commit to the Secretary of Labor the power to determine whether or not there is any infraction of the law by any of the activities or organizations that come properly within what might be denominated the labor supervisory power of the Government; and we will have the bankers and the great capitalists appealing to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of determining whether they have violated the Sherman antitrust law or some other penal statute of the United States; so that in the end we will transfer from the courts to these executive officers of the Government judicial or quasi judicial powers, and it will be left to them to determine whether the laws have been violated or not. I ask the Senator whether he regards such a precedent as this bill seems to establish as wise and proper?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, one can not predict with any certainty what will happen in the future. We will have to deal with these situations as they arise. I am opposed to price fixing, directly or indirectly, in private enterprise. Whenever we declare any production a public utility and assume to control, regulate, and limit it, as we do with regard to public utilities, then it necessarily follows that there must be a price-fixing tribunal; but until we do that I am reluctant to pass to price fixing, either directly or indirectly, as to agriculture.

Mark you, I am not opposing combinations among farmers. If I had my way about it, I would repeal the antitrust laws so far as agricultural products are concerned, with a few exceptions to that repeal, and the Senator from Montana pointed out in a general way in his very instructive and comprehensive speech what those exceptions should be. I am not a devotee of the antitrust law. I am not a worshiper at that shrine. I said yesterday that I thought the antitrust law was the most ineffective statute upon a great subject ever enacted by the Congress, and I repeat that. I recognize that there must be some control, but it will never be effective along the lines of the antitrust law.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] pointed out this morning what followed the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. The courts have done all they could. I am not criticizing the courts. I think they have faithfully done their duty. You can not expect harmony upon a subject of this sort. The business of the world, the commerce of the world, is too varied to attempt to apply any such general rule to it with any success whatsoever, and so we find the series of Standard Oil companies which were organized and created under the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit exercising practically the same power that was exercised originally by the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey.

I think our history has demonstrated that we must find some other way to control these great corporations which are able to fix prices. I myself am a believer in competition. I want to preserve competition in our general industry just so long as we can preserve it. I am not sure we are not drifting to the community idea pretty rapidly. I am not sure that the socialistic tendency will not finally find its expression in general control of everything by the Government; but I am fighting against it. I am doing what I can to prevent or to check that tendency, and that is one of the reasons I would not, if I could help it, invest a Government officer with authority to fix a price or declare that a given price was an undue price for any commodity of which the Government has not taken complete control, as it has of all the railroads and other utilities of that sort.

If I thought I could wield any influence at all, I would move to strike out section 2 of this bill. I would rather allow the bill to stand as a substantial repeal of the antitrust law with regard to agricultural products than take this further step that is proposed in section 2; but I know that an amendment of that kind is futile. I know I can not rewrite this bill at this time, and so I have said what I have said simply that I may at least have a clear conscience so far as speech is concerned. My vote may seem to be inconsistent with what I have said, but I must choose between these two alternatives, and I say frankly that I prefer the House text, with all its infirmities, to the Senate substitute for just one reason, and that is that the Senate substitute leaves intact the attempt to create a monopoly, which I think destroys its value entirely.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the provisions found in section 6 of what is known as the Clayton Act, does the Senator think there is any necessity of legislation, assuming that we desire that the farmers shall have full opportunity to associate themselves for the purpose of marketing and processing their products? The Senator will recall the language.

Mr. CUMMINS. I remember it well.

Mr. KING. It reads:

Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations instituted for the purposes of mutual help and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade under the antitrust laws.

This would seem to legalize organizations upon the part of farmers, such as those referred to by the Senator, for the purpose of marketing, processing, handling, and selling their products.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not wholly; but I concur in the opinion expressed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the opinion expressed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], and the opinion expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], in fact with the opinions of all Senators who have discussed this subject, that even without the section in the Clayton antitrust law, just read by the Senator from Utah, the antitrust law itself does not prohibit any organization or association which the farmers desire now to bring together, but I nevertheless understand that they are in fear of that law, and I am willing to make my own understanding of the matter perfectly specific by enacting it into a statute.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I remind the Senator, before he takes his seat, of the further provision of section 2 to which the Senator objects. The Senator raises the point that it would be unwise to place in the hands of the head of a department this matter of determining what is an unreasonable advance in price, and so forth, and suggests that that question ought to be left open to the courts, as I gather.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not say quite that; I said I was willing to strike the section out entirely.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that position, but I understood the Senator to say that the question of determining what is a reasonable or unreasonable price, and other matters which might arise, should not be sent to an agent of the Government, the head of a department, but were questions rather for courts. I call attention to the provision of section 2:

On the request of such association, or if such association fails or neglects for 30 days to obey such order—

That is, the order by the Secretary of Agriculture—

the Secretary of Agriculture shall file in the district court in the judicial district in which such association has its principal place of business a certified copy of the order and of all the records in the proceeding, together with a petition asking that the order be enforced, and shall give notice to the Attorney General and to said association of such filing. Such district court shall thereupon have jurisdiction.

So eventually the question would come to the courts, rather than be left arbitrarily to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CUMMINS. It might go to a court, but even if it were to go to a court my objection would be just as valid and emphatic. The Supreme Court has said that you can not commit to a court the enforcement of a law which simply declares that to charge an unreasonable price is a crime. The court can not administer a law of that kind. Congress must make the law and give the court something to administer. So my objection to the court exercising the power is of the same character as my objection to an administrative officer exercising the power.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, touching the matter concerning which the Senator from Florida just now inquired of the Senator from Iowa, the matter of the review in the courts, I invite attention to the fact that the provision contemplates what might be regarded as a trial de novo in the court; that is to say, the Secretary makes his order, having found that the monopolization or undue restraint of trade, causing an increase in the price or an undue enhancement of price, has occurred. That order is to be enforced through the court, but when the Secretary, through the Attorney General, appeals to the court, that court has power to make a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order, and "the facts found by the Secretary of Agriculture and recited or set forth in said order shall be prima facie evidence of such facts, but either party may adduce additional evidence."

So the court will proceed to try the question as to whether there has been an undue enhancement of price, or exactly the question to which the Senator has referred. If we can repose such power in an administrative officer to determine prices or to determine whether there is an enhancement of price, I think, upon all acknowledged rules, that the delegation of power can not be confided to a court; that it is not a judicial question at all for determination by a court, but a purely administrative question.

If there is nothing else to be said on the general bill, I desire to propose some amendments to the House bill before the matter is voted on. I send to the desk the following amendment to the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana proposes the following amendment to the House text, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. After line 8, page 2, insert the following:

3. That any person engaged in the same industry shall be admitted to membership in the association on equal terms with all others.

4. That the association shall not deal in the products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than such as are handled by it for members.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This amendment is offered by me in a very sincere desire to be helpful in perfecting the bill. The first paragraph of the amendment proposes—

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum? I think we ought to have one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield for that purpose?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Ransdell
Ball	Gerry	Lodge	Robinson
Borah	Glass	McCumber	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gooding	McKinley	Shortridge

Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Kenyon	Phipps	Warren
Ernst	King	Pittman	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	Ladd	Poin Dexter	Williams
France	La Follette	Pomerene	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that the first clause of the amendment tendered contemplates that one of these associations, organized under the protection of the provisions of the bill, must admit to membership any person qualified thereunder for membership. Of course, such a provision is not necessary in the Senate committee substitute, but it will be remembered that the House bill contemplates that associations monopolistic in character will be organized.

The California Raisin Growers' Association will serve to illustrate the purpose of the amendment. It is disclosed in the record that 93 per cent of the raisin growers of California belong to that association. The other 7 per cent continue to sell their products to commission merchants as they have in the past, but those commission merchants must go out of business, because they can not get enough of the product to enable them to operate profitably. If they do go out of business, then the 7 per cent will be too small a body to organize a separate association of their own able to conduct the business successfully. Accordingly, they will have no way of marketing their products unless they are admitted to membership in the organization now effected.

Now, that particular association is very desirous, or at least has in the past been very desirous, that they should come into the organization. Up to the present time they have declined to do so. It is conceivable, of course, that the association shall become so incensed with those people as that they will refuse to admit them, and accordingly they will have no means whatever of marketing their products. Whenever a monopolistic organization is authorized, I think that practically all the writers upon the subject insist that all of those qualified under the law for membership should be entitled to admission. That is the purpose of the first paragraph of the proposed amendment.

The second paragraph of the amendment is found in the Senate committee bill. Under the terms of the bill as it was originally conceived and presented to the Senate the organization was authorized to deal only in products of its members, but the bill before us authorizes it to deal not only in the products of its members but in like products of anyone outside of the association. As suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], Mr. Armour and Mr. Swift and Mr. Wilson, all being farmers, could organize under this provision and handle the products of their own farms and then deal to an unlimited amount in like products. For instance, they raise hogs probably upon their own farms. They could handle the products of their own farms and then handle the hog products of all farms under the protection of this measure. The amendment proposes that the association shall not be permitted to deal in the products of nonmembers to an amount greater than the amount in value of the products of its members.

I do not know that the 100 per cent rule is correct, or that it might not be made 200 per cent, or that it ought to be confined to 50 per cent; but I am perfectly satisfied that under the bill as proposed, we must put some limit upon the amount.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. I shall ask that the amendment of the Senator from Montana be divided. Personally, I have no objection to the second amendment establishing the 50 per cent rule; but I hope the Senate will not adopt the first amendment. It will require every cooperative association to admit everybody who is qualified into the association. I think cooperative organizations should be allowed to organize and admit such a number as they see fit, the same as in the case of other organizations. Why? Suppose the farmers of my State, for instance, organize a cooperative stock-selling association and conclude that they would rather have one association in southern Minnesota and another in northern Minnesota, which will operate separately; or that they conclude that they would rather have three separate organizations; I do not think that one organization should be required to take everybody into its fold. Take the California Fruit Growers' Association, which the Senator from Montana has mentioned. I believe he stated that about 7 per cent of the fruit growers are outside of that organization. That 7 per cent ought to be allowed to stay out and to sell their products individually or collectively or in any way they please.

One of the objections, as I recall, which the Senator from Montana made to the proposition contained in the bill, is that all the farmers might form one organization in a single market. The farmers, however, might say, "We prefer to have two or three organizations rather than to have simply one organization," and I think that if they determined to do that they ought not to be forced to admit everybody into one organization.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Minnesota entirely misapprehends the meaning and scope of the amendment. He is talking about something to which the amendment does not refer. If the farmers desire to organize into 20 different associations, they will have a perfect right to do so.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is true.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the farmers of Minnesota want to organize three different associations, there is no difficulty about their doing so. There is nothing in the amendment which prohibits that at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the amendment provides that one association shall admit all the members of other associations if they shall apply. I do not think the amendment ought to be adopted. I hope the Senate will leave associations free to organize in that regard as they may see fit.

As to the second amendment, of course, I have no authority to accept it, any more than has any other Senator, but, personally, I have no objection to the amendment. The amendment reads as follows:

And provided further, That the association shall not deal in products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than such as are handled by it for members.

I do not think there is any objection to that, but, of course, I can not bind any other Senator. To the first amendment, however, I do object.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. Let us see what construction should be placed upon the amendment. Suppose that Mr. Armour is a member of a farmers' organization and then Mr. Swift comes in. Under the phraseology of the amendment can the association deal in double the amount of products of the two packers as well?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. KELLOGG. Not at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps I misunderstood the reading of the amendment and I ask that it may be again read.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will read it again, if the Senator desires to hear it.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator from Minnesota has the amendment, I should like to have him read it.

Mr. KELLOGG. The amendment reads:

And provided further, That the association shall not deal in products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than such as are handled by it for members.

The object being that a few farmers should not organize a corporation simply as a selling agency and not personally really be cooperative members. I have no objection to that amendment, but I ask for a separate vote on the first amendment which is proposed, and I hope the Senate will reject it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, just a word by way of explanation and not of persuasion at all. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] does not meet the situation at all with reference to the first amendment. If he apprehends what it is, he has not clearly stated his views. The amendment contemplates only the case of a monopolistic organization; it contemplates the case of certain farmers being left out of the organization, by spite or otherwise; and having no means whatever of getting their products before the country. That is a situation which the Senator from Minnesota ought to try to meet in some way or other. He ought to try to take care of the 7 per cent of the farmers who are engaged in growing raisins who are not now members of any association.

There is no trouble about a multiplicity of associations. If there is a single association existent and the farmers desire to organize another association, they have a perfect right to do so. This amendment will not in any sense whatever prevent their doing so; they may organize 20 different associations; but Senators will bear in mind that the bill as they are asked to give it their approval authorizes the farmers to go so far with their organization and to get so many producers in it as to constitute a monopoly of the particular product in which they are interested, so that all other producers of that particular community will be obliged to leave the field. As in the case of the raisin growers, those who are left outside of the monopolistic organization may constitute a mere modicum and they will have no way of getting their products on the market at all. If they do not want to organize a separate association or if they are so few in number that they can not do so profitably they ought to be permitted to come into the monopolistic organization upon exactly the same terms as their neighbors are admitted to membership. It ought not to be placed in the power of this monopolistic organization to drive out of existence and out of the business in which they are engaged the men who do not happen to come in until the association embraces a sufficient membership to constitute a monopoly of the business. It should be borne in mind, Mr. President, that it is proposed to give them the power to organize until they have a sufficient membership to enable them to control the market and have no competitor whatever. Of course, if they care to exercise the power, then they can kill off every other man who is engaged in the same business and who has to market in the same place.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, we have not given the farmers the power to organize a complete monopoly. This amendment applies to every association, whether it is a monopoly or an attempt to create a monopoly or not, for it provides that any association must admit anyone who is qualified. If Mr. Armour should be a farmer he would have to be admitted; if a sugar manufacturer should happen to raise a little sugar he would have to be admitted. I have not heard the slightest complaint in all the testimony taken of anybody being excluded from a farm organization when he wanted to join one. I hope the first amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). The Senator from Minnesota requests that the question be divided. The question is on the first amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, when the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] first made this suggestion on the day before yesterday it greatly surprised me, in view of the argument which he had been making against monopoly. I had supposed at that time that he suggested his amendment to the Senate committee substitute, but yesterday I found that I was mistaken in that regard. The Senator from Montana has frankly admitted that if monopoly is to be prohibited or condemned the amendment would be very improper, and he has stated that he had only in mind offering the amendment to the House bill upon the theory that the House bill permitting a monopoly, everyone who wished to enter into that monopoly should have the privilege of doing so. I think I have stated the Senator's position correctly.

Mr. President, Senators will remember that while the House bill authorizes a monopoly under regulations, it does not invite such a monopoly nor encourage it; indeed, the associations which are authorized, I assume, will be careful, so far as possible, that they shall not take on the attributes of a monopoly. Under the House bill, in order to have the Secretary of Agriculture or the courts take jurisdiction over the organization with the possibility of dissolution, two conditions must exist: First, a monopoly or a restraint of trade, and, second, an undue enhancement of prices. So that these organizations will be very greatly interested in taking such precautions that they will not be subject to the charge of being monopolistic. We may take a given organization, for instance, a milk producers' association, which has properly given the Senator from Montana so much concern. Assume that in a given city there is an association of milk producers having a membership controlling 40 per cent or 50 per cent of the milk produced in that territory; but with the competition that exists, under the doctrine laid down in the Steel Corporation case, such an association could not for a moment be charged with being a monopoly and come under the jurisdiction of this bill, but if the Senator's amendment be adopted whereby the association would be compelled upon application to allow all the milk producers of that district to become members of the association, it at once becomes subject to the provisions of the bill, it becomes a monopoly and is subject to dissolution by the court if the Secretary of Agriculture shall find in such a case that there has been an undue enhancement of prices.

Mr. President, this bill is not intended to encourage monopoly. The amendment of the Senator from Montana will encourage monopoly, and I submit that it would be almost as much out of place in the House bill as it would be in the Senate committee substitute where the Senator admits it would be improper to place it.

Mr. President, farm associations should be protected. If they wish so to conduct themselves as not to be chargeable with being a monopoly, we should not compel them to take such action as will, through operation of law, force them to become a monopoly. Therefore this amendment ought to be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the Chair state the question a little more fully. Are we about to vote on an amendment to what is called the House text or on an amendment to the proposed Senate committee substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is presented to the House bill, as the Chair understands.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In the House text, on page 2, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

Third. That any person engaged in the same industry shall be admitted to membership in the association on equal terms with all others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

Third, That the association shall not deal in products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than such as are handled by it for members.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the second amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out so much of the bill as begins at the word "in," in line 6, page 1, and ending with the word "commerce," in line 8, page 1, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

In collectively handling and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of persons so engaged, and in processing or preparing such products for so marketing the same.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in explanation of this amendment I remark that it is merely a transposition of the language. The bill reads that persons are entitled to associate themselves "in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce." The question is, What does the language "in interstate and foreign commerce" modify? Undoubtedly it modifies "marketing," and undoubtedly it modifies "handling"; but you can not say "in collectively processing in interstate and foreign commerce," and it is doubtful if you can say "in preparing for market in interstate and foreign commerce." Under my amendment the language is changed so as to read:

In collectively handling and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of persons so engaged, and in processing or preparing such products for so marketing the same.

The language "processing * * * and marketing" is not qualified by the phrase "in interstate commerce," and therefore is too broad. It would include processing for sale and distribution within the State as well as without the State.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not think the amendment is necessary. The original bill reads:

In collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce.

That is well understood. If the processing and preparing for shipment, like boxing fruit and such things, is for the purpose of shipping in foreign commerce, they may collectively act in that regard as well as any other.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me say that there is not any question about that. There is no dispute about that. The question is, Does the language say that?

Mr. KELLOGG. It certainly does.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It certainly does not.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the language of the House bill is perfectly clear on that point; and I hope the House bill will be sustained and this amendment rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend, line 11, page 2, by inserting after the word "trade" the words "in interstate or foreign commerce," and to amend line 24, on the same page, by inserting after the word "trade" the words "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the only purpose of this amendment is to remove any possible question concerning the constitutionality of section 2, making it clear that it is confined to interstate and foreign commerce, which alone are within our jurisdiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the word "therefrom" and in lieu thereof to insert "from monopolization or restraint of trade"; and on page 3, lines 3 and 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "therefrom" and in lieu thereof to insert "from monopolization or restraint of trade."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to clarify the matter of what the order of the Secretary of Agriculture shall be, which has been the subject of much discussion during this debate, and concerning which there has been difference of opinion as to the construction of the House bill.

If this amendment is adopted, this result will follow: If the Secretary of Agriculture finds that there is a monopolization or restraint of trade, and also an undue enhancement of price, then under the bill as it would read if amended he is directed to issue an order, not against the undue enhancement of price, but against the monopolization or restraint of trade. In other words, when these facts exist the order goes against the monopoly, against the restraint of trade, and the command will be that they must desist from such monopolization or restraint of trade; and a mere abandonment of the undue enhancement of price will not be a defense.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator just exactly what the bill will mean if this amendment is adopted. We will assume, now, that the Secretary finds that a monopoly exists, and that the price of the agricultural product is unduly enhanced thereby. He makes an order commanding it to desist from such monopolization. Just exactly what would that mean?

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, it means that the organization or the association must take such action as will no longer result in monopoly. For instance, under the amendment that has just been adopted, they may make contracts with nonmembers and handle the product of nonmembers to the same amount as the products of members are handled. That might result in monopoly; but they could, in that event, free themselves from any further charge of monopolization if they abandoned their nonmembership contracts. I am just giving that as one illustration that might free them from a charge of monopolization. They might, as the court has done in the case of the Tobacco Trust, the Standard Oil Co., and other of these cases, divide the association.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Dissolve the corporation?

Mr. LENROOT. Not necessarily dissolve it. Enough members might withdraw from it and join another association, so that it could no longer be subject to the charge of monopolization.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while I do not believe this is a vital amendment, to my mind it is unnecessary, and I am inclined to think it ought not to be adopted. I fear that if this amendment is adopted, the effect of the order of the Secretary of Agriculture would be to dissolve the organization entirely, and that he could not do anything else. He must find two things before he has any jurisdiction: First, that they are a monopoly; and, second, that they have unduly enhanced the price. If they are a monopoly, and the monopoly comes about because the farmers have voluntarily gone into the association, and all have gone in, which, I presume, would make it a monopoly—that of itself, under the theory of this bill, is not sufficient. In fact, that is what is desired to be accomplished by the legislation—an organization that will take in the producers and thus enable them to curtail the cost of production or marketing, whichever it may be. If, however, after they have made that kind of an organization, they unduly enhance the price of the product, and use the power for an evil purpose rather than a good one, then the Secretary of Agriculture has jurisdiction. Having assumed jurisdiction, when that kind of a complaint is made, if it is found that they have enhanced the price, and he dissolves the organization—which, I think, the amendment would require him to do—any benefit that can come from the cooperation of producers under those circumstances would be entirely dissipated and lost. If the amendment is not adopted, and the order of the Secretary requires them to desist from the enhancement of the sale price of their product—and, after all, that is what we want to reach—the object is accomplished.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. If that is done, if the order shall go to the enhancement of the price, does it not come down directly and solely to the fixing of the price of farm products by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. NORRIS. I want to be frank with the Senator, and I want to say frankly that I think it tends in that direction. I do not know of any other way to get out of it and get relief. After all, what we are trying to do here is to give the producer a higher price for his product without hurting the consumer. In other words, we want to take away the profits of the middleman.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota in just a moment. We want to permit the producer to join a cooperative organization in order that the middleman may be eliminated, and in order that he may sell more directly to the consumer. Now, it is recognized that when that power is given to this organization it may be used for an evil purpose instead of a good one. It must be conceded by all, the consumer and everybody, that if the organization goes no further than to give to the producer a living price, and at the same time does not increase the price to the consumer, but probably, as they think it will do, decreases the cost to the consumer, a great good has been accomplished; but in order to accomplish that good this power to organize must be given, and in order to accomplish that good they will be able to use that power for an evil purpose. That, I think, must be conceded.

This remedial legislation is introduced for the purpose of meeting that kind of a contingency. If, having been given that power, an organization is formed, and they use it for an evil purpose, to unduly enhance the price to the consumer, then it seems to me that if the Secretary of Agriculture will cause them to desist, even though to the extent he does it may be a fixing of the price, he ought to permit the corporation to go on; at least, they ought to have one trial. There might be a disagreement as to just what the effect was. Now I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I simply rose to call the attention of the Senator to a feature of the provision to which the Senator refers. It is like the first interstate commerce law. The Interstate Commerce Commission could pronounce a rate unreasonable and get an injunction, but it could not fix a rate.

Mr. NORRIS. I am familiar with that.

Mr. NELSON. Under the pending bill the Secretary of Agriculture can pronounce a given price too high. The next minute the combination or association, whatever it may be, may make its price a trifle less and be outside of the order; it may reduce it a half of a cent or a quarter of a cent below the price fixed.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize the force of the Senator's argument, which argument was also made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I realize it has great force, and as near as I can, according to my viewpoint, I want to answer it. It is a very proper suggestion which the Senator has made, something which might occur, something which in the case of the fixing of rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission has already occurred in times past, as we all know.

Before I give my opinion as to what the Secretary could do, let me inquire, if the amendment prevails, what will happen? The entire corporation will be dissolved. They must quit business. Cooperation of farmers, as far as that organization is concerned, is at an end, unless they manipulate things as the Standard Oil Co. has done, and as other trusts which have had the benefit of dissolution by the Supreme Court have done, go on and do business in the same old way; but we are assuming these other organizations will not do that. That is the other dilemma. I do not believe we ought to do either one. But let us say that the complaint has been made and the Secretary has found that there is a monopoly, and that they have unduly enhanced the price. Suppose the product is wheat. It is an impossibility, I think, for a corporation ever to be organized of farmers over this country which will fix the price of wheat, but suppose such a corporation is formed, and the Secretary finds that they have fixed the price of wheat at $1.50, and that that is an exorbitant and unduly enhanced price. He says, "Your price is unduly enhanced; you will have to stop." As the Senator said, they might come right back the next day and fix the price at $1.49, and we would be in the same predicament again. Technically, that is true. But suppose the Secretary said, "I find you have enhanced the price to $1.50, which is unreasonable." He might say to them, "I will hold any price above $1.30 unreasonable. I find that a reasonable price is $1.30. You have made the price $1.50, which is unreasonable, and therefore you are estopped from further doing business in that line."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was listening to the Senator, and wanted to ask him, when he concluded, if, under the practical working of the bill, it must not inevitably lead to price fixing?

Mr. NORRIS. To that extent it will. Of course, as a practical proposition it is never going to occur, in my judgment. I think we are drawing upon our imagination when we think it can ever occur, at least, in regard to the staple farm products. It never will occur. But we are taking the theory of it. We are imagining it is going to happen, that the wheat or corn producers of this country will all combine into one corporation and that they will have no competition. When that time comes, if it ever comes, then it strikes me that the price-fixing proposition will be at stake, no matter how much we may dislike it, and that will not be relieved if the amendment is agreed to. It will be just the same.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in the first place, the amendment I have proposed will give the same construction to the bill which was given to it by its author in the other House, and was supposed to meet the question raised here, that clearly the order, if issued, would go against the monopoly or restraint of trade, and there was never any intention that this bill should become a price-fixing bill.

I want to say that it is not fair to the farmers of the United States to select them as a class, and have any official of the Government fix a maximum price that they may receive for their products, while there is no limitation or restriction placed by governmental act upon the price which the farmer must pay for the products he must use.

Mr. President, I undertake to say that there is not a farmers' organization in the United States which wants this bill to be made a price-fixing bill. I undertake to say that there is not such an organization in the United States that wants the bill to have the construction which the Senator from Nebraska thinks the original House bill is properly susceptible to.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator himself think it is susceptible to that construction?

Mr. LENROOT. I confess I do think it is susceptible to that construction, but a fair matter of debate. I do know that I disagree in that respect with the author of the bill, and I think with representatives of most of the farm organizations. They never supposed that it was a price-fixing measure as it came from the House.

Mr. President, upon the question as to whether there is any injustice in the order going to monopolization instead of its being a price-fixing measure, it will be remembered that in this bill it is proposed to legalize a monopoly, but under certain circumstances to have it under regulation. That is upon the theory, first, that as to the great staple farm products of this country there can, in the nature of things, never be a monopoly, and as to perhaps a few products grown in greatly restricted areas, where monopoly is possible, the theory of the bill is that even in such cases no public injury will result.

But Mr. President, if a monopoly should exist in such cases, and if that monopoly be used for evil instead of for good, why should not the order go against the monopoly? That is the whole question.

So long as that monopoly is not using its power to the public injury it will not be disturbed, but if it does use its power to the public injury, it ought not to be a defense for that monopoly to say, "We will cease charging this particular sum or price for our products, but our monopoly can continue."

I am not at all afraid that this will be exercised in either event, because, as the Senator from Nebraska has said, from the very nature of things monopoly is impossible in farm products.

But, Mr. President, I do not want the Government to set a precedent for price-fixing legislation and begin with a class of people who, if it should ever come, should be the last upon whom it should rest.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin in a good deal of what he has said. In the first place, I think probably we are attaching too much importance to it. In my judgment, in regard to the staple products of the country at least, this power given to the Secretary of Agriculture will never be exercised; but the Senate must not get away from the proposition that it is the price, after all, which is the foundation of it all. If a monopoly should exist among the wheat producers of America which would result in the selling of flour to the consumer at a lower price than he pays without the monopoly, everybody would hail it with delight. That would be the lowering of the price. The price is the important thing, after all. It is the only thing that is going to be taken into consideration, the only thing that anybody cares about. The farmer wants to get a higher price for his product, and that is going to be the object of his organization, and if he can organize and get a higher price without increasing the price to the consumer, everybody will say amen to it. It is the price, after all, and when you dissolve the corporation you dissolve it not because it is a monopoly but because it has, by reason of the power of a monopoly, increased the price to the consumer. That is the real reason for this. So there is no use trying to dodge the proposition that it is a price-fixing proposition, for it is. There is nothing else to it. With perfect disregard of the question whether the amendment will be adopted or not, it is the price, after all, that everybody has his eyes set on and that everybody is going to consider, and it is the only thing that is going to bring about the action, if any is taken, of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator to argue that the Secretary of Agriculture will be called upon to act only when the price reaches a point where he thinks it is too high, whether this amendment goes into the bill or not, and I think the Senator is correct, whether it goes in the bill or not, that the question of the price will be the barometer. Then, after all, the bill is really in itself the first step in a price-fixing proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. To that extent I think it is.

Mr. BORAH. Can the Senator from Nebraska imagine any greater disaster, any greater blight upon American agriculture, than to have a man sitting here in Washington fixing prices upon agricultural products?

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President, as a general proposition I would not want to do that any more than the Senator from Idaho or any other Senator. I do not want to do that, and that question is not involved in this amendment, but to some extent it is involved in this legislation. We are confronted, I think, with a desperate condition. I do not want any price fixing. My judgment is that if this bill is enacted into law, no man here will live long enough to see the time when there will be any price fixing under the bill; but the fact remains that there is a power given, I think necessarily, if you want to put any restraint upon monopoly at all, which goes in that direction. There is no question about that, in my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 21, after the words "shall be," insert:

Taken under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is a little uncertain, under the phraseology of the bill, as to how these hearings are to be conducted. I can conceive of a case where there might be one issue or complaint in Nebraska, another in Washington, another in Maine, and another in Florida. I think it should be made perfectly clear that the Secretary of Agriculture, if he is to have control of this subject, shall have the power to make such rules and regulations with respect to the taking of testimony as may enable him to operate efficiently. This is comprehensive enough to authorize him to designate men to take the testimony in the different localities. It is for the purpose of aiding the operation of the law that I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I now wish to call attention to another matter. A moment ago the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana was adopted, so that there is now a first, second, and third paragraph of the bill, but in the first line on page 2 we have the language—

And conform to one or both of the following requirements.

There are three requirements. I move to strike out the words "one or both of," so that it will read "and conform to the following requirements."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator will change the meaning of the bill, if the amendment is adopted. I will call his attention to the situation and see if he does not think I am right. I have no objection to making the necessary change and think it ought to be made. However, it must be remembered that as the bill now stands the organization does not have to comply with both the requirements but just one.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that very fully.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, the Senator is going to require them to comply with all of them.

Mr. POMERENE. I think they should.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I have nothing to say. I thought the Senator was only desirous of correcting the language.

Mr. POMERENE. In any event some change must be made, whether the Senator's views or my own prevail.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think so.

Mr. POMERENE. Under the bill as it now reads, limiting it for the time being to the bill as it was originally presented, the first requirement is—

That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own therein.

The second reads:

That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 per cent per annum.

Of course, if it complies with the first provision—

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator read the third provision? That is the amendment which was agreed to, and I do not have it before me.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not have it either.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will read it if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. It reads:

And provided further, That the association shall not deal in products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than such as are handled by it for members.

Mr. NORRIS. That ought to be No. 3.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is No. 3.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I make a suggestion in this connection? In order to make the thing complete it seems to me that before the amendment tendered by myself language substantially as follows should be inserted:

And, in any case, to the following:

So that it will read:

And conform to one or both of the following requirements:

Then follow the first and second paragraphs, and then this language:

And, in any case, to the following:

Then follows the third paragraph. Accordingly, if I may be permitted to do so, I move to insert before the amendment tendered by me and adopted the following language:

And, in any case, to the following:

Mr. NORRIS. That would carry out the real intent of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it seems to me that these qualifications ought to apply to all the associations. If the language is to remain as it was, then of course if the owner of stock or membership capital has only one vote there is no limitation to the profit which may be earned or paid out. If that is the way in which it is intended, well and good. I do not attach very much importance to this limitation on the dividends and I do not quite understand why it is here, because it is perfectly clear that the association can make any contract and pay any price for the products of the members. If that is so, the profits are unlimited, even if we have a limitation of 8 per cent so far as it is applied to dividends. I make this suggestion because I think these associations should be required to comply with all these regulations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think if the Senator attends to the language he will appreciate that the purpose is not to limit any of these associations in the amount of actual profit. They first contemplate the organization of an association without any capital stock at all. The members, just the members, turn in all their products together. They have no profits in the ordinary sense of the term, but they divide up whatever comes in in proportion to the amount which each contributes to the general fund; that is, the general fund of products. Take the Fruit Growers' Association, for instance. They are all single members with no stock whatever. One member contributes 1,000 boxes of fruit, another contributes 2,000 boxes of fruit, another 5,000 boxes of fruit, and the total amount is sold and the expenses paid and the avails distributed in proportion to the amount which each one has contributed. That is the first plan of operation.

The second is where they have an amount of capital stock. That is illustrated in this way: It is recognized that in order to carry on the business of any of these cooperative associations they must have capital. Frequently the farmers themselves are unable to provide the capital. So they go to a bank or to a merchant or to some one else who has money, and the banker or the merchant agrees to advance the necessary capital. He thus becomes a stockholder in the corporation. He can have no more than 8 per cent profit or return on his stock. Quite likely he also contributes his product, but if he owns the stock he can not be returned any more than 8 per cent upon his stock, and that is charged as one of the expenses of the association, just the same as other expenses. The remainder is divided among the members of the association in exactly the same way as if it were incorporated under the plan prescribed in the first subdivision.

The idea is to give to the stockholders all the profits and all the benefits that accrue to them, except that the second clause is intended to permit them to go out and secure capital, but the profits which the mere stockholder gets are limited to 8 per cent. The bill contemplates two kinds of organizations—one an organization that has not any capital stock, and the other an organization which not only has members but also has capital stock, the return on the capital stock being limited.

That prompts me to answer an inquiry of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] addressed the other day to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]; that is, what was meant by membership capital. The language is:

That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own therein.

That means that in order to provide the capital, if the farmers themselves are unable to provide it, they fix an initiation fee for membership in the association, $100 or $200, or the corporation may be in existence and may be a going concern, and then they will provide that anybody admitted after a certain time shall be required to pay $200 or $500 or $1,000, whatever the amount may be. That becomes the capital. On that capital, notwithstanding that situation, the member is entitled to but one vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, has the Senator from Ohio offered his amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not so understand it. I will inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he intended to offer his amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I offered the amendment to strike out the words "one or both of," so that the text would read "and conform to the following requirements."

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Ohio has made a suggestion which I think is natural, one that would occur to anyone considering it. It has been so long since the question was up that I may be mistaken as to all the reasons. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has given some, but I desire the attention also of that Senator to the statement I am about to make. If I am not correct in what I state, I would like to have him correct me, because he was present.

Something over a year ago when a similar bill first came to the Senate from the House it was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I was a member and so was the Senator from Montana. We had extended hearings on it at that time and gave it a great deal of consideration. This time when it came over from the House I had nothing to do with it, because I was unable to attend the Committee on the Judiciary on account of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry being in session at the same time and all the time.

As I remember, the first thing that occurred to me was just what has occurred now to the Senator from Ohio—why not make both these conditions absolute? In addition to what the Senator from Montana has said I think this argument was made. I know that after the argument was made I was convinced, and so were all the other members of the committee, that the language ought to remain as it is here, and I think it will convince the Senator from Ohio, because I had the same idea that he has until I heard the argument, which I shall state as I remember it.

I will illustrate by taking an organization of wheat farmers. I can use them because I am more familiar with that kind of an organization. Take an elevator company in a local community. They fix a capital stock, like the Senator from Montana has said, but the dividends they declare depend upon the amount of business they have done and the success with which they have conducted their business. The dividend declared might be in some cases away above 8 per cent, because it contains all the profits. For instance, 10 or 25 men organize themselves into a local elevator company. They bring in all of their wheat. That elevator buys the wheat of other farmers who are not members of the organization and members of the organization also take their wheat there, and they are paid the same price that any other elevator pays. They buy it on the market.

They take into consideration the profits of the local buyer. The only thing these men have in mind is that whatever profit there is in it, if it turn out to be a profit, they get the benefit of it, and not the middleman. That is the benefit of the corporation. But the money they get to begin with is the market price of the wheat. If there are two elevators, one owned by private individuals and the other a cooperative elevator, they will probably pay the same market price, a few cents below the market in Chicago or Omaha or Kansas City, as the case may be.

When the dividends are declared, what would otherwise have been a profit goes into their dividends. The dividends are declared on the amount of business that each one did with the corporation. If the Senator from Ohio and I were both members of the same local corporation of that kind and I sold 1,000 bushels of wheat to the corporation and he sold 2,000 bushels of wheat, when the dividend was declared he would get twice as much dividend, if there was a profit on the business, as I would. To confine it to 8 per cent would be to take away the right of this cooperative organization to get the benefit of whatever profit the middleman would otherwise make.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator, in the proposition which he has just submitted, fail to state really the important element of profit, namely, that by the elimination of the middleman and dealing directly, the profit comes in the increased price of wheat? I fancy that the profits to be derived under this bill, when it shall become a law, if it meets the expectations of its most earnest champions, will come not from the 8 per cent dividend but from the enhanced price of the products, and therefore the question of dividends is practically unimportant.

Mr. NORRIS. But, I will say to the Senator from Utah, the profits will come in the shape of dividends. When the Senator from Ohio, we will say, takes his wheat to the local market he obtains the market price for it. The ordinary market price takes into consideration the making of a profit by the local purchaser, the elevator; but the local farmers' association of which the Senator is a member also does that very thing. When it sells the commodity it makes a price over what it paid to the farmer—in this case to the Senator from Ohio—when he brought his wheat in; but when the Senator from Ohio collects his dividend he will have included in it all that would otherwise have gone to the middleman. It may be that if two middlemen ordinarily handled his wheat he would secure all the profit which both of them would receive. In other words, what the farmers eventually receive comes altogether in the way of dividends; and those dividends include all of the profits from the time the association commences operation with the product until it gets through. So if the dividend were limited to 8 per cent the real objects of the association would be destroyed and there would not be any association organized.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can imagine a case of this kind, which often occurs in my State: At a farmers' cooperative elevator a very much less price is paid than the private buyers pay, because the farmer who brings his grain to the elevator knows that he is finally going to sell his product at the terminal market and that he will get all of the profit there is in the sale at the terminal market. Now, shall we limit him to 8 per cent profit or say what the profit shall be? Suppose he simply hires a person to take his wheat to an agent who does not give the farmer any price at all for his wheat, but merely gives him a receipt for so much No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, and he finally sells it to the elevator at the terminal and no account is taken except as to the number of bushels—

Mr. NORRIS. And the grade.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of grain that have been received, so many bushels of No. 1, so much of No. 2, and so much of No. 3, and so forth; how would it be possible to tell what his profits would be, so long as a price was not put upon his wheat? Under such a method of selling grain we could not by any possibility arrive at a method of computing the profit? It seems to me that in every instance all the farmer can get, whether he sells to a cooperative association or otherwise, will be the amount he will finally receive at the point of consumption; and there ought to be nothing in the bill whatever limiting that profit. Neither should there be anything in the bill which would attempt to determine what the profit is under some methods of doing business.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota in just a moment. I want to refer to what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has just said. The Senator from North Dakota has illustrated the situation very well, I think. There are instances, I think, of organizations which are now operating which pay nothing to the farmer when he brings in his wheat; he gets nothing except a receipt showing that he has delivered so much wheat and the grade. The wheat is pooled, as it is said, in the national grain organization which is now operating. Pooling the grain is one of the methods employed to dispose of it. The farmer is given an option either to pool his wheat or to sell it later to a cooperative association. If he pools the wheat when the wheat is finally sold to the miller—who would, probably, be the consumer in that case, and otherwise it might pass through several hands—and the pool is finally ended, the profits are ascertained, and after paying the expenses the remainder is divided among those who sold the wheat in proportion to the amount and grade of the wheat which they contributed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who interrupted me awhile ago.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is nothing in the bill which prevents the farmer getting that profit.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. KELLOGG. The provision in reference to the dividend being 8 per cent does not prohibit the farmer doing that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. Now I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. From what has been said by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], I fear possibly that my position in this matter is somewhat misunderstood. I am not seeking to place any limitation on the amount of the profits that the member of an association may have, but, as I construe the bill, there is no limitation upon the amount of the profit which may be made by the sale from the producer to the association; and I do not quite understand why the 8 per cent was included in the bill as a limitation upon the dividend. It may be I do not comprehend the modus operandi, but it occurred to me that one of the purposes was to make it appear that there was a limitation in this clause, when, as a matter of fact, there was no limitation. If I am wrong about that I should like to be set right about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Under the first clause there is no limitation and the second clause was kept in, as I understand—and I should now like to have the particular attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]—because there are already in existence many organizations which have been formed under the laws of various States different from those to which the first clause would apply. There are probably some States whose laws meet the requirements of the kind of a corporation where each member has but one vote regardless of the amount of stock held by him, but that may not be possible under other State laws; at least there were many associations organized where the farmers are limited as to the dividends which may be paid and it was not desired to dissolve such organizations. It was not desired to make it necessary by the passage of this measure for any State to enact additional legislation; but where such a condition did exist we desired to prevent any idea of a monopoly or anything of that kind by allowing anyone to become a member of an organization and then to control it under an arrangement by which he could have as many votes as he could buy shares of stock. Under such an arrangement some outsider, like Armour or any other big packer or Barnes or any big grain elevator man, could come in and buy a controlling interest in some small association and outvote the other members. That might happen if the conditions imposed in the first clause were not provided. To prevent that from happening and these cooperative associations being thus used for evil purposes we provided that they should in such cases never have a dividend of more than 8 per cent. Do not Senators see the object of that clause?

I think the Senator from Ohio ought really to withdraw his amendment. I do not believe anybody would want to support an amendment which, if the theory of this bill is right, would go far toward destroying it. Personally I wish that the second clause were not necessary; and if it were not for some State laws and some organizations already existing, which it would be harmful to destroy, I think the committee would have stricken that provision out and confined themselves to the first clause. Now, I ask the Senator from Montana if I am right in my explanation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, generally I am in entire accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Nebraska. Of course, the entire purpose of the bill is to do away with the unnecessary middleman, and thus give to the producer the profits which would ordinarily accrue to him. I do not understand, however, that that feature has any particular reference to the part of the bill now under consideration.

If the Senator from Ohio will give me his attention for a moment, I desire to say that there would be an entire incongruity in the bill if his amendment were adopted. No organizations are affected in which both of the conditions referred to in the bill obtain. They refer to two entirely different kinds of organizations. One of them is an organization which has no capital stock at all and to which no money is contributed except such as is contributed by membership fees. There the member has only one vote, no matter how much money he puts in. The other kind of an association is organized not only upon the basis of membership but upon the basis of membership and capital stock.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me illustrate that. Twenty farmers organize a creamery association, each farmer contributing a membership capital of a thousand dollars. They organize under the first plan; but the 20 farmers who, I assume, organize under the first plan have not each a thousand dollars, so 19 of them contribute $100 apiece and the twentieth man contributes $18,100, making the entire $20,000. The man that contributes the $18,100 gets stock to the extent of $18,100 in addition to his $100 membership, which he has with all the others. That man may get as high as 8 per cent on his $18,100 and no more. After he gets the 8 per cent on the $18,100 all other profits of the association are divided amongst the members, ordinarily in proportion to the amount of product which they contribute. So that it will be observed that two different kinds of organizations are contemplated, and the bill would not be operative at all if every organization was obliged to comply with both of these requirements. I trust that I have made myself clear.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President if the Senator's explanation is correct—and I accept it—then, perhaps, it would be unfortunate if my amendment were adopted; and I withdraw the amendment, with the observation that the Senator's explanation has demonstrated to me conclusively that portions of this bill are most marvelously drawn.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the House text, on page 1, line 5, after the words "nut or fruit growers may," it is proposed to insert:

and where any such agricultural product or products must be submitted to a manufacturing process, in order to convert it or them into a finished commodity, and the price paid by the manufacturer to the producer thereof is controlled by or dependent upon the price received by the manufacturer for the finished commodity by contract entered into before the production of such agricultural product or products, then any such manufacturers may.

Also, on page 2, line 1, after the word "producers," it is proposed to insert "or manufacturers, as the case may be."

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, this is an amendment identical in language with the one which I spoke upon yesterday, the only change being in the reference, so that it will fit in with the text of the bill as passed by the House. I have used the illustration of marketing sugar, perhaps because I am more familiar with that industry than with any other along farming lines.

I may find it necessary to repeat some of the language I used yesterday; but, briefly, I will say that in ordinary practice a sugar factory will enter into a contract with a farmer under which he agrees to plant a certain acreage to sugar beets. The factory agrees to take the product of that acreage, regardless of its tonnage, and to pay for it not less than an agreed minimum price, dependent upon the sugar content of the beets. Over and above that, the factory agrees with the farmer that he shall share in any profits realized in the sale of the sugar over and above a minimum price per pound, which is fixed by the factory, based upon a return of 6 per cent on its capital investment.

Under our present usage, sugar produced in Michigan may be largely marketed in Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and also in the States to the eastward of Michigan, while at the same time sugar produced in Colorado, Utah, and California is shipped into the same territory and farther east, into Michigan itself, into Ohio, and into Pennsylvania, thereby causing an unnecessary expenditure for freight. Immediately following the Great War, when we had an illustration of an inordinate advance in the price of sugar, which later was shown to be entirely due to the manipulation of brokers and jobbers, the Government again took charge of sugar distribution, and under the direction of Mr. Hoover, now Secretary Hoover, the sugar was allotted to the various localities, and the combination in price which existed among the jobbers was immediately broken. If the sugar producers are permitted to market their output through one central selling agency, the sugar can be allotted to the various sections where it can be delivered at the least possible cost for transportation, and the cost of the services of the middlemen, such as jobbers and brokers, will be saved to the producers.

There is no danger in the sugar industry of the market price being advanced by the domestic producers of sugar, because we produce less than one-fourth of the amount which we consume. The market price prevailing throughout the country is regulated by the price at New York. That has been true ever since the early years of the war. Prior to that time, our prices in America were regulated by the Dutch market.

I feel that there is nothing in this amendment that could be harmful to the consumers of sugar. I do not believe that at any time it will ever affect the retail price at which sugar or any other commodity is sold; but I do believe beyond question that it would work a great saving in the cost of production, in the cost of distribution, in the handling and delivery of various commodities, and I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It permits any manufacturer who converts a product into a finished commodity where the price paid by the manufacturer to the producer is controlled by or dependent upon the price received by the manufacturer for the finished commodity to enter into any combination he sees fit. Of course, if they make contracts with the producers of the raw materials, the packers, the sugar manufacturers, or anybody manufacturing anything where the raw product is produced on the farms can combine under this bill.

If the Senate wishes absolutely to defeat the bill, it ought to adopt this amendment; otherwise not.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to call attention to the fact that this amendment is limited to cases where the manufacturer enters into a contract with the producer before the produce has been grown.

Mr. KELLOGG. I can answer that. That is perfectly easy to do. The packers could enter into contracts, the cotton mills could enter into contracts, the sugar manufacturers could enter into contracts; and I hope the Senate will defeat the amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, before this amendment is submitted, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether he will not revise his amendment, so as to read, on line 8:

After the word "production," insert the words "or harvest" of such agricultural product—

And so forth. I want to state why I am making this request.

The Senator has referred to the custom prevailing in the beet-sugar States of making a contract for the payment for the agricultural raw material based upon the price which the finished product will bring on the market.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes.

Mr. PHIPPS. As suggested by the Senator from Louisiana, I desire to perfect the amendment by inserting the words "or harvest."

Mr. BROUSSARD. Now, Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words with reference to this amendment. I am asking for the insertion of the words "or harvest" after the word "production" for the purpose of making it very certain that this amendment, if adopted, would apply to any agricultural product contracted for prior to the time of delivery to the factory.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator why a corporation such as the Senator is speaking of should be entitled to inclusion in this bill simply because it makes a contract to purchase a farm product?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will say to the Senator that I was about to explain why I think it should be done.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I know that in my own State, among the sugar people, the contract for the raw product is entirely different from that made by any other manufacturer. For instance, in order to illustrate our case, the manufacturer very frequently before the crop is put in, and in other instances after the crop is put in the ground, but in almost all cases before the delivery of the agricultural product, makes a contract with the grower, and the price fixed there is as follows, to illustrate with a specific case in my State: The price to be paid to the grower is to be on the basis of $1 for every cent that the finished product brings on the market. Therefore, if this amendment should be adopted it is not a provision intended solely to protect the manufacturer, but it is one which by increasing the price of the finished product will also increase the price to the producer of the raw material; and it is only on that ground that this could be justified, as I see it, in this measure.

I did not know that this amendment was to be offered until yesterday, when I heard the Senator from Colorado discuss it; but there is some doubt in my mind as to whether or not the word "production," the contract having to be made before the production, would cover our State, because it is necessary there to plant in the fall for the crop of the following year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if the effect of this amendment would not be to relieve all sugar manufacturers from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law? Would not that be the effect of it?

Mr. BROUSSARD. The bill would simply apply to that agricultural product, the same as it would to any other agricultural product covered in this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment does not go to the agricultural product, however. It goes to the manufacturer who makes something out of the agricultural product.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But the beneficiary of this would be the producer.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator what benefit the manufacturer of sugar could get unless he expected to enter into a combination of some kind to enhance the price to the consumer?

Mr. BROUSSARD. It would extend to them as to all other products of agriculturists under this bill. By a method of marketing the sugar manufacturers could meet the competition of the well-organized American Sugar Trust and others which compete with us. You are only tying the hands of the individual manufacturer of sugar, when his competitor in my territory has a refinery at New Orleans, at our doors. If these people go ahead and finish their products, the beneficiary of any organization for the purpose of putting their sugar on the market in competition with the refiners would be the producers, because for every increase in the price of every pound of sugar the producer receives a proportionate increase in the price of his raw material.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I confess it is difficult for me to understand this amendment, but if I do understand it, it seems to me it is a dangerous amendment. I did not know that it would help the sugar factory men, because they do about as they please now. They do not need the protecting hand of Congress. The sugar fellows take care of themselves, sell their product, and combine when they want to and where they want to and as long as they want to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, if the Senator were informed as to the sugar industry he would know that during the past few years not a single institution in the United States engaged in the manufacture of sugar has made a profit; but, on the contrary, all have lost in dollars more than they had made in the preceding year. That does not indicate that they could control and dominate or sell or refrain from selling when they chose. As I stated, and I believe a study of the facts will bear me out, the price of sugar is fixed not by the domestic production but by our importations of sugar, the produce of the Philippines, the Hawaiian Islands, Cuba, and Porto Rico. Since the war the New York market has been the market where the price of sugar has been fixed, and where it is to-day fixed. As I stated, I used the sugar industry because I felt perhaps I was more familiar with the character of contracts the farmer enters into with the sugar factory; but I believe the same conditions prevail in the dairying industry, where the farmer is returned an extra profit when the creamery succeeds in marketing cheese at above a fixed rate per pound, or selling the cream in excess of a certain price per gallon.

The saving which would come about through the doing away with hauling material into one territory from the east, and taking produce of that same territory and sending it back to where this first lot had been produced, is so apparent and so evident that where that can be accomplished for the benefit of the farmer, to my mind it will go well beyond any other single benefit which could possibly accrue to the farmer under the main features of this proposed bill.

The sugar industry in one State alone will bring in from fifteen to twenty million dollars in one season to the farmers, and bringing in fifteen to twenty million dollars, the middleman will rake off at least 20 per cent on the average, and another 5 per cent will go for freight, which should and could be saved. I think, if the Senator would inquire into the details of the sugar industry, he would conclude that it was possible and right and proper that this benefit should be secured for the farmer who is developing our western country.

Mr. BURSUM. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I would rather the Senator would let me answer the question asked by the Senator from Colorado, and then I will yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

The Senator from Colorado has not yet satisfied me that the amendment is proper. He bases his argument on the ground that it is going to bring a benefit to the farmer by enabling the manufacturer of sugar to get a higher price.

Mr. PHIPPS. I beg the Senator's pardon, the Senator misunderstood me. I do not believe I made any statement which would lead anyone to think that the factory was to receive a higher price for the sugar. I have stated that it would not cost the consumer any more, it would not cost the retailer any more, but the savings which would come under this provision are those caused by eliminating the middleman and by doing away with unnecessary haulage of the produce. Those savings which could be effected would be divided, under the forms of contract that are generally in use and have been in use for years, as between the factories and the farmers, and that is not only true of the sugar factories; I am well informed that that is true of the dairies.

Mr. BURSUM. I simply wanted to ask a short question, which is vital to the proposition, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me. Under this proposal to cooperate with the refineries or other factories, would the farmer be enabled to get a higher price for his product? Would the raiser of beets be benefited by it?

Mr. PHIPPS. He certainly would be. That is the purpose and intent of this amendment.

Mr. BURSUM. Is this cooperation necessary in order to enable the farmer to receive the fullest return for his product in proportion to the market price?

Mr. PHIPPS. I am quite sure it is absolutely necessary. Unless the amendment is adopted, the manufacturers, the ones who turn the sugar beets into sugar and who now sell their product individually as separate and independent sugar firms, would be permitted to sell that product collectively, distribute it to the points which could be reached at the least cost for freight, and could sell direct to the wholesalers, without having to employ the services of brokers and jobbers.

Mr. BURSUM. And the benefit would accrue to the farmer, the raiser of beets?

Mr. PHIPPS. The benefit would accrue to the farmer and to the sugar factory.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have not yet answered the Senator's first question, and he has propounded another one, or I suppose it is a question. I do not know why I have been interrupted otherwise.

I am still unable to see how the Senator's amendment will accomplish what he says it will accomplish. I want to read it. He proposes, on page 1, line 5, after the word "may," to insert the following:

and where any such agricultural product or products must be submitted to a manufacturing process, in order to convert it or them into a finished commodity, and the price paid by the manufacturer to the producer thereof is controlled by or dependent upon the price received by the manufacturer for the finished commodity by contract entered into before the production or harvest of such agricultural product or products, then any such manufacturers may act together in associations, corporate, or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of persons so engaged.

I said before that it seemed to me that the amendment was for the purpose of getting a higher price to the farmer through giving a higher price for sugar to the manufacturer, and the Senator immediately interrupted me and said that was not the object. What does it mean, then, when it says that the price to the producer is controlled by or dependent upon the price received by the manufacturer for the finished commodity?

Mr. President, I am just as anxious to protect the consumer as I am to protect the producer. I am not willing to do anything in favor of the producer that will be unfair or unjust to the consumer. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado, as I understand, is simply offered for the purpose of giving to a certain class of manufacturers the right to be immune from any prosecution under the Sherman Antitrust Act, a repeal of the act, as far as certain manufacturers are concerned.

They are not cooperators; they are not producers; it is not an organization composed of producers who incorporate together to handle their own products; that is not it. The Senator from Colorado said he was familiar with the sugar business. I, too, am familiar with it. I have a number of factories in my own State who, I presume, would like to have this amendment in. It would permit manufacturers of sugar who have not produced the product, who are purchasers of it, to combine, to disregard the Sherman antitrust law, to act together, and the condition attached to it would be that when they got out of the consumer an enhanced price they would pay to the farmer an enhanced price.

The theory of this legislation is that it will enable men who produce agricultural products to cooperate to get a higher price, but not get a higher price by compelling the consumer to pay a higher price, but by eliminating the middleman. This amendment would do just the opposite, which, to my mind, is wrong and is evil—that is, it would give to the producer a higher price for his product, dependent upon the fact that the consumer had to pay a higher price—and he would get no enhanced value under this amendment unless the consumer paid a higher price. That is the only way he could get it.

I would not favor that under any consideration. The manufacturers of sugar particularly are not entitled to assistance, even if they did lose something. The Senator offers the fact that they lost money as a proof that they never were combined, or anything of that kind. I presume some of them did lose money. A great many people, a great many retailers, lost money on sugar they had on hand when it went down. I have no joy in seeing anyone lose any money, but I was glad when the price of sugar went down, even though somebody had to lose, and I do not suppose there was any way to put it down without somebody losing. If he had it in his bin, or if he had it hoarded in his own house, he lost money on it. But the sugar people as a rule have been rather prosperous.

I do not understand how the Senator's amendment will prevent the hauling of sugar around from place to place, as he indicates in his argument it would, or prevent the sugar that is manufactured in my State from going to New York, and compelling the people in my State to buy their sugar from Hawaii or Porto Rico or Cuba or New York or New Orleans. If it did accomplish that and would enable the people who live in a community where there is a sugar factory to get sugar from that factory without having to pay freight to haul it across the continent or halfway around the world, it might do some good; but I can not understand that it does that.

A year or so ago there was an editorial association of my State which made a trip around over the State, and wherever they went the people gave them a banquet. They went to Scottsbluff, in Nebraska, a beautiful city, which has grown up in the beet-sugar country, and they had a banquet in that town, as they did in all other towns. They had the banquet in the beet-sugar factory, right in the factory itself, which is a mammoth concern, almost as big as this Capitol. I am familiar with it myself, having been in it a good many times. The sugar that was given to the visitors at that banquet to go into their coffee was shipped by freight from New Orleans up there. If you lived in that town, you could not buy a pound of sugar that was made in that town. You had to buy sugar that came from New York or Hawaii, or some other place. The railroads had to have a hand in it before you could get it. I presume that is true of every locality in the United States wherever there is a sugar factory. They are pretty well combined now, and I advise them to go to the Supreme Court and get a clean bill of health, as the Steel Trust did, or a certificate of good moral character, such as the Standard Oil Trust got. In either case, whether they want it dissolved or not, it would probably give them an advertisement that would be good for them and help them to make more money.

However, it does seem to me that a bill which we are trying to pass for the purpose of permitting the producers of products to cooperate for the purpose of eliminating the expense on the product as it travels from the producer to the consumer, should not be amended by permitting a manufacturer of any product, no matter what it is, agricultural or otherwise, to get a bigger profit from the consumer on his product if he will agree to pay a part of the swag to the man who produces it. I think, as I look at it, that the proposed amendment does just that thing. I do not believe it ought to be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to give notice that I shall renew the amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the House text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 13, after the word "order" and the comma, insert "or enter such other decree as the court may deem equitable," so that if amended the sentence will read:

Such district court shall thereupon have jurisdiction to enter a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside said order, or enter such other decree as the court may deem equitable, and may make rules, etc.

Mr. CAPPER. The effect of the amendment will be to provide still further safeguards for the public interest and at the same time I do not believe it will work a hardship or injury to the cooperative associations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am entirely in sympathy with the proposition for agriculturalists and all classes covered by the pending measure to associate themselves together for the purpose of handling and marketing their products. There is much reason for complaint against the uneconomic methods employed in the distribution of products of field and farm and ranch. The spread between the producer and the consumer is entirely too great. The cost to the consumer is entirely disproportionate to the amount received by the producer. It is undoubtedly true that the farmers of the United States are not receiving an adequate return for their toil and effort, and middlemen and intermediaries and brokers and traders are obtaining the profits which ought to go to the farmers. I am in sympathy with any legitimate and proper effort to enable the producer of agricultural products to obtain a fair and just price for his products. I have said repeatedly that the agriculturists of our land derived less for their labor than any other class of our citizenship.

No one can dispute the importance of agriculture. Indeed, it must be conceded that it is the basis of our industrial life. The prosperity of our country depends upon the prosperity of the farmers. In criticizing the pending bill, I am not opposing the policy of the classes referred to in the bill associating themselves together for the marketing of their products. It is my contention that, under existing law, agriculturists have the right to associate for the purpose of processing, handling, and disposing of their products. I have made inquiry and am advised by the Department of Justice that only four prosecutions have been instituted under the Sherman antitrust law against what might be denominated agriculturists, and in each case there was a flagrant attempt to monopolize and to oppress the people.

In the four cases just referred to the defendants sought to create corners or oppressive trusts; their conduct merited condemnation at the hands of the public and punishment under the law. If they had merely sought to associate themselves together for the purpose indicated by the pending bill, they would not have been prosecuted. Indeed, as I construe the Sherman antitrust law, they would not have been subject to prosecution if they had sought only to do what the present bill authorizes.

The Clayton Act exempts agricultural associations from prosecution if they are employed only for the marketing, handling, and so forth of the products of the members of such associations. Accordingly, as I construe the important provisions of this bill, the measure is unnecessary. It is possible, however, that under this bill trusts of the character described by the Senator from Montana might be formed. That would be most unfortunate and would provoke criticism of the law which permitted the same. To guard against this contingency the Senate amendment was offered. In nothing that I have stated do I wish to confess my willingness to favor legislation which will permit trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade and commerce. I believe in the principles of competition and in its benefits. We suffer now from great monopolies and from efforts to destroy competition, particularly in the manufacturing industries of the United States. I am opposed to cotton or wool or meat or milk or any other kind of a monopoly.

But the association of agreements for the purpose of marketing their products does not authorize monopolies, nor generally speaking, will such a course create monopolies. However, I rise merely to ask a few questions of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] or some Senator who may advise me as to the interpretation placed upon the bill as applied to certain conditions. Suppose a corporation is formed by farmers engaged in the production of wheat in the State of Minnesota, and a like corporation is formed in the State of Iowa or some contiguous State of farmers engaged in the production of wheat, for the purpose of handling, marketing, processing, and so forth, their products. Does the Senator think that under the bill such corporations could combine to accomplish the same object? By that I mean may various corporations or associations combine to carry out the objects of the different organizations?

Mr. KELLOGG. Those corporations organized under State laws can only consolidate by virtue of the State laws.

Mr. KING. The Senator dismisses the subject in a rather supercilious way. I ask the Senator again, if he cares to answer, whether, under a proper interpretation of the bill, there is any language that would prevent corporations organized to carry out the objects of the bill from uniting with corporations organized in the same or in other States?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know what the Senator means by "uniting." If he means consolidating, of course they could not consolidate unless the laws of the State permitted them to do so.

Mr. KING. I am not speaking of technical consolidations. I mean may they cooperate, work together, and unite in their efforts to market and handle their products? May corporation A unite and confederate with corporation B for the purpose of maintaining prices or creating a trust or monopoly or for the purpose of marketing the products of their members?

Mr. KELLOGG. The language of the bill is perfectly plain as to what they can do. It says:

That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers, may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of persons so engaged.

That is the extent of it.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator, if I understand him, takes the position that corporations in the same State or corporations of different States or corporations in all the States may unite together, not consolidate into one legal organization for the purpose of carrying out the objects intended by the bill, no matter how stupendous the aggregation might be and no matter whether a trust might thereby be created. If the Senator takes that position—and I understand him to answer affirmatively that the bill permits that—then obviously his position is that the bill authorizes a gigantic monopoly in any of the lines of business referred to in the bill.

I have thought that the bill was not intended to authorize trusts or combinations to destroy competition or to oppress consumers. It has been claimed that it was aimed at evils growing out of the uneconomic methods of distribution and the middleman and those who got control, partial or complete, of agricultural products. If the bill is for that purpose and to aid the farmer and woolgrower and fruit grower to find markets and to receive fair and legitimate proceeds and profits arising from their labor, then there can be no objection to its provisions.

I had hoped the Senator would say, and I had been told that was the intention of the framers of the bill, that it was not intended to authorize the combination of a multitude of corporations in the same State or in various States for the purpose of marketing and processing and effectuating the objects that are provided in the bill. It seems to me if it authorizes what the Senator says it does, there should be an amendment. I do not believe that the Senate will favor a policy which will permit corporations in a number or in all of the States of the Union to form a nation-wide organization or association. It would seem that there would be opportunity for oppressive monopolies to be formed dealing with some commodities at least, if hundreds of corporations could unite to handle, control, and dispose of such commodities.

The raisin monopoly could be perpetuated. It is manifest that the people might suffer from a milk monopoly or combinations that would control lemons, lucerne seed, hops, and other agricultural products. A wool combination might be developed, indeed it is difficult to determine just what the effect would be, if we by law legalize all combinations—combinations consisting of hundreds of corporations and associations—doing business in various States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, does the Senator appreciate the fact that in these associations each farmer has only one vote, and that they would practically have to have a town meeting in order to have a vote of the corporation, and that the profits or the dividends upon the stock are limited to 8 per cent? With those restrictions, how could there be any great danger?

Mr. KING. Let me put a hypothetical case to the Senator. Suppose that the Senator associated with other farmers for the purpose of marketing their farm products, and that in the western part of his State another organization similar in character was formed, and in the southern part of the State still other associations were organized; so that in all there were 50 or more organizations of farmers throughout the State of Nebraska existed. Assume that they acted together through a common or central committee, and this committee brought all these united Nebraska corporations into contact with similar organizations in Iowa and surrounding States, and finally with all the producers in the United States who produced the same kind of crops. It can not be said such a combination or association is impossible. It may be impracticable. Would not such a nation-wide organization controlling—selling some products—prove harmful to the country? If it controlled all wool, or all citrus fruits, or all milk, or hides, or meat, or raisins, there would be just complaint by the people.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the profits are limited to 8 per cent, I do not see how that could go very far, and I am very sure a monopoly can only be entertained when power is placed in the hands of a few people. If you have to have a town meeting in order to call a meeting of the stockholders, I think that removes every vestige of danger.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator say that a corporation organized in one part of the State of Nebraska might not name an official or agent to cooperate with a like organization in another part of the State of Nebraska and with similar organizations in all parts of the United States? The mere fact that each member of the corporation has but one vote in his own organization does not preclude the members from appointing an agent to represent them and their corporation in confederating, as I understand the Senator from Minnesota that they may confederate, with like organizations in the same or other States. In other words, the one vote does not prevent corporations from combining and uniting to execute an agreed plan.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose they do, what would be the evil?

Mr. KING. I will come to that in a moment. Does the Senator admit that under the bill it may be done?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I could imagine that a number of associations might select the same marketing agent. I can imagine that, but what if they do?

Mr. KING. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That agent would then market their products.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the members of a corporation selecting one of their number to market their products. That can be done now. It is not in contravention of any law, and no one would support a measure to prevent such action.

But the Senator, if I understand him, takes the position that under the bill there is no inhibition against organizations of the same State coming into contact with each other and having representatives act for all, and organizations of one State having representatives for the purpose of uniting in action with representatives of organizations in other States, and, indeed, in all States, for the purpose of marketing, processing, and disposing of their products, holding them for that matter for indefinite periods, building warehouses in order that the commodities might be stored until it was determined that a suitable price might be obtained.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think they could.

Mr. KING. The Senator concedes that. Does the Senator uphold that interpretation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do; absolutely.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that is a wise thing?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think it would be a wise thing for all of the milk producers of one State or a given number of States to be permitted to combine?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When it comes to the milk production, the only possible danger that can be considered is of a local monopoly, a local monopoly in any town. My judgment is that the supply of milk of a big city ought to be monopolized just like the gas supply, and its price ought to be in some way controlled. I believe it could be controlled. When I wake up in the morning and hear half a dozen milk carts rattling by my house, I say that is a waste. It would be better to have one milk cart attending to that part of town. One of the reasons why the cost of living is so great in a city is the awful waste of having hundreds of grocery stores doing what a few should do, dozens of milk men doing what a few could do, and every block paraded by half a dozen different ice wagons and milk wagons and supply wagons, so the people who live in that block have to pay that cost of delivery.

Mr. KING. There is no doubt that the view expounded by the Senator is the view which is entertained by the Steel Trust and by the Standard Oil Trust and other great combinations. These organizations think it is unwise to have a large number of distributing agents and a multitude of plants and independent competing companies. They think economies will be effectuated if one organization controls the distribution of all the oil of the United States. They believe in monopolies, in the destruction of competition, not only in distribution but also in production. The view expounded by the Senator from Nebraska will be welcomed by the Standard Oil Co. and the Steel Trust and other combinations that are seeking to control the trade and commerce of the United States. The contest is on between sound economies and the sinister forces which seek to fasten an oppressive monopolistic system upon the country. This fallacy that economies and lasting benefits will result from the control by big business and big corporations has been exposed by many writers of note. I am unwilling to see the competitive system in our industrial life absolutely destroyed. I am not willing to turn over to the tender mercies of the manufacturing interests, to the packers, to the Harvester Trust, to the Steel Trust, and Oil Trust the American people. We should strike at evil combinations which strangle competition and plunder the people. The farmers have been the victims of monopolies. We should liberate them from the exploiter. Economists, publicists, and jurists of eminence and renown, not only in the United States but in other parts of the world, have canvassed the question of trusts and conspiracies to destroy competition and have advocated the competition theory.

Mr. Justice Brandeis, of the Supreme Court, a number of years ago exhaustively examined the thesis—that great corporations and combinations could produce cheaper than smaller units. He demonstrated, I think in a satisfactory manner, that there was a point at which economies would be lost by reason of the great aggregations of wealth and capital in any industry or trade or calling. But, without pursuing that thought any further, I come back to another question. The Senator asks what evil will follow. He says the farmers will receive but 8 per cent upon their capital. The Senator, in my view, is in error in all that the answer would imply. Of course, there would be received only 8 per cent upon the capital which each of the individuals of the various associations has subscribed, but the Senator loses sight of the fact that, assuming a monopoly of the proportions of the character which I have indicated, nation wide, resulting from the united efforts of a hundred or a thousand corporations distributed throughout the United States, it is obvious that such a gigantic organization or monopoly could raise the price of milk or other products controlled by it until every member of each local organization and of all the organizations would receive enormous profits, and the question of 8 per cent dividends would be utterly lost sight of in the high prices which would be paid to such producers. The profits would not be in dividends but in enhanced prices for the products of the members of the corporation.

There might be no dividends at all; the stockholders might prefer to pay out the profits, if Senators will permit the expression, in increased prices for the commodities purchased so that there would be no dividend.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if the construction placed upon this bill by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] is correct, it furnishes a reason, if there were none other, for amending the bill. I asked the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] if the construction which I have asked the Senator from Minnesota whether he placed upon it was the one which was placed upon it by the Senator from Montana. I understood the Senator from Montana to say that he did not place that construction upon the bill. The bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, and I should be very glad if other members of that committee will advise the Senate whether they place a construction upon the bill such as that indicated by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, I regret very much that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] dismissed the inquiry of the Senator from Utah with respect to this matter with the evident thoughtlessness with which he did. The question is one of very great importance. I do not, however, take the same view of it as does the Senator from Utah. I want these associations to be permitted to federate themselves, but I am apprehensive that the bill does not permit them to do so. I do not anticipate any of the evils which the Senator from Utah points out. Such federation is already in operation and most beneficially so in the case of the California Fruit Growers' Association. I refer not to the California Raisin Growers' Association, of which mention has been made, but to the large cooperative association of the State of California which markets the citrus fruit product of that State. It has this kind of organization: There are local associations organized substantially as the associations contemplated and provided for in the bill are to be organized. Those associations are federated into a district association, and the district associations are federated into a State association. The State association has a common marketing agency in all the great cities. So that all the various local associations thus have one common marketing agency, but they federate themselves, and thus they secure added advantages by reason of the cooperative principle.

I think we ought to permit that to be done. I am not at all alarmed about the wheat growers' associations in the United States federating themselves so that they would have one common marketing agency. The price of wheat could not be enhanced a dollar, because the price of the wheat of this country is controlled by the Liverpool market.

No matter to what extent such associations federate, even though they had but one common selling agency, they could not get the people of the United States to give any higher price for their product than the Liverpool market commands. So it would be as to corn. Such a federation could not put up the price of corn. However, I doubt whether this bill would authorize such federation of these associations after they are organized.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a further question. The Senator will confess, will he not, that there are some products which could be controlled by federations, covering various States, to the disadvantage of the consumer?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not think of anything except those that I have pointed out; that is to say, those that are produced only in restricted localities or that will not stand shipment, such as milk.

Mr. KING. I cite to the Senator the case of lemons, for instance.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Lemons are in exactly the same situation. The lemon growers in California have never been able to associate themselves with the lemon growers in Florida; they are too far apart; they can not work in common. So there is no occasion for alarm; for if they should form an association the price would still be controlled by the import price.

Mr. KING. Yes; I concede that in part; but if we should have a prohibitive tariff, or if there should be provided the American valuation in the tariff law, or should we have such a tariff as the extreme protectionists want, oppressive prices might result.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would not regard the danger as serious at all except, as I say, in respect to the products which are limited; and, of course, lemons are produced within a comparatively limited area.

Mr. KING. The Senator can conceive of a number of agricultural products, dairy products, fruit products, and so on, that would be susceptible of monopolistic control, and a federation of associations within States and among States would increase the power of the associations thus formed to enhance the price beyond what would be fair and just.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That might be, but the same result could be accomplished by another process. The associations, instead of federating, could simply constitute themselves into one association.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERNALD. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana, while he is discussing the question, if the wheat market is determined by the Liverpool market, how would this bill help our farmers?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Because the farmer brings his product to the nearest town, where, for instance, an elevator association handles the commodity. In my State the farmer is a thousand miles from the terminal market at Minneapolis or Duluth. Of course, the farmer knows the price and he knows the cost of transportation, but that does not make any difference, for he is subject to regulations as to grading and as to dockage for foreign matter and dirt and moisture in the grain, and all that kind of thing.

Mr. FERNALD. So that it would be a question of other benefits to be received outside of the matter of price?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Outside of price; yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana, who is a member of the committee, whether, under his construction of the bill, it would permit associations or organizations or combinations of the producers of different agricultural products; that is to say, the growers of wheat to combine with the growers of wool, or the growers of nuts, or the growers of citrus fruits, or the associations comprise within their membership only those who are devoted to any one particular agricultural or horticultural pursuit?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no doubt that the growers of wheat, and the growers of oats, and the growers of potatoes could all get into one association.

Mr. KING. Yes; and the growers of wool?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should think so, although, of course, that is not likely at all, because the business could not be handled in that way. It would be impossible to handle an association of men engaged in producing wheat and men engaged in producing wool, because the marketing arrangements would have to be entirely different and distinct.

Mr. KING. I am glad to have the views of the Senator. May I inquire further of the Senator from Montana, or the Senator from Minnesota, what reason there is for selecting the Secretary of Agriculture instead of the Federal Trade Commission as the depository of the power to enforce the act?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I explained my views fully in the speech I delivered in the Senate some days ago. The Secretary of Agriculture has in his department a Bureau of Markets; he has the statistics; he keeps track of market conditions and costs, and has the information before him all the time. The Trade Commission simply makes an investigation of particular cases.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am unable to perceive the wisdom of giving to an executive officer this authority.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course the Senator does not blame me because he is not able to see that.

Mr. KING. Of course I do not blame the Senator for anything. I merely regret the perversity of his judgment as it is occasionally manifested.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard the Senator's question in regard to the Secretary of Agriculture being given this power rather than the Federal Trade Commission, but I was not able to hear the answer of the Senator from Minnesota.

When the first bill on this subject came here about a year ago for the first time it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and to a subcommittee of that committee, of which I was one of the members. When the bill was finally reported out of the Judiciary Committee to the Senate it contained an amendment that reposed this power in the Federal Trade Commission instead of in the Secretary of Agriculture. There was one further amendment attached to that bill, and with those two amendments the House bill was reported to the Senate. Personally, I favored one of those amendments and voted for it. I was opposed to the other amendment; but I have always believed, I will say to the Senator, that the Federal Trade Commission is better equipped to discharge these duties than is the Secretary of Agriculture. The committee, however, thought otherwise, and they may be right. Those who are behind the bill felt differently; they wanted the power reposed in the Secretary of Agriculture. Personally, I am of the opinion that the bill would have been stronger if the authority had been reposed in the Federal Trade Commission; but it is not, in my judgment, a question of any very great importance. Some instrumentality, it was thought, must be given the power to carry out the provisions of the bill, and it seems very appropriate to give it to the Secretary of Agriculture in the first instance, with an appeal to the courts. I do not think it is vital at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I recall the attitude of the Senator from Nebraska, he has been one of the most earnest champions upon this floor of the Federal Trade Commission and has attributed to that organization a great deal of good. Undoubtedly the purpose back of the creation of the Federal Trade Commission was commendable. The Federal Trade Commission has machinery far greater than that possessed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the performance of the work which this bill seeks to impose upon the Secretary of Agriculture. I am very earnest in my appeal to the Senate to consider the unwisdom, the incongruity of conferring upon the head of a department quasi-legislative functions.

We have set up in the Government the Federal Trade Commission for the purpose of investigating evils and unfair practices and for the purpose of seeing that justice is done between producers and, indeed, in one sense between producers and consumers.

The law provides that when the commission have reason to believe that a partnership, corporation, or person has been using any unfair method of competition in trade or commerce, they shall proceed to make an investigation. It further provides that upon the direction of the President or either House of Congress they may investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the antitrust acts by any corporation. They have machinery, investigators, and lawyers for the purpose of investigating into such matters as would come within the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of this bill.

The Senator says that the Secretary of Agriculture has the reports of the Market Division or Bureau. If those reports are of any value whatever—and I express no opinion in regard to that—the Federal Trade Commission would have access to those reports, and they could ascertain their contents just as easily as the Secretary of Agriculture could. The Federal Trade Commission is composed of men who have judicial minds and judicial experience—some of them, at least. They are engaged in investigating and forming judgments as to business activities and the fairness of business dealings. It does seem to me that if we depart from the principle which was announced in the Federal Trade Commission act, and commit to a department investigations of the character provided in this bill, and the determination of the questions which call for determination in this bill, we are establishing a very unwise precedent.

I called the attention of one of the Senators by way of interrogatory yesterday, and again to-day, to the fact that if we select the Secretary of Agriculture, and make him a judge, and give him the power to determine certain facts, those engaged in manufacturing who violate the Sherman antitrust law may insist that the Secretary of Commerce shall have the power to investigate to see whether they are unduly enhancing the prices of their commodities; the bankers will deny the court's jurisdiction then and insist that the Secretary of the Treasury be their judge. In the end we will break down the Federal Trade Commission, destroy its usefulness and authority, and reduce the courts to impotency in matters which now are cognizable by them. It occurs to me that the bill as it was first reported, as I understood the Senator from Nebraska, when it contained the provision that the Federal Trade Commission should make this investigation, was in better shape, more logical, and more defensible than it is in its present form.

I shall move to amend by striking out, in line 9, page 2, the words "Secretary of Agriculture" and inserting "Federal Trade Commission," so that it will read:

That if the Federal Trade Commission shall have reason to believe that any such association monopolizes—

And so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator realizes, I suppose, that at this stage of the consideration of the bill, when we are about to vote on its passage, that kind of an amendment, while ordinarily I would have favored it, means redrafting a good share of the bill. The language would have to be changed, as I understand, in quite a number of places. Ordinarily I should have favored the amendment, although, as I said before, I do not think it is at all vital; but I hope the Senator will not now offer the amendment at a time when, if it is to be agreed to, we must suspend operations and go over the entire bill carefully, and see what changes are necessary to be made. It seems to me that it is so late that we would be justified in voting it down, even though it is meritorious.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess that I can not quite appreciate the force of the suggestion made by my distinguished friend. The lateness of the hour or the length of consideration of a bill ought not to deter us from making amendments if those amendments are for the public good and improve the bill.

It seems to me that we ought to be more interested in securing wise legislation than merely in obtaining legislation. There is too much legislation, anyway. We have enacted about 45,000 laws in the United States in the last few years, whereas other Governments having a population nearly as great as ours have passed but a few hundred. The curse of this age is too much legislation. The States are deluging the people with ill-digested and half-baked laws, and Congress is not very much better. We want to drown the people with laws, and cure the alleged ills to which society is subject with laws. We are going to make the people moral by law. We are going to cure all economic ills by law. There seems to be a conception in the minds of Senators and the people that there is a divine power in law. It is like the healing power of the king in ancient times; it was thought that if people could touch the person of the king they would be healed of all infirmities; and if the people can now see some statute, no matter how absurd or half-baked it is, all their ills are to vanish like the mists before the rising sun.

I think we should give a little more consideration to this proposed legislation. I understood that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]—a lawyer of great ability, a statesman of eminence, a man whose judgment should commend itself to Senators and to the people—after pointing out some manifest evils in the bill, intended to move to recommit it. I hope he will do so; but before that motion shall be put, if it is to be put, I suggest that we perfect the bill; and, much as my friend and others would like to have the bill passed, and passed quickly, I think we ought to vote upon this amendment.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is detained on official business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if a vote is impending on the Senate committee substitute, and I presume it is, I desire to say just a word before the vote is taken.

I wish it to be thoroughly understood, as we proceed to vote, that to reject the Senate substitute and to adopt the House text will be to remove the inhibition from setting up any milk monopoly in any one of the great cities of the country, and with no check upon anything they may do in the way of exacting exorbitant prices from consumers, except as it is provided in section 3 of the bill, the validity of which is open to most serious question, as pointed out in the very persuasive and informing discussion by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], which no one has attempted to answer at all, and as to the significance and operation of which even the proponents of the bill differ.

I want to advert to the history of this measure as it relates to the difference between the Senate committee substitute and the House text. The measure came before the Senate upon a bill which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate. That committee referred it to a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and myself. That subcommittee made a report to the full committee, pointing out the evil which would arise from the unrestricted authorization of monopolies under the bill.

There was no dissent in the committee, so far as my recollection now serves me, with respect to that matter. It went before the Judiciary Committee. No criticism whatever was made before the committee with respect to that feature of it. It never occurred to any member of the great Judiciary Committee of the Senate that that provision prohibiting monopoly would in any wise affect the material operation of the bill, so far as it should have a beneficial operation, and no one suggested that it would nullify the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. While I caused no record vote or anything of that kind, it is my recollection that I voted against one amendment. I voted for one and against one which the subcommittee reported. I would have voted for one and against the other if there had been a vote taken in the Senate, which was not done. I do not know that there was a formal roll call on the milk amendment, but I was opposed to that one amendment, and I so announced.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I spoke from recollection, and I have no recollection of the Senator from Nebraska voicing any opposition to that feature. However, if he did, his opposition was not sufficiently vigorous to even lead him to ask for a roll call or to prompt him to make a minority report.

That bill came to the Senate, and the Senate had it under consideration and under debate for parts of two days. The debate was participated in by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], under whose leadership the bill is before the Senate now, by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], each of whom has told the Senate that that provision in the bill now before us nullifies the bill. No one of them made any such suggestion when the bill was before us formerly, and, as I have pointed out, the Senator from South Dakota, who now tells us that that provision nullifies the effect of the bill, actually called the attention of the Senate to and commended the amendment to the bill at that time which forbade the setting up of monopolies under it.

The distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] took the floor three several times in favor of the measure and in favor of the substitute, and it was adopted without a suggestion upon this floor that that provision was not a wise one, or that it in any wise nullified the bill, so far as the virtues of it were concerned.

Now, there has been a marvelous change of opinion. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], upon being further advised, now thinks that it nullifies the bill. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] thinks that it nullifies the bill. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] thinks that it nullifies the bill. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] thinks that it nullifies the bill. Such obscurity of thought, such dullness of comprehension, when the matter was before us on the former occasion is, I venture to say, without a parallel in this body. That is all I care to say about it. I see no reason for such a marked change of viewpoint concerning the only matter that was in difference between the two Houses when the bill was formerly before us.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator that we are approaching an election.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want the statement of the Senator from Montana to pass unchallenged. I know that from the time we began to consider this bill, and through the hearings—and if the Senator will examine the hearings he will find the question often cropped out—the one amendment the Senator now speaks of I was opposed to. I was in favor of the other one, and I said so a great many times. I did not make any great fuss about it, it is true, and I would not now.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would like to say to the Senator that of course his recollection will be more acute than mine. I speak purely from recollection as to the Senator's attitude. The fact remains that he did not speak against it on the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that. There was no debate on it on the floor. It would have been useless to have indulged in debate. It could not have accomplished anything at that time.

I agree with the Senator that there has been a wonderful change. I am delighted that there has been, and for once in my life I can say that a majority have come over to my view and are taking my viewpoint, and the indications are now that it is going to be enacted into law, something that happens so very seldom in this body that I have a right to make a note of it when it does occur.

I would not be ashamed at all if I changed my mind, because I have done that lots of times. I think it is sometimes an evidence of wisdom; though sometimes of fear, it is true. I do not know what caused anyone else to change his mind, if anyone else has done so. It may be that it is because there is an election approaching, or it may be it is because the administration is behind the bill as it passed the House.

The indications are that it is an administration measure now; and if it is, I want to congratulate the administration for getting over into the same wagon with me. I am glad to welcome the administration. I am glad to be with it. I would a great deal rather be with them than otherwise; but for once, if the administration is over on the right side, I am glad it has come over. I do not suppose it came over on my account particularly, but it may be that it was done in spite of me. At least, I am glad it has come over.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I stated on yesterday, in some remarks on the bill and on the substitute, my reasons for opposition to the substitute measure proposed by the Judiciary Committee, and after I had concluded my remarks came a colloquy between the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and myself as to my attitude a year or more ago relative to another bill, which he called the prototype of the pending bill. I was about to let the matter rest with the statement I made in my colloquy with the Senator from Montana yesterday, and I am inclined to let it rest there now.

I want to say, however—and the thought is suggested by a remark of the Senator from Nebraska—that I have not known for a moment as to how the administration stood with reference to this bill. I never thought of how the administration might stand in regard to the bill.

I made up my mind, as I stated yesterday, that the part of the substitute relating to monopoly would take the heart out of the bill and defeat the very purpose intended to be accomplished by the bill. I came to that conclusion after considerable thought and close study, and especially a study of the opinion of Chief Justice White in the Standard Oil case and the showing he made there of the close relationship between agreements in restraint of trade and monopolies; how the plain inference was that evidence of the one could be produced in support of the charge of the other, as, for example, if it were charged that the association here provided for had attempted to create a monopoly, or was a monopoly, the same proof could be offered in support of that charge as would be offered in support of a charge that an agreement had been made in restraint of trade. These alone are the considerations under which I can not support the substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Committee on the Judiciary report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu to insert:

That persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively handling and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce such products of the persons so engaged and in processing or preparing such products for so marketing the same. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof, as such producers, and conform to one or both of the following requirements:

First. That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own therein; or

Second. That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 per cent per annum:

And provided further, That the association shall not deal in products of nonmembers to an amount greater in value than such as are handled by it for members.

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the creation of or attempt to create a monopoly, or to exempt any association organized hereunder from any proceedings instituted under the act entitled "An act to create a Federal trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, on account of unfair methods of competition in commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

So the bill was passed.

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, simply for the purpose of making it the unfinished business, and not expecting to proceed with its consideration to-night, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3076.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3076) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not press the motion at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I simply want to have the bill made the unfinished business, and then I will ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator expect to go on with it tomorrow?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Possibly, if the appropriation bill which is ready shall then have been disposed of.

Mr. KING. The attention of many Senators has just been called to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I gave notice several days ago that I would call it up. I am very anxious to have it considered, but I shall not ask the Senate to proceed with its consideration to-night.

Mr. KING. Of course, I can not object, but I shall vote against the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3076) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he intends to go on with the appropriation bill to-night?

Mr. WARREN. Not to any great extent; but I wish to have the consideration of the bill begun, I will say to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not make a motion, but will submit a request for unanimous consent, because if the motion is made and carried it will displace the unfinished business which has just been taken up.

Mr. WARREN. I did not have in mind making the appropriation bill the unfinished business; I merely wished to have it considered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The motion of the Senator from Wyoming, if agreed to, will make the appropriation bill the unfinished business. I suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. I am compelled then, with all humility, to ask unanimous consent that I may have the appropriation bill which I have named taken up.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will take it up with humility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I make the usual request for unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it may be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before assenting to the request, may I ask the Senator if he will not give us a chance to read the bill to-night before proceeding with it?

Mr. WARREN. It is to be read in full, of course, but I do not care to have it read twice before it is considered.

Mr. KING. I shall not object. I hope, however, the Senator will not take up the amendments to-night, but will give us an opportunity to read the bill, which has just come here.

Mr. WARREN. The amendments will be read slowly and any amendment that it is desired shall go over, if any Senator requests that it go over, will not be considered to-night.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether he intends to proceed with the bill?

Mr. WARREN. For a few moments. Why not?

Mr. KING. Because this bill has just been brought here.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; it has lain here all week.

Mr. KING. But we have been considering other measures in the meantime.

Mr. WARREN. I did not ask to have it taken up until the conclusion of the bill which has just been voted on. I have had the patience to wait for action upon that measure.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that there was any particular patience on the part of the Senator from Wyoming. We were considering other matters of importance. It is not a question of patience; it is a question of orderly procedure; and if the Senator from Wyoming insists on proceeding to-night, I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

RICHARD P. McCULLOUGH AND I. C. JOHNSON, JR.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Several days ago, approximately a week or so ago, I think, the bill (H. R. 2558) for the relief of Richard P. McCullough and the bill (H. R. 7870) for the relief of I. C. Johnson, jr., which had been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, were reported adversely by that committee, and on motion of the chairman of the committee the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], were indefinitely postponed. The bills were not particularly considered by the committee, but the action was taken simply upon a letter from the department. I have seen the chairman of the committee and he has no objection to the request which I am about to make. I have also seen the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who was present at the meeting when the action was taken, and he has no objection to the request. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bills, respectively, were indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered, and, if that request is granted, I shall then ask that the bills be again referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I may add that Senators interested in the bills had no opportunity to present them to the committee, as they were absent on the day the measures were disposed of by the committee. The bills are for the relief of two officers in the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and the votes whereby the bills were indefinitely postponed are reconsidered.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, I ask that the bills be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kendrick	Oddie	Sterling
Brandegge	King	Pittman	Swanson
Broussard	Ladd	Poinexter	Underwood
Bursum	Lodge	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCormick	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
France	McKinley	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	McNary	Shortridge	Watson, Ga.
Glass	Moses	Spencer	Willis
Hedlin	Newberry	Stanfield
Jones, Wash.	Norris	Stanley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAMERON answered to his name when called.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the roll call 39 Senators have responded. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance immediately of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. HALE, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. PHIPPS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

After some delay, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. HARRELD, Mr. ERNST, Mr. LENROOT, and Mr. MYERS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

RECESS

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, February 9, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 8, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord, rich in mercy, great in love, and marvelous in good works, Thou dost transcend our utmost conception. But we look toward Thee as we watch the morning with its endless stretch and its boundless space. Compassed as we are with human limitations and earthly infirmities, we ask for power to encourage that which is wise and for strength to restrain that which is unwise. In all of our lives may there be diminishing evil and growing goodness. Through the morning, through the noon, through the evening, and through to the end may we stand for God and His kingdom of love and peace, to be extended in human hearts and homes everywhere. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

THE COTTON-BOLL WEEVIL.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a statement prepared by Mr. B. R. Coad, of the Bureau of Entomology, United States Department of Agriculture, giving the results of experiments made by various farmers in the cotton belt in the control of the boll weevil by the use of powdered calcium arsenate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ROSE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for several days, on account of the death of his sister, Mrs. A. P. Ellis.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

The motion was agreed to.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the call rests with the Committee on Claims.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS OF LESS THAN $1,000.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up for further consideration the bill (H. R. 7912) to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 7912, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on Wednesday last the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] had the floor.

Mr. EDMONDS. I had the time, but I had yielded some time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] is prevented by illness from being present and completing the use of his time.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] is recognized.

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill with regard to claims under $1,000 against the Federal Government. The committee will offer an amendment which limits it to claims caused by the negligence of any officer or employee of the Government acting within the scope of his employment. It is intended to give to the head of each department and establishment the authority to examine into and decide upon such claims and to certify them to the Congress for appropriation. These small bills have heretofore gone to the Committee on Claims. That committee has a great deal to do. The result is that these bills have moved very slowly and people do not get justice with any great rapidity, either in the allowance or disallowance of their small claims. If you should refer these cases to the Court of Claims, the parties would be put to great expense, trouble, and loss of time. For that reason it has not been thought best to send them to the Court of Claims. It is hoped that the departments will act with considerable rapidity and that people will get results. Personally I did not have an opportunity to vote on this bill, and I did not vote to report it favorably or unfavorably. I am not very enthusiastic about the bill. I have very serious doubts as to the advisability of authorizing any department to exercise such power. This power is in the Congress, like all claims against the Government. I do not know whether these people have any right to decide upon it. Personally I do not think they are very well equipped; I do not think they would make very good judges.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice in lines 9 and 10 that authority is hereby conferred on the heads of each department. That means in about forty-nine cases out of fifty it is referred to some subordinate in the department.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it means a private hearing.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It means taking money out of the Treasury of the United States after a private hearing by a subordinate of the department.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me to answer?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to say that this only allows a certification of the claim to the Appropriations Committee to make the appropriation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the evidence upon which the claim is allowed to be certified to Congress?

Mr. EDMONDS. I presume the committee would hear any evidence that it wished.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I may say that other men more enthusiastically in favor of this bill will take the floor, and I do not wish to take up much time. The Claims Committee is an appropriation committee, and claims should come back to it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In lines 9 and 10 on page 2—

Mr. LITTLE. May I suggest to the gentleman that he put his question to some gentleman who will present the bill from that side more fully. I am not particularly favorable to it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I would like to know if the bill provides for the consideration of claims that accrued prior to the passage of the act; in other words, is it retroactive?

Mr. LITTLE. The chairman says no.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Does the gentleman know whether the committee has considered the question of having the claims reviewed or passed upon by the Budget Bureau or any other tribunal?

Mr. LITTLE. The committee in the last five years has considered every possible aspect of this case and this is the result.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I have but very little time and, as I said, I am not enthusiastic about the bill. The chairman when he takes the floor will answer these questions. I would like to finish my statement.

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman from Kansas will allow me, any claim that is in the department that is a modern claim, that is alive in the department to-day, would probably be acted upon under this bill.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I have a case where a star-route carrier ran over another man's automobile. He can not sue for damages and there is no appropriation. I wondered whether that claim could be considered under this bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think so.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. How far back would it go?

Mr. EDMONDS. I would say that I do not know how the department would interpret it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. There ought to be some specific time so that claims arising after a certain date would come under the bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the committee would be willing to accept an amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state my view of it. I have been on the committee five years and am very much interested in it. As I say, I am not enthusiastic about this, but after five years' discussion of these difficulties the committee has, all except myself, reported in favor of this bill. In deference to the judgment of my colleagues on the committee, and because I can not think of anything better, I am not opposing the bill, and I may possibly vote for it. I thought it was my duty to call your attention to some of the points concerning it. I started to say that I do not think these people are very well equipped to pass on the claims. I doubt if they have any real authority to do it, but, gentlemen, if somebody else will tell us a better way to handle these bills and get results, I will vote for that. I once heard Lord Roseberry in the House of Lords make a speech in favor of home rule in Ireland which he afterwards opposed. I remember one thing that he said, and that was "I am ready to take a leap in the dark." And so am I. I can say to these gentlemen that I think their questions are all very pertinent and sensible and I think my colleagues ought to answer them, but I do not think you ought to ask me to, because I think about the same as you do. If you can find a better way, go and do it; and if not, I think you ought not to oppose this.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I have but little time.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is taking time to support the bill, and it seems to me he ought to be able to answer questions.

Mr. LITTLE. I will say frankly that there are a lot of questions I can not answer.

Mr. DOWELL. Then I think the gentleman ought to let some one have the floor that can answer them.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman knows more about it than I do let him take the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman have any opinion, being a very good lawyer, that this bill comes in conflict with section 1 of Article III of the Constitution, which provides that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the various courts?

Mr. LITTLE. I just said that I had doubt as to the authority of these people to act at all.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. ELLIS. Every claim that I know about which comes before our committee has no judicial standing and could not be enforced in any court in the land.

Mr. LITTLE. I can not yield any further. You can not sue the Government unless Congress authorizes. I want to make some of this speech myself. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] that under the rules of the House I am entitled to time, and if he wants to keep me from using it let him go and get a new rule. As I have been studying this difficulty five years I feel I should give you the results of my experience. I have endeavored to call attention to the situation which seems to me, after five years of experience, to present the difficulties that I have suggested. I do not like the bill very well, but I am satisfied it is the best thing that has been offered, and if some of these gentlemen will offer something better I shall be very glad to get behind it. These little claims have been thrown into the hopper and have lain there and have gotten no consideration whatsoever.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman will excuse me at present until I finish this statement. I think people with little claims are entitled to just as much consideration as people with big claims. The little claims do not arouse anybody's support enthusiastically, while the big ones do. While I may not even vote for this bill, and I am going to listen to the arguments for and against it, I believe it presents an opportunity to get these small claims heard and disposed of. They will come back to an appropriation committee, probably that on claims. I do not know what that committee will do about it. They may have another hearing. I have presented the ideas that I have about the matter, and I shall be glad now to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. Even though this bill were passed, could a department recommend the appropriation of a certain amount of money for a claim of legal standing?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; they can recommend anything they want to.

Mr. BEGG. Would they be likely to do it?

Mr. LITTLE. I am sure that some of them would.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I understand that the words "legal claim" were stricken out of the bill, or are to be. The language is:

Such amount as may be found to be due to any claimant shall be reported to Congress as a legal claim for payment—

And so forth.

I believe it is proposed to change the word "reported" to the word "certified" and to strike out the words "as a legal claim."

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; that it shall be "certified" to Congress.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Would the gentleman regard that as a legal claim for Congress to pay?

Mr. LITTLE. No; it is not a legal claim; it is an equitable claim.

Mr. KING. That is a legal claim.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; in a sense it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not able to promise the House that I can give any more information than the gentleman who preceded me has given. My own attitude is much like his. I think there are risks connected with the passage of this bill, and yet it is designed to meet a condition that is deplorable, dishonorable, unjust, and for which some remedy must be provided. If the House can propose a better one, it ought to be adopted. I do not think the House will find the committee very contentious about it. There are just claims pending before the Committee on Claims—small claims, some of them 10, 12, 15 years old—on which the Congress has never acted. They are usually claims of humble, small people, people who are not able to send agents here to lobby their claims through.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does this bill remedy that situation?

Mr. BOX. In part only.

Mr. WALSH. It does not apply to claims accruing at the time of the passage.

Mr. BOX. No; but it will tend to relieve the situation hereafter. These claims are coming in fast, and perhaps the constructive statesmanship of this House can suggest something that will even relieve that.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I am wondering why the committee limited these claims to those that may accrue after the passage of the bill. Why not take care of those claims already in?

Mr. BOX. I shall not undertake to answer that question because I am afraid I can throw no satisfactory light upon it. I want the House to understand that the committee has not brought this in inconsiderately. I know and, of course, everyone knows that the Government does not have to pay these little bills, but any man who is acquainted with them, who has read these appeals, these humble expressions of confidence in what the Government will do, and has then had to make excuse after excuse for their not being paid, can readily understand the situation. The committee has some thousand bills to pass upon. It gets some of them on the calendar, some of them on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. An independent thinking man, or a man moved by a whim—one Member—can then deprive the claimant the right to have the House consider at all. I feel, and I am sure the other members of the committee feel, in honor compelled to present this as the best measure we have been able to find up to now. I doubt if anyone is fully satisfied with it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman intend that these claims shall be all taken from the committee and paid by the departments?

Mr. BOX. Only those coming within the prescribed classification will be considered by the departments. None will be paid by the departments.

Mr. DOWELL. It is expected that the departments will take care of all of them.

Mr. BOX. The department will pass on them and report them to the House for appropriation. When a claim has thus been passed upon Congress will be more or less obligated to make the appropriation. I do not think that is absolutely binding.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any question about it? Will not this make it absolutely necessary to make the appropriation?

Mr. BOX. It would probably in the end. I do not know that we could say that another House shall appropriate.

Mr. DOWELL. Will not this bill absolutely prevent one whose claim the department will not allow, which comes within this classification, from ever getting any consideration whatever before the House or before any committee for the payment of his claim, no matter how just it may be?

Mr. BOX. It is possible that it is open to that objection. I think it is not.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not open to that objection, and is not that the necessary result of this legislation?

Mr. BOX. That does not follow.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, if the department fails to pay a claim and gives it no consideration whatever, even though it may be a just claim, the committee here, of course, would not give further consideration.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Surely the gentleman does not mean to say that Congress could not pass a law to settle a claim? Congress can pass a law to allow a claim any time it wants to do so.

Mr. DOWELL. That is not the question I am asking. As a matter of fact, that will be the ultimate result of it. The fact that you permit the department to pay a claim means that you dispend with it, so far as Congress is concerned, and no man will ever receive pay from this House upon any claim that has been turned down by a department.

Mr. BOX. There would be nothing, I think, to prevent the presenting of a claim or prohibiting the committee from reporting a meritorious claim. Ordinarily the committee, assuming that the department dealt fairly with the claim, would rely upon their statement; but I think that if a case of gross injustice were to come up, the committee ought to consider it and that this House would consider it.

Mr. DOWELL. But where you establish a precedent that a claim that has been turned down by the department can be considered it would then bring about that condition, and I take it they would not consider a claim that had been turned down.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask how much consideration a small claim gets now before one of our committees when it has been absolutely turned down by the department?

Mr. DOWELL. I do not know.

Mr. SNELL. I have been on the committee eight years—

Mr. DOWELL. If it is a just claim it will receive fair consideration before the committee.

Mr. SNELL. The first question the committee asks is, What department has made an investigation and what do they say about it?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And pays attention to that report—

Mr. DOWELL. They do not follow it at all.

Mr. SNELL. They very largely follow it from my experience.

Mr. DOWELL. That I know.

Mr. SNELL. They do.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. I do.

Mr. SNELL. To what committee will it go when a claim comes back certified?

Mr. BOX. To the Appropriations Committee, I presume.

Mr. LITTLE. The Claims Committee is an appropriation committee.

Mr. BOX. That is true, but I doubt if the Committee on Claims would report the appropriation to be made under this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Just as much an appropriations committee as the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOX. But I do think the membership of the House ought not to be satisfied with the presentation of these difficulties. It is easy to dismiss a matter and pass it up and leave people to suffer injustice because the problem is difficult to deal with. The responsibility is on us. Congress can not be compelled to pay such claims, however just; yet in honor it must pay the just ones. If the House is not satisfied with this measure I hope that it will amend it, because I have been very much dissatisfied, and I am sure other members of the committee have been dissatisfied, with the large number of little claims that have not been considered and will never be considered. The responsibility is on us to deal with this in some way. Your committee has brought it here knowing that you want to do what ought to be done, and that something must be done.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Has the committee discussed this way of solving this problem—to increase the Committee on Claims to 35, subdivide that into seven subcommittees, and introduce an omnibus bill, just exactly like pension claims are introduced, and thereby expedite the consideration of these claims?

Mr. BOX. I am not sure that particular plan has been considered. Your Claims Committee has brought bills in here for consideration much more rapidly than you have considered them. While your Claims Committee has more than it can properly dispose of, the fault does not lie there, because it is bringing you more grist than you can grind.

Mr. LAYTON. You can consider all of these thousands of claims if they are brought in here in that manner. The pensioners of the United States realized that proposition in the beginning, and being organized all over the whole country with Grand Army posts they brought such pressure to bear upon the Congress that they introduced an omnibus bill, and that is the way to dispose of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any member of the Committee on Claims opposed to the bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. I reserve the remainder of my time. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twelve minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the question was raised here whether or not after the passage of this bill and some department or bureau or commission or agency of the Government should pass upon the claims and then certify them to the Government, as a matter of course the Congress would be forced to pay and appropriate upon that action.

There is no question of doubt whatever concerning that point. By this bill, if it is passed, we are conferring upon the departments and bureaus and commissions and agencies of the Government authority to pass upon these claims and to certify them to the Congress for payment. And when so certified they come, not back to the Claims Committee, but such certification goes directly to the Appropriations Committee, and it is bound, as a matter of course, to bring in provisions in the appropriation bill, and in the first deficiency bill, for payment on those certifications. We can not then take up the question of whether or not the claim should be allowed. It has passed out of our hands. By our action in passing this bill we place it beyond our control.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Does not the gentleman think the heads of these various departments are just as qualified and competent to pass on the legitimacy of these claims as our committee is?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not. If the gentleman from Oregon had spent as much time in the Claims Committee looking into these claims and studying them carefully as the "gentleman from Texas" has, he would not have asked that question. Why, by this bill we are not limited in our conferring of power to the heads of departments. We have 10 departments of Government, the Secretaries—members of the Cabinet, if you please. It would be bad enough if we limited the jurisdiction to the heads of the departments, because there are many departments that exercise no judicial function thus far. Some of them have gotten to exercise both judicial and legislative functions of government, but there are yet some departments that do not do it. There are some departments that have not the necessary legal departments connected with them to pass upon legal matters. But I want you to note that we do not stop with departments. This bill provides that any head of "any department, any independent commission, any board, any bureau, any office, or any agency, or any other establishment of the Government" has authority to pass upon claims so long as the maximum amount is not over $1,000. Now, between individuals, between citizens, whenever one has a claim against another, there are certain rules and provisions of law by which those claims must be decided. There is some stability about the method of procedure.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Do the words "board," "bureau," "office," and "agency" mean a bureau within one of the executive departments?

Mr. BLANTON. Both within and outside of the executive departments. In other words, the 10 departments and each bureau in them has this authority by this bill, but after you confer it upon them, then you go beyond and confer it upon any independent commission, any board, or any office or agency that the Congress has established. For instance, take the Budgetary Commission; it has such authority under this act. Take the old commission for readjusting the salaries of the civilian employees of the Government; that would have had this authority conferred upon it. Any commission, for whatever purpose it was organized and inaugurated and established by Congress, comes within the purview of this law. I am sure that my colleagues should pause before they resort to this radical departure from the rules that have been established for years with reference to the consideration of claims.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Like the gentleman, I have been on the War Claims Committee ever since I have been here in Congress and have spent some time on it, and I am interested in the legislation. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think we ought to have some way for paying small claims different than the custom that is followed at the present time?

Mr. BLANTON. That is a legitimate question and deserves an answer.

Mr. SNELL. So far as I am concerned, because I am interested in it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want my colleagues to remember this fact concerning this bill, that any legal claim does not need this legislation.

Mr. SNELL. If you had a legal claim of $75 against this Government, what would you do with it?

Mr. BLANTON. It would be collectible through the Court of Claims. This bill does not apply to legal claims.

Mr. SNELL. I am taking what you call legal claims.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill is seeking a remedy for payment of claims that have no legal status whatever.

Mr. SNELL. That is what we are talking about.

Mr. BLANTON. If they had legal status, Members would pursue some other method of collecting them; but this bill is with respect to claims that have no legal status. It is with respect to claims that you can not collect by law; it is with respect to claims the payment of which depends entirely upon the gratuity of the Congress.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. BLANTON. I am getting to it now.

Mr. SNELL. All right.

Mr. BLANTON. We may provide a proper method. The chairman of the committee and other members have said that the committee was overwhelmed with work; that so many bills were coming to the committee that it was impossible almost for them to pass upon them. Now, I was a member of the Claims Committee—it is not considered a very important committee—yet I have done the hardest work I have ever done in my whole life while a member of that committee—honest, conscientious, hard work. This bill seeks to evade work. It is "passing the buck," shirking responsibility, shirking our duties as Congressmen, shirking our duties as members of committees. Why, we have so many Members here we have to put some of them on the Claims Committee in order that they may have a committee assignment at all. And if they do not pass upon these claims, who is to do it? Who should pass upon a claim that has no legal status but a Member of Congress? Who should pass upon a claim that is dependent for payment solely upon the gratuity of the Government? Who should do it but Congress? Are we not the direct representatives of the people of this Government? Are they not looking to us to pass upon these matters?

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question? Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that these claims that come before us are gratuities on the part of the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. I will guarantee that every claim that is pending before the Claims Committee now, if it is paid, will be the result of gratuity on the part of Congress and the Government.

Mr. SNELL. I can not deny that so far as the Claims Committee is concerned, but so far as the War Claims Committee is concerned I can say distinctly that I know—and I have spent as much time on this committee as any other gentleman—some were not gratuities on the part of the Government. If they were against the gentleman from Texas or myself and we were responsible financially they would collect them. But there is no way under heaven by which they can get their pay from the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want the gentleman from New York to understand that I am contending that all of them are claims that ought not to be paid. Even though they have no legal status, many of them are just and should be paid. And many are unjust and should not be paid.

Mr. SNELL. I want to confine my colloquy with the gentleman to claims that should be paid, and I ask the gentleman what remedy he has for taking care of those claims, and I want to ask him if he does not think there should be some method instead of the method we are following at the present time? I have been waiting for the gentleman to answer my question, because I am interested in it.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to answer the gentleman to his satisfaction. If the committee would take up those claims which have a good status, the status of which will be readily recognized by every Member of Congress when presented, they could be disposed of on their merits without delay. For instance, let me illustrate: The law is that you can not recover from this Government by reason of the action of tort committed by an employee of the Government against somebody else, and that is the law of the land. Down in my native State and in my natal city where I was born, Houston, Tex., but not in my district, during the war there was a mutiny in a colored troop stationed there. They mutinied against the lawful authority in a camp there, and they armed themselves with their rifles and bayonets and pistols and in a whole company went down the streets of Houston stabbing their bayonets through the bodies of women and young girls, if you please, through the bodies of policemen, and killed and injured many citizens, including several young girls. Now, you can not collect as a matter of law from the Government for injuries such as that, but as a gratuity the Government pays such a claim.

When I was a member of that committee several years ago the committee took up those claims that I just referred to, and the committee itself, every member of it voting unanimously, increased every claim in every bill on that particular matter. Not a single one of those bills has ever been called up on the floor of Congress for passage; not one.

But take the old Sevier claim, for instance, involving over $100,000,000; an old, worn-out land claim that is over 100 years old. The committee wasted much of its time on that. All these bills that were passed in the dying hours of the last Congress by the Senate, one after another, carrying several hundred thousand dollars to a claim, were put through here without argument. My answer to the gentleman from New York is this: If the gentleman would have the committee bring in only the good bills, the ones that Congress would have confidence in, and confine its action to those, so that the Members of this House would not lose confidence in their Claims Committee, then you would be able to get action on practically every one of them, and you would not have them accumulating there. They would not come here under suspicion.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. There are claims before the War Claims Committee that are admitted by everybody to be absolutely right and just. They have passed this body once or twice, and they have passed the other body once or twice, but the bills carrying them have not become laws. Suppose a claimant under such a bill is dead and nobody contends that the amount is not owing to him. What I want to take care of is such a fellow; the fellow that has a small claim that is absolutely honest and just. I want to see that he gets his claim paid. I am not interested in those claims involving hundreds of thousands of dollars. We are talking here in connection with legislation for the benefit of a man who has a small but legitimate claim against the Government, and I think we should take some steps to take care of such claims.

Mr. LAYTON rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], who is nearly always present, frequently offers good suggestions; I think he has offered the best suggestion I have heard recently—he offered it a moment ago—and that is that when the committee passes upon these claims and finds that there is a bunch of good claims they should bring them in here in an omnibus bill, and embrace only those that are good in the omnibus bill, such as Members would not question, and then you could get them all considered at one time.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is not talking about conditions that actually exist. I am talking about conditions that exist, not what might be at certain times. I am talking about claims that are honest and just and which nobody denies. Can the gentleman show me how a man can get such a claim passed?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] has suggested an omnibus bill.

Mr. SNELL. How can you get it through the Congress?

Mr. LAYTON. We get pension bills passed through the House for old war veterans without any trouble at all.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. We have 14 omnibus pension bills pending now, and the old soldiers are dying every day.

Mr. LAYTON. We do get the omnibus pension bills through for the old war veterans.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. We have 14 omnibus pension bills pending now.

Mr. SNELL. Take the average small claim which a man has against the Government. He would rather throw it away than undergo all the trouble in trying to get it through.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can not cite an omnibus pension bill that has failed in a Congress. Such bills always pass before Congress adjourns.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I can show omnibus bills that have failed, and I can show some that we can not have a conference on.

Mr. BLANTON. Some possibly failed in the famous filibuster when all the main supply bills failed, but—

Mr. SNELL. I do not know about the filibuster, but I know that pension bills failed in the last session of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a better way by which Congress itself can pass upon this matter. I do not think it is fair to delegate authority to every little subchief and every little sub-bureau and every little board and every little commission of the Government. It would mulct the United States Treasury.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Would this bill result in anything more than a recommendation from the departments and independent establishments to Congress for the allowance of the claims that they review?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; because the gentleman from Nebraska has had much to do with accounting and auditing, and he knows that their certification under this bill would come back to Congress in the nature of an audited claim by reason of this very bill, and whenever an audited claim comes to Congress the Committee on Appropriations always appropriates for it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I may say to the gentleman that under the provisions of the law this measure would not bring that matter within the jurisdiction of the accounting system.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. I do not believe that this would relieve the Committee on Claims of one single bill, because as to every bill that is turned down by any of these departments and these bureaus and these commissions and these boards and these agencies and these other establishments of the Government upon which we are conferring this power, whenever they turn a bill down then the bill that is turned down would come before this Committee on Claims for action and consideration.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KING. I will ask this question for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Texas an opportunity to dilate further if he wishes. It appears here that the Committee on Claims have reported out more bills than the House can take care of. Does not the gentleman think a great deal of our difficulty in passing upon these claims is due to the archaic rules of the House relating to the Unanimous Consent Calendar, so that one Member from a distant district can object to a bill and stop its consideration?

Mr. LAYTON. That is a part of the difficulty.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois has escaped the force of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], which would lay aside all that proposition, which is that the good claims could be brought in here in an omnibus bill that could be passed all at one time with almost as little time spent in the consideration of it as you would give to any one of the claims.

Mr. LAYTON. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the best suggestion that has been offered. We would not be delegating our authority. We would not be losing control over the matter. We would still give these claims our personal consideration. We would not turn these claims over to some little $1,200 clerk down in a department to whom they were delegated by some bureau chief or some commission chief.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman recall the history of war claim omnibus bills for many years before Congress, passed frequently by one body or the other but seldom enacted into law, notwithstanding they were omnibus bills? Does the gentleman recall the history of omnibus bills from the Committee on Claims, which were passed by the House and passed with amendments by the Senate, but never got any further, none of them ever becoming laws?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Illinois surely is not in favor of this kind of legislation?

Mr. MANN. I am surely in favor of this bill, and I think I can convince the gentleman from Texas that it is a good bill. If he will yield me the time I will try to do it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy Department at the present time has jurisdiction to settle small claims up to $500.

Mr. BLANTON. Under certain circumstances.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think one department of the Government ought to have jurisdiction under certain circumstances to settle claims, and yet that people who have similar claims against other departments should be compelled to come to Congress and wait and perhaps be deprived of an equitable adjustment of their claims?

Mr. BLANTON. I think I followed the gentleman from Massachusetts into voting against that bill at the time it was passed. I know I have voted against all such measures, and I think he did.

Mr. WALSH. I did not vote against it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas was here when that bill passed, and I do not think the RECORD will show that he voted against it.

Mr. BLANTON. I have voted against all delegation of legislative authority to the departments.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not vote against the bill which gave that authority to the Post Office Department.

Mr. BLANTON. I have voted against all such measures.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman voted for the Post Office bill which passed carrying that provision.

Mr. BLANTON. I think if the gentleman will go to the RECORD he will find I did not vote for it.

Mr. MANN. I am very sure that the RECORD will not show that the gentleman voted against it. He is always here and he always votes, and nobody voted against that bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I think I voted against it, because I have been against this proposition ever since I have been here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman from Texas will allow me to refresh his memory, perhaps what he voted against was the omnibus bill authorizing the payment of some of these claims against the Navy Department. I have had to present numerous such bills, where ships of the United States have collided with other vessels or with docks. Now, in regard to small claims, I have had to take up the time of the House in this and previous Congresses with many of them. In one day we passed bills to settle claims from the State of Washington, one of a man whose cow was killed by eating Government dynamite, and another of a man whose bull's neck was broken by getting tangled up in a forest reserve telephone wire. Both those claimants were equitably entitled to be paid, both claims were for less than $100, and the time used and the paper and money spent in getting those bills through the House of Representatives and through the Senate and signed by the President resulted in an unnecessary waste. Both claims could have been settled under a law like the one now proposed.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman why there is so much trouble about claims. Let me mention the old claim of the McClintic Marshall Construction Co. The bill was introduced by the chairman of this committee for one of his constituents in his district.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to correct that statement. That was not the claim of one of my constituents at all. It was a claim which came from Pittsburgh.

Mr. BLANTON. It was a Pennsylvania gentleman, who possibly will be one of his constituents some of these days.

Mr. EDMONDS. It was one of the bills fathered by the gentleman's friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. BLANTON. This was not a small claim. It was a claim involving $790,000.

Mr. SNELL. Does this bill cover that kind of a claim?

Mr. BLANTON. Just one moment. That claim originally involved over $1,000,000. It was pending here for years. It was based on a claim for loss which they alleged they sustained by reason of building the Gatun Locks for the Panama Canal. They had their witnesses who testified before the committee, and as a basis of their claim they alleged that they put in a better class of material in the construction of those locks than the contract called for.

They claimed that they used a better class of skilled labor in building those Gatun Locks than the contract called for. I sent to Mr. McAdoo and had him look up the old contract. I waded through that contract, with all the papers, and I confronted the representatives of that company while they were testifying before the committee with the contract. If you get the hearings, which are printed, you will see the colloquy that occurred. I said, "Your claim as a basis for this bill is that you used a better class of material than the contract called for." "Yes." "Here is your contract, which says in the construction of the Gatun Locks you are to use first-class A No. 1 materials, the best obtainable. Is there anything better than that?" "No."

There was the situation, and yet gentlemen speak about some one objecting to claims. It is necessary sometimes to have the right to object on unanimous-consent day to some claims. I objected to that claim for several years and kept it down, and yet in the dying hours of the last Congress the Senate passed that bill without any consideration and without any argument. It came over here in one of the appropriation bills in the dying hours of Congress and was passed by almost a unanimous vote. Nearly $800,000 of the people's money on one such claim. It pays us to look out for these matters. Those honest and just should be paid, but among them are a lot that are not honest or just. There are a lot of claims that ought not to be paid, and it calls for the very best judgment and consideration of this Congress. We ought not to pass the buck. We ought not to pass this over to every little subclerk of every board and every commission of this Government.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, assuming that all the facts stated by the gentleman from Texas are true concerning the celebrated Pennsylvania claim, I wonder if the departments could do worse than Congress did in allowing that claim. There is a demand for some tribunal to settle just claims against this Government and a statement of the facts must convince any fair-minded man that goes into the subject that we should give some redress now. I have in mind some claims that have been before Congress to my knowledge for more than 15 years. I have in mind one claim of about $180, where a safe in a post office was robbed, which this bill will not affect I am sorry to say, where it has passed the House three times and we have been unable to get it through the Senate, not because they repudiated it but because they did not get the bill up for passage.

There is one branch of Congress that has got to a point where it does not take up small matters any more. Matters of international importance are discussed there almost exclusively, with the result that they do not get to these small claims over there. Where these claims are just, where the people feel that they have a grievance, it does a very great harm not to pay them within a reasonable time. There is only one way to pay them now, and that is to get a special bill through Congress.

In my district I have a star-route carrier of mail, who ran into an automobile and injured a man and his family, and as a result they filed a claim against the Post Office Department. I took it up with the Post Office Department, and they said "We have no appropriation for it; you will have to get a special bill through Congress." I introduced a bill and it will sleep there long after I am out of Congress. These folks can not get redress. They have a good case against the Government. Justice is withheld and they can not get relief.

Now, you speak of the omnibus bill route. Candidly, if an omnibus claims bill could be carefully prepared and would get through the Senate promptly, that would be the best plan.

But we know it will not work and it does not work now and never did satisfactorily work. Now, this is the only relief I know of. It is true that there are objections to it, but you can find fault with any plan; there is no system but what you could find in it some defect or objection. It seems to me that with the claims limited to $1,000 you can clean the record of larger ones more promptly and thus get somewhere. But here is what bothers me, this bill only applies to claims arising after the passage of this act.

Now, gentlemen, that will still permit a repudiation of a debt. If there is any argument for this bill, it ought to apply to honest, just claims that have had the approval of Congress time and time again and yet never were paid. You should not shut out from the same remedy claims now due citizens from the Government. I am going to propose an amendment. I do not know whether it will pass, but I hope it will. I think we ought to have a limitation as to time somewhere. We have in most of the States in this Nation a 20-year limitation on judgments. I have prepared an amendment in line 2, section 2, to strike out the words "after the passage of this act" and insert the words "January 1, 1902"; that brings all claims arising within the last 20 years within the scope of the bill. Gentlemen, if there is any argument for the passage of this bill, for the allowance of claims arising in the future, the same argument and with a great deal more force applies to claims that have been storming Congress for the last half century.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Many of the States have 10-year statutes on judgment.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Some of them have 10-year statutes on notes and 2-year statutes on accounts. I made this 20 years arbitrarily, and I have explained it because I thought some one would ask me why I made it 20 years. The chairman of the Committee on Claims will tell you that a great many of the just claims, that he recognizes as just and which the committee have recommended for passage and many of them passed through this House, are 15 and 16 years old.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman spoke about the august body at the other end of the Capitol, who were not bothering with small things nowadays. I hope they are not going to go back 20 years in their investigations in the preparation of the tariff bill that we are waiting for at this time and that the country is in stern necessity of.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. If that is a question, I shall have to decline to answer it, because I am not prepared to discuss the tariff bill at this time.

Mr. PERKINS. The criticism of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is that this will permit gratuities on the part of the Government. Would it not cure that objection if we inserted, in line 5, before the word "responsible," the word "legally," so as to make it read:

May be found to have been legally responsible.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not think that is the purpose of the act at all. The claims we speak of here are claims that are all right in equity but which are legally defective. Your suggestion would defeat the purpose of the act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the House an estimate of the number of dead, hoary claims that would be revived in case the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana were agreed to?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I believe the departments would exercise as much discretion as Congress, especially when gentlemen having claims come before the committee themselves and urge their payment. I believe we would not have any more unfair claims allowed by the departments than by Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the committee does not have a rule of 20 years' limitation.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They have no limitation at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. If you are going to put it 20 years, why not make it 100 years, so that we could take in the French spoliation claims.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. My amendment would not prevent the Congress considering them or change their status in any way.

Mr. STAFFORD. We still have the French spoliation claims, involving $100,000,000 or more.

Mr. EDMONDS. We have a committee rule that we will not take up a claim originating before 1906 without a vote of three-fourths of the committee.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be pressed. I have known claims here that are verified by the records of the departments, absolutely gilt-edged, that were 50 years old before Congress passed upon them. You may labor here for years and not get results. I believe the Government ought to pay every dollar of its indebtedness, and if it does not pay it to-day, that it ought to pay it to-morrow.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman that there is much to be said on the proposition that any claim proven to be just ought to be paid. My amendment goes further than the bill in this direction. I merely suggested the amendment in order to call attention to the fact that if the act passes as it is now, it applies only to claims arising after the passage of the act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I am somewhat surprised at this radical departure on the part of Congress in delegating to the departments the right to pay money out of the Federal Treasury. It seems to me that it is a most dangerous departure. Where is it going to end?

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Does the gentleman realize that the bill provides that the report or the investigation made by the head of the department must be reported back with the claim and the reasons for it, and that Congress must finally pass upon it. We are not authorizing the department to pay out anything.

Mr. ELLIS. It will go right to the gentleman's Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. The trouble about the bill, in my judgment, is that this is making a finding of the department tantamount to a judgment of a court. We pay judgments that are found by the courts. In other words, what I said I said advisedly. It gives the head of the department the same standing in Congress and before Congress that a judgment of a court would have. Congress pays judgments, but in that case the court must have some legal reason for paying the claims. If there is a legal claim against the Government a man can get his remedy easily now in the Court of Claims.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman had a claim against the Government which was absolutely right, admitted to be so, for $75, how long would it take him to get it through the Court of Claims and get it from the Government?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know. It might take a thousand years, but I would not open up the doors of the people's Treasury by such bad legislation with that reason as an excuse. I am arguing against the precedent that is being set. This is a new departure and you are giving the heads of departments the same right and privilege in respect to these small claims that you give a court. I do not believe in it. This is some more Republican economy which means untold thousands.

Mr. EDMONDS. Pretty nearly every department has that right now.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; no department has the right to pass on these claims, any such claims, and finally adjudicate the indebtedness between the Government and the claimant. In every department in the Government, when the Democratic Party is in power and an influential Democrat goes down before one of these departments, if this bill were passed, he would get his claim allowed, and when the Republicans are in power and a strong Republican went down, he would get his claim allowed.

Mr. LAYTON. I wish the gentleman were right about it, for it has not been the case with me.

Mr. SISSON. The trouble is that you do not have that right now. Besides the gentleman is too modest as to his influence, for I am sure the gentleman gets what he goes after. But I do say this would become purely a matter of politics, and I do not think the Treasury ought to be opened up in that way. We already have too much of this kind of influence. I think that gentlemen should be practical in the legislation passed.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Would these reports from the departments and the independent establishments come before the House through the Committee on Appropriations under the terms of section 2 of the bill which says that such amount as may be found to be due any claimant shall be reported to Congress as a legal claim for payment out of appropriations that may be made?

Mr. SISSON. It makes the finding of a department the same as a judgment of a court is my construction of the language. In other words, the bureau chief is substituted for the Court of Claims.

Mr. RUCKER. Only as to the facts.

Mr. SISSON. It is just like a claim.

Mr. RUCKER. If the Government owes it, ought it not to pay it?

Mr. Sisson. Yes; but I am unwilling to turn it over to the heads of the departments. This legislation goes too far. Under the present law even the Court of Claims can only pass upon legal claims. Under this bill the bureau chief can find for the claimant on equitable, or what he thinks is an equitable, claim. This bill will pass, for each Congressman has some little claim for some constituent, which the constituent thinks is just, and this is the easiest and shortest route to the pockets of the people.

I am not willing yet to make this Government absolutely bureaucratic. We have got practically a bureaucratic government now, and I do not want it absolute. We are nearly like the Russian Government overturned by the soviet. Let us not make it more so. If our Government is to be destroyed, let it be destroyed by some one other than by Members of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, my real interest in this matter has arisen from personal experience which I want to narrate for the purpose of showing the injustice which the Government of the United States practices against its people. I want to say that I do not think that the Government of the United States ought to take money out of the pockets of an individual any more than an individual should take money out of the pockets of another individual. That is what we are doing in a spirit of callousness, because the Government can not be sued; and so we take advantage of that fact and allow thousands and thousands of claims coming from all over the country, absolutely just in every way, to go without settlement. The worst part of it is that it is generally the claim of the poor man, the little man who has no standing in this court. I have an instance. I was associated during the war with a corporation, or rather I was engaged down at a place called Indianhead. There was a man there who was employed by the company that I was serving as physician and surgeon as a restaurateur. He took care of the company's mess affairs. After the company's contract expired the restaurateur was asked by the captain at Indianhead, Capt. Lackey, to continue his services under exactly the same conditions that he was engaged in by the corporation. In other words, he bought the food, prepared the food, and fed the Government employees who were there engaged in Government work. They could not take and employ him to feed the marines under the law; but the captain of the station engaged him to keep his commissary open and feed other employees that did not have a Government suit upon them, and he did so. Capt. Lackey, the admiral in charge of that particular branch, and every officer who knows anything about it in the Government naval service, admit that this claim is absolutely honest in every way. He is a poor man, and is now carrying on his same business as a restaurateur at Scranton, Pa. He took out of his pocket nearly a thousand dollars and bought food to serve the Government, and it is impossible for him to get his pay. I introduced his claim when I first became a Member of Congress. It has been continued from year to year, and there seems to be no relief for him. Now, I do submit again for the consideration of the Congress that an omnibus claim bill would be the proper way to handle these small claims up to $1,000. I am sure that the chairman of this committee will agree that he knows the claim I have cited is an honest claim, that this has been absolutely agreed upon by his committee, as well as the Navy Department, that it is a just claim. There are hundreds of such claims, undisputed, that could be introduced here in one bill and in this way be speedily adjudicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, since I have been a Member of Congress I have been very much impressed with the repeated surrender by Congress of its functions to departmental officials. Bill after bill has been reported out and passed which not only confers judicial functions upon different departments and bureaucratic officials but also confers upon them legislative functions and responsibilities which properly belong to the Congress and which ought to be exercised by the Congress. This is another instance of such surrender of power and responsibility. The purpose of this bill as stated in the report is to provide that the money may be more readily and speedily paid out of the Treasury. Another thing I have been impressed with is that the bill which has the best chance of passing through this Congress is one that reaches into the Public Treasury, is one that makes it easier for the public money to be paid out. Now, I believe—

Mr. EDMONDS. That is not peculiar of this Congress.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; I am not saying it is peculiar to this Congress, but peculiar to the Congress in general. I am not prepared to say that this plan will even work more equitably and more justly from the standpoint of the claimants than the present plan. It will make it easier in some cases, and it will make it harder in others for claimants to obtain what is due them. The functions embodied in this bill should not be conferred upon mere clerks, and that is what will result. If the power should be exercised by the chiefs of bureaus, it would be different, but every man in this Congress knows that will not be done, that it will simply be a formality of unintelligent approval on the part of the bureau heads, and that matters involving legal questions as well as facts will be passed upon by departmental clerks. Furthermore, you are injecting into it the well-known departmental red tape that is continually denounced not only by Members of Congress but by the public generally. I have in mind a case of one of my constituents who filed a claim for reimbursement for overpayment of income tax in 1917, and along in August of last year he received a letter from the assistant commissioner notifying him that there was due him twenty-four hundred and some odd dollars which would be paid in due course. That was six months ago. He failed to obtain a check from them, and in despair finally wrote me, and I have had it up with them repeatedly, and have been unable as yet to procure payment, although they admit that the claim has been approved by everybody and simply has to go through the ordinary course—the customary and senseless red tape before checks can be issued and mailed. I do not know how much longer the matter will be enmeshed in red tape, but I do know that my constituent has already been deprived of the use of his money for nearly five years.

Now, that is the sort of thing you are going to inject into these matters unless the claimant has some sort of sinister and secret influence by which he can expedite action. I had rather trust the Claims Committee, both from the standpoint of the taxpayers and the honest claimants with just claims. If necessary, as suggested by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], let the Committee on Claims report out omnibus bills. But let us have this function performed by Congress, where it ought to be performed.

As stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], it is not a question of claims based upon legal rights. It is a case of moral obligations, and Congress ought to be the agent to determine whether or not the circumstances are so cogent that we are authorized to pay out the public money, even though no legal liability rests upon this Government. The question of how far we shall go in a charitable or philanthropic course, of what gratuities shall be extended, should not be determined by irresponsible and unknown subordinate officials.

And another thing. It will not stop here. As was suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, a bill has already passed authorizing the Navy Department to settle certain claims up to $500, but you are now increasing the limit to $1,000 and extending it to all departments and establishments. Efforts will be made, and no doubt successfully, to increase it to $2,000, to $3,000, and so on. Of course, the departments affected recommend this legislation, just as they favor all legislation which enlarges and expands their power and functions, but that does not justify Congress in surrendering its power and avoiding its responsibilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to myself two minutes.

Mr. Chairman, if you pass this bill you are going to find every department that has not a legal establishment, every bureau and every commission and every board and every agency of the Government upon which we confer this authority come to Congress in a very short while asking for an appropriation to pay attorneys to pass upon these matters, to pay special clerks and special stenographers, and the expense is going to be duplicated manifold. You are going to have numerous legal departments connected with all these bureaus, the expense of which you are going to have to bear out of the Treasury. The chairman knows that is so, and every one of us knows it. They can not pass on these claims without having the machinery for it, and they have not the machinery now. If we confer on them this authority they are going to ask us for the machinery, and the machinery will cost money.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Does not my colleague think that the Government would save money, because claimants with claims of $2,000 will bring them down to $1,000?

Mr. BLANTON. They will not do it. It sets a bad precedent. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, under the law the Government was never deemed guilty of a tort. This bill is not limited to tort claims, but claims involved in a contract may be presented to the Government under its present wording.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. I have not the time. I am sorry.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not correct in his statement.

Mr. CABLE. Take the Post Office Department alone; they handle over 400,000 claims, and we have paid over $5,400,000 on insured and registered mail. These claims are based on contract to carry the mail. If you put this bill through as it now reads you may interfere with insurance business of the Post Office Department and it may have many more claims to investigate.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. I have not the time.

There is another proposition. This bill does not guard the Government, because when the Government official in any way causes the loss or damage it may be held responsible. The bill should provide in case only where the Government is entirely to blame for the accident that the claim can become valid. Another consideration is this, that claims should be presented within a certain time against the Government or they should not be allowed. Take it in any State. There is a limitation act, and if you do not sue within a certain time you can not recover. In other words, here is a bill that opens the Treasury to any kind of an old claim whatsoever and permits the head of a department, as I see it, to make a recommendation for settlement, and that recommendation is sent to Congress, and it is a legal claim against the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that gentlemen do not quite understand this bill. We have over a thousand claims before the committee, 500 of which will be affected by this bill. This bill allows the head of a department the authority, which he has to-day, to prepare a statement in regard to some accident that has happened or some damage that has been incurred to somebody's property. Instead of reporting it to the Claims Committee he prepares and settles the claim only in so far as sending to the Appropriations Committee a statement that he has investigated this claim and asking the Appropriations Committee to make an appropriation to pay it. The result will be exactly what the gentleman from Delaware has been asking for, that a number of these bills should come before the House in an omnibus bill. The Appropriations Committee would not come in here for a lump sum of $100,000. They would come in with a bill to pay Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith, as we have provided on many of our appropriation bills.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. If the claim propounded against the Government was more than $1,000 and the claimant would take under $1,000, would the head of a department be authorized to adjust the claim, or would it be necessary for the claim to be less than $1,000 before it would be authorized?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the board would be willing to accept under $1,000 and it could be settled for that it would be settled. They do it to-day. I call attention to a boat collision, where a boat was damaged to the extent of about $800, and the owner settled for $500 rather than to take the trouble of going to Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. One other question. If the claim was just and should be paid, would the head of a department certify the findings to Congress for appropriation and they pay it?

Mr. EDMONDS. They would certify it to the Appropriations Committee for the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. If it came within the limit.

Mr. EDMONDS. Only within the limit, of course.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the chairman of the committee feel that if this bill becomes a law that the Committee on Claims reserves final jurisdiction?

Mr. EDMONDS. Beyond any question. I do not think there would be any question in a case but that he would take it down to the department, where he would have a right, rather than come before a committee; I mean before the finding of the department.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. What is meant by the phrase, "claims accruing," on the first line of page 2?

Mr. EDMONDS. Claims accruing after the passage of this act.

Mr. LAYTON. Therefore my claim would not come under the provisions of the act?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; but I believe a gentleman is going to offer an amendment which would enable them to go back and pay the claim.

Mr. LAYTON. I shall not vote for the bill unless it does. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does this cover personal injury claims?

Mr. EDMONDS. It does not. It covers only claims for property damages. We have a great many claims pending before our committee for damages arising from automobile accidents, and in most instances we find that the Government was at fault. Most of the men concerned were afterwards discharged. Why should a man having a just claim be compelled to wait a hundred years for payment? Modern conditions are different from what they were even when I first came on the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. I have a claim like the one the gentleman speaks of. It is still in committee. It has not been reported. Why has it not come out?

Mr. EDMONDS. If you remove from the calendar claims that are now on the calendar, we will put more on. It is a waste of time and foolish on the part of the committee to add more claims when the House lets them lie there. We have 50 bills on the calendar, and we can not get a day upon which to take them up.

Mr. FULMER. It is unfair for a man who introduces a bill not to be able to get his bill placed upon the calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. We can not undertake to try to advance a bill unless a little persuasion is used with us.

Mr. FULMER. I will say to the gentleman that I have been to the subcommittee several times about that bill. It has been in the hands of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS], and he has failed to report to the committee, and it is now in the hands of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE]. I have spoken to members of the committee several times about it.

Mr. EDMONDS. We try to take up all the claims we have, but it is a physical impossibility for 1,000 claims to be taken up by the committee. We have no desire to hold them. But what is the use in putting them on the calendar when it costs money to print the reports, and they do not go any further?

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CABLE. Would not this cover all claims against the Post Office Department, and would it not include claims for loss of registered mail? It is not confined to tort actions. Would not that include damages to privately owned property? If you lost something, could you not bring in a bill for the loss?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think so.

Mr. CABLE. In other words, would not that affect the insurance business of the Post Office Department?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was not intended to do so. I will say that to the gentleman.

Mr. CABLE. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. EDMONDS. We have agreed on several amendments to offer to the bill. First, we want to cut out the language beginning on line 7 on page 1, "including the municipal government of the District of Columbia." That is taken care of by the municipal law at the present time. On line 7 of page 2 we want to cut out the word "reported" and put in place of it the word "certified," and on the same line 7 we want also to strike out the words "as a legal claim," so as to leave the matter open to the Committee on Appropriations, whether they want to pay it or not.

On page 2, line 4, strike out the last seven words, and, on line 5, the first eight words, and add the words "caused by the negligence of any officer or employee of the Government acting within the scope of his employment." That would answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] in regard to post-office claims.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Would not the gentleman give the last one again?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. We propose to cut out the last seven words on line 4 of page 2, and the first eight words in line 5, on page 2, and insert in place thereof the words "caused by the negligence of any officer or employee of the Government acting within the scope of his employment."

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?
Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CABLE. Registered mail could only be lost through the negligence of the Post Office Department, could it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. Possibly; but I think that the present law takes care of that. I do not think this affects that law.

Gentlemen, we feel that it is absolutely impossible for these small claimants to get justice under the method heretofore followed. I have been 10 years on the committee, and I have seen claims reported out at every session while I have been a member of the committee, and sometimes they have passed the House and sometimes they have passed the Senate, and if they have passed the Senate they have not passed the House, and vice versa. It is manifestly unfair to these people who have had minor losses to be "held up" by the Government. That is what is being done. I really think as a matter of fairness to the people of this country that we are in justice bound to pass such legislation as this.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. Is it believed that the enactment of this bill into law would greatly expedite the payment of these smaller claims?

Mr. EDMONDS. There is no question about it. Most of these departments have a legal department. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] spoke about some of the Government establishments not having a legal department. You do not need to be a lawyer to use common sense. I am not a lawyer, but these claims are common-sense claims.

Mr. ROACH. In what way would their payment be expedited?

Mr. EDMONDS. The department would immediately get a report on the loss. They would probably investigate the claim through their different agencies. They would then report to the Committee on Appropriations for the first deficiency bill that came along, and the claim would go on a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. ROACH. They would have to come to Congress for the appropriation?

Mr. EDMONDS. The claims would be reported out by the committee.

Mr. ROACH. But they would be subject to the same delay as claims are now subject to?

Mr. EDMONDS. They would not be so subject, because they would not be held up on the floor as they are to-day.

Mr. ROACH. Would not the situation in the Committee on Appropriations be just the same as it is before the Committee on Claims now—that they would have so much business on the calendar that they could not reach it?

Mr. EDMONDS. They handle hundreds of cases now. I do not think there would be much difficulty about it.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand the proposal is to adopt in the Committee on Appropriations the certification of the department where the claim arises. The Committee on Claims does not act directly upon the reports of the departments now, where an affirmative recommendation is made, without reporting from the subcommittee to the full committee. Why do they not just take the reports that come in, where they recommend favorable action on the claims, and transmit them to Congress with a favorable report?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman was on the Committee on Claims I think he could answer that question himself.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am not a member of that committee, and I am asking the gentleman for that information as a Member of the House.

Mr. EDMONDS. The Committee on Claims is divided up into five subcommittees. Those five subcommittees have probably 30 or 40 bills each to investigate. Before a bill goes to the subcommittee a report is received from the department. It may be that further proof is needed. It may be that they want some more affidavits, because they want to bring in the bill before the House in as nearly perfect condition as they can. It is only the claims that the departments actually agree to that would come under this bill. The Committee on Claims would still get the claims that were not agreed to by the departments.

Mr. BRIGGS. When a favorable report comes in from the department, why can not the Committee on Claims adopt it as a sufficient basis for the legislation?

Mr. EDMONDS. We do that at times.

The CHAIRMAN. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman the remainder of my time in order that I may ask him some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that practically the greater part of the claims that come from the Post Office Department to the gentleman's committee, and which the gentleman's committee report here for passage, are claims that the Post Office Department has turned down?

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman mean claims for the robbery of post offices?

Mr. BLANTON. I mean all sorts of claims.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; most of our claims from the Post Office Department arise from automobile collisions. The Post Office Department has no jurisdiction of those claims.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that many of the claims which the gentleman's committee has reported here for payment, coming from the Navy Department and the War Department, are claims that have been turned down by those departments?

Mr. EDMONDS. In some cases, not in a great many of them. We have not so very many cases from the Navy Department and the War Department. Most of our cases from the Navy Department are for boat collisions, and they have not turned them down.

Mr. BLANTON. Many of them have been turned down by the Navy Department.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; the only reason they send them to our committee is because the amounts are so large that they have not jurisdiction to pay them. They are allowed to pay claims up to $500 only.

Mr. BLANTON. If we confer this authority upon various bureaus, commissions, agencies, and other establishments of the Government besides the executive departments, does not the gentleman think they are going to ask us for machinery with which to consider them; that is, for clerks and for extra stenographers and for attorneys to pass upon them?

Mr. EDMONDS. Most of the departments have their own attorneys. In regard to the rest, they prepare the cases anyhow now.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said he was not an attorney, although chairman of the Claims Committee. I want to call his attention to the fact, however, that even though he is not an attorney, he has certain rules and regulations applicable to certain kinds of cases, which rules and regulations he enforces without exception concerning the business before his committee.

Mr. EDMONDS. The committee do not always work with me.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman has certain rules, has not he?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have my own ideas.

Mr. BLANTON. Rules and regulations?

Mr. EDMONDS. Committee rules.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean certain rules; that if a claim comes within certain conditions it is reported. If it does not come within certain conditions, you do not establish a new precedent.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, every claim that comes before our committee is investigated before it is reported out.

Mr. BLANTON. What I am talking about is that you have precedents to go by.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Rules.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But in this bill you are submitting these claims to these various boards, commissions, and agencies without a single rule to guide or control their action.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the departments are fairly honest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The time for general debate has expired. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when used in this act the terms "department and establishment" and "department or establishment" mean any executive department, independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency, or other establishment of the Government, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, lines 5 and 6, after the word "department," strike out "independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if these words are eliminated the sentence will read:

That when used in this act the terms "department and establishment" and "department or establishment" mean any executive department or other establishment of the Government, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRIGGS. What does the gentleman understand by "other establishment"?

Mr. WALSH. It would mean the Shipping Board, the Veterans' Bureau, the Smithsonian Institution, or any other establishment outside of the 10 executive departments.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman does not mean to say that they are not executive departments in the proper sense?

Mr. WALSH. They are not.

Mr. BRIGGS. Not in the technical sense?

Mr. WALSH. There is no technicality about it. The executive departments are the departments under the Cabinet officers.

Mr. BRIGGS. They are so designed, but the others are still executive departments.

Mr. WALSH. No; they are independent establishments.

Mr. BRIGGS. They exercise executive functions.

Mr. WALSH. They are independent establishments exercising—

Mr. BRIGGS. Executive functions.

Mr. WALSH. Administrative and executive functions. It appears to me that if this definition were to read:

Any executive department or any other establishment of the Government—

it would free the definition from doubt as to whether it might mean any executive department or the head of some bureau within the executive department.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does not the gentleman think that if he would include in his amendment the words "or other establishment," the bill would still further be safeguarded?

Mr. WALSH. And confine it to executive departments entirely?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I hardly think if we are going to provide means whereby small claims are to be adjusted and action on them facilitated, we ought to confine them to the executive departments. There are several other independent establishments where they might have claims arise, and it would seem hardly fair to these claimants that because their claim arose under another bureau they could not have it settled, whereas if it arose under the Department of Commerce or the Treasury Department or the Department of the Interior that their claim could be settled.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. My idea was that the heads of the executive departments were more fixed and definite and more highly responsible than the heads of departments that are changing more frequently.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I don't know about that—

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think it would be advisable to have the word "independent" before the word "establishment," so it will not apply to every subordinate establishment of the Government outside of the executive departments?

Mr. WALSH. If they are not within the 10 executive departments or subordinate, they are independent.

Mr. BRIGGS. The word "independent" might indicate an establishment as a whole to make a recommendation or certification.

Mr. WALSH. I see the point the gentleman has in mind, but I do not think the word "independent" in phraseology that is creating a definition will add to it, neither do I think it will limit it. If it is an independent establishment it will cover it, and if it is not an independent establishment but subordinate to the executive department, it would not be another establishment.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman recalls the recent appropriation bill in which independent offices are designated.

Mr. WALSH. The appropriations were for executive and independent offices.

Mr. BRIGGS. Exactly, so as to indicate that these estimates as a whole are separate and apart from executive offices. That is designated in the appropriation bill, and I thought it would be advisable to use similar language in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I think it covers everything subordinate as well as independent.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Under this bill who would decide what bureaus would have the power to act under it?

Mr. WALSH. It would probably be determined in the office of the Comptroller General, appointed under the Budget law. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the matter any further.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Why not strike out the first paragraph, and amend section 2 by inserting the word "executive" before the word "department" in line 10 and striking out "and establishment" after the word "department"?

Mr. WALSH. I have stated that I did not think it was fair if a man had a small claim that arose under some department not within the executive departments that he should be required to come to Congress simply because it was a claim against some establishment not within one of the 10 executive departments, while if it had been in or under one of the 10 executive departments it could be adjusted. It seems to me that if we provide a relief it ought to be general and uniform so as to take in all Government activities.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "or other establishment."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "or other establishment."

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that these words not only cover the words which have been stricken out by the amendment just adopted but also any other bureau or establishment that might be lurking around somewhere in the country. In other words, I think it is entirely too broad and too indefinite. I do not know what the committee had in mind by using that phraseology. I am sure they did not intend for some far-away establishment in the Forestry Service or some other establishment either at the Capitol or distantly removed from the Capitol is intended to have conferred upon it any such function. Every post office in the country is an "establishment of the Government." Everything that requires a governmental function or is run by governmental officials may be termed an "establishment of the Government." I am sure it is not the purpose of this committee to cover any broad field of that kind. I think it sufficiently broad when you say executive departments. In my time I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what establishment is there that he desires to cover that would not be covered in the term "executive departments"?

Mr. EDMONDS. Answering the gentleman, I will say that this term was taken from the Budget bill and that is the reason it is in this language. I think the gentleman does not quite understand that by striking out the words "bureau, office, or agency" you would let the matter stand so that it must be a department head.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I understand that is true. It might be construed that it could be settled by the executive heads here or by one of those establishments.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, I do not think the Comptroller General would consider it that way. I do not think it is possible.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice in the language stricken out that the word "independent" was used before the expressions "commission, board, bureau, office, agency," indicating they should be independent and supreme within their own sphere. I therefore again suggest that the word "independent" ought to be inserted before the word "establishment."

Mr. EDMONDS. I would not raise any objection to that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I never have been considered very enthusiastically in favor of claims bills. I feel quite sure that I have prevented the passage of more private claims bills than any other man in Congress, living or dead. Yet I have recognized the desirability of the Government dealing justly with its citizens. Some years ago when I introduced a bill to reorganize the Lighthouse Service I inserted a provision in it authorizing the Lighthouse Service to make a settlement where a lighthouse vessel or tender came in collision with a privately owned vessel, and the amount of the damage was not over $500. That was the origin of this class of legislation.

Prior to that time and now it was and is the practice for the Court of Claims and for the accounting officers of the Government to send to Congress a statement of judgments against the Government, and also statements of audited claims against the Government. Those come in the form of House or Senate documents and are inserted in the appropriation bills, and are not subject to a point of order when the appropriation bill is under consideration. An ordinary claim inserted in an appropriation bill is subject to the point of order that payment of it is not authorized by law. I drew the language which is in this bill when I introduced this lighthouse bill and provided that when these claims were adjusted by the department they should be reported to Congress as a legal claim for payment out of appropriations, and so forth. I contended, and the Chair held, that that language authorized the department to report this claim as a legal claim, which could be paid and was not subject to a point of order that the appropriation for the payment was not authorized by law. That is what the language in this bill means.

Following the passage of the lighthouse bill the same authority was given to the Navy to settle damages for collisions of naval vessels. We have given the same authority to the War Department to settle various kinds of claims, caused by injury to property. We have recently made a provision and an appropriation in the Post Office Department for the settlement of such claims by the Post Office Department up to the limit of $500. Various other branches of the Government have this authority, but not all of them. This bill proposes to confer upon all of the branches of the Government the authority to settle claims for "damage to and loss"—and I think it ought to be "damage to or loss"—of private property up to $1,000.

In recent years the Government has entered upon industrial work in many directions. The War Department is operating motor trucks all over the country, the Post Office Department is operating motor trucks all over the country, and various other branches of the Government are operating motor trucks, doing other kinds of work, which trucks occasionally damage the private property of individuals. Why should we say that when a lighthouse tender runs into a dock and damages the dock to the extent of three or four hundred dollars we will pay that promptly, but that if a mail truck of the Post Office Department runs into a man's automobile or other property and damages it that man can whistle for his money?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As far as the gentleman knows, has there been any very unfavorable results from this authority?

Mr. MANN. I am very glad the gentleman has called that to my attention. I have never heard a word of criticism from any Member of this House or elsewhere of any of these laws providing for the settlement of claims or of any of the claims which have been settled. No question has ever been raised, although every year we appropriate money for the payment of these claims. No question has ever been raised in this House or in the Senate in regard to the justness or the propriety of paying the claims. No action has been taken by the Government under these different authorities which has ever caused the slightest bit of criticism. Departments have been criticized many times about other claims, but these small claims have been considered so carefully that no one has ever criticized them. The criticism that comes from every source is that the Government, engaging in these great enterprises, refusing its citizens the right to sue it in the Court of Claims or elsewhere, violates every right of the citizen, ruins or damages his property, and then looks smilingly at him and says, "Go to the other place."

There is no practical chance of paying these claims under the present system. For myself—and I have no criticism to make of others—I will not introduce a claim for a small amount to go through the machinery of this House. I think the Committee on Claims ought to have the opportunity to consider larger claims against the Government and to give them consideration instead of spending their time considering claims of $50 or $500. We must change our system in some way; we must make provision in some way so that claims against the Government can be properly considered. It is true that all legal claims against the Government in one sense are now promptly paid, but the Government does not permit itself to be sued in the Court of Claims or elsewhere for injuries caused by torts. The Government can not afford to run great Army trucks all over the country over the highways of the country and say to the men running them, "You can run into any man's machine as you please, damage and ruin his property, and there is no responsibility." And there is none now. So I think this measure is a very moderate measure, a very just measure, attended with no difficulty, attended with no danger, and I hope it may pass. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, during general debate I did not have an opportunity to say a word upon the bill, and I rise now to say I believe that this measure is a thoroughly meritorious proposition. The greatest asset that any Government can have is the absolute good will and absolute confidence on the part of the citizenship of that country. You are going to forfeit the good will, you are going to forfeit the honor that ought to be paid the Government by its citizens if you permit any condition to exist by which Tom, Dick, or Harry, wherever he may be in our country, who has sustained a loss at the hands of the Government can not find redress. Yet over and over illustration is furnished that that is the situation that exists to-day. I could mention to you claim after claim that I have had occasion to know of through my official work, meritorious claims of a few dollars to claims of several hundred dollars, that the officers in the department where the injury was done have wanted to right, claims which every neighbor said were just, claims as to which the claimants were ready and willing to furnish and did furnish the most substantial evidence that would be accepted in any court in the land by any jury, and yet under the law could not be paid. The hands of the Government were tied and no relief could be extended. I have worked year after year passing individual bills through this House, and they had such great merit in them that I think there is not a Member here who if he were in the place of the Government would not rest a night until he had gone to the person who had been wronged and he had made restitution. Yet the Government has been helpless to adjudicate or settle these claims in the absence of special legislation. Some of these claims I have been able to get through after several years of pressing upon the Congress. Sometimes my bill would pass this House during several terms, but fail in the Senate. Sometimes it would pass the Senate and fail here. Then, fortunately, we would be able to get a measure through both House and Senate in the same Congress.

Mr. Chairman, why use the time of the Congress to perform judicial matters when, by reason of the size of the Congress, it is not fitted for the work?

Gentlemen, this bill is a meritorious proposition. True enough, you do give some limited discretion, but the discretion you give to those on whom you place authority under the terms of the bill is only a modicum of the discretion you have already conferred upon executive officers and that you must confer. Turn to a multitude of laws and you will find you have conferred tremendous discretionary authority that involves the expenditure of money. In the adjudication, for instance, of pension claims, in the turning of a claim up or down, in the rating of claimants as having a certain degree of disability, you obligate the Government to the extent of hundreds or, if the claimant shall live for years, thousands of dollars before the claim shall have run its course. So in a multitude of other kinds of Government work.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. Does not the gentleman think in the interest of justice and square dealing that all claims that have accrued up to this time should be placed under the beneficent provisions of this bill, as well as those that will hereafter accrue?

Mr. FRENCH. Well, I think that should be done, certainly within a period of time within which reasonable evidence could be required.

Mr. LAYTON. I would accept that.

Mr. FRENCH. The principle, though, that I have tried to emphasize is this, that as to small claims there ought to be given discretionary authority to the department whose officers have incurred or caused the damage to the individual making the claim the right to make a just settlement of that claim. I say more than the dollars that it will cost the United States will be the value in good will, in honor, and in support of our Government that will come from those who will find if they are wronged by the Government the wrong will be speedily righted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the facts as they have been stated on the floor here, if no complaint has been made of money paid out by these other departments which have been granted the right to settle claims, as, for example, the Navy and Post Office Departments and others, may be the very strongest reason why this bill ought not to pass. There would be no complaint because a citizen got $500 out of the Treasury or $1,000 out of the Treasury. In other words, there is nobody willing to speak for the Treasury Department. Everybody is congratulated for every dollar he gets. Another thing about it is in legislation that has been passed granting the right to the department to make settlement that heretofore the bills provided for payment for claims that may arise after the passage of the act. Now, the department that will be called upon to pay will have to pay under the bills heretofore passed; the department charged with responsibility generally makes a record at the time. Therefore the settlement will be always the claims that are fresh, with living witnesses able to make the records, as, for example, the Navy Department.

The very moment a collision happens between a boat of the Government and a privately owned boat the claim originates, and if the Government is to blame is allowed; but a record is made at the time of all the facts by those in charge of the boat, and on that record the claim is based. In a crowded harbor our Navy boats do damage to some little craft, and it is necessary that they shall respond. That involves the rights of citizens of other countries also, which was the principal reason why we gave that right to the Navy. Now, the Post Office Department has the right to settle certain claims under certain conditions, but there was complaint made that in claims of the kind included under that law the very great restrictions involved in that legislation were too severe. But this bill absolutely opens up the flood gates of all time unless there is some limitation such as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana of 20 years. If you do not have some limitation you open up the floodgates, and I do not know how many thousands of claims will be poured in upon us.

Suppose a claim was $985 and the other fellow has a claim of $1,250 or $1,825. If you are going to be so just and so fair as was suggested awhile ago, why should you require a man who has a claim of $2,000 against the Government either to get through an act and go into the Court of Claims, even where the department says it is a just claim, and the man who has a claim of $975 or $995 has the claim paid by simply going to the department? The cry will go up, treat them all alike and off goes all restrictions.

Now, if we are seeking justice, and the gentleman wants to be so kindly just toward all citizens take off the limit now.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. I will.

Mr. FRENCH. The very principle the gentleman complains of is applied in all of our courts, is it not?

Mr. Sisson. The principle is altogether different. There is a limited jurisdiction in certain courts, and the reason they do that is because these small matters may be settled in the courts close to the citizen and with but little expense, and the man with the greater claim has a court open to him, where the proceeding is identically the same. There is no difference in principle in the size of the claim. But I am wondering just why it was that the old fathers of our Government have been so wicked in the past, and why the Government has been so unjust; why, when these men founded this institution, they did not early discover this terrible error.

This bill can be denominated a bill to pay claims that have been turned down by committees of Congress and by both Houses of Congress and a bill to pay claims that have been denied in the Court of Claims, because there is no limitation in the bill as to the character of claims. In other words, open up an avenue to the Treasury for all unjust claims.

Mr. LONDON. So far as the language of the bill is concerned, it applies to claims accruing hereafter.

Mr. Sisson. I did not so understand the bill. It should only cover claims in the future and not be retroactive. I am opposed to the amendment of my friend from Indiana, who wants to limit it to 20 years back. The bill is bad enough if limited to claims occurring in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. Sisson. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. Sisson. But I want to repeat that the very moment you pass this class of legislation claimants are not going to be satisfied with $1,000 limitation. It will not be long before the argument will be made that was made by my distinguished friend, that the citizens will cut the claim down and the bureau chief will settle it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Davis] offers an amendment for the purpose of preventing postmasters under this bill settling claims, because under the general language we do not know how far down in the departments you may go to settle these matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Davis].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it may be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, yeas 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, page 1, line 6, after the word "other," insert the word "independent."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Briggs: Page 1, line 6, after the word "other," insert the word "independent."

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Briggs].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Edmonds: On page 1, line 7, strike out the words "including the municipal government of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That authority is hereby conferred upon the head of each department and establishment acting on behalf of the Government of the United States to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine any claim accruing after the passage of this act on account of damages to and loss of privately owned property where the amount of the claim does not exceed $1,000, and for which damage or loss the Government may be found to have been responsible. Such amount as may be found to be due to any claimant shall be reported to Congress as a legal claim for payment out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor, together with a brief statement of the character of each claim, the amount claimed, and the amount allowed.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Line 4, page 2, strike out the last seven words and in line 5 strike out the first eight words and insert in lieu thereof "caused by the negligence of any officer or employee of the Government acting within the scope of his employment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "reported" and insert in lieu thereof the word "certified."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bland of Indiana: Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "January 1, 1902."

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think most of us are agreed that there is extreme necessity for establishing some agency for the settlement of these claims. It is not fair that this Government should be pointed out with scorn by its citizens and have it said of it that it is not just to its debtors. Each one of you know that the files of the Committee on Claims today is filled with claims that are just as honest obligations against this Government as any bills it pays. Something is wrong with a system that permits that to go on. The responsibility is ours if we do not correct it here, inasmuch as this matter has been called to your attention. Most of the claims that are piled up over there are just and honest. Still the bill that is now before us does not take care of those claims that are called so forcibly to your attention. If there is any reason for the Government to pay its just and honest debts, it ought to make, within certain limitations, the machinery provided in this bill applicable to the payment of these just and honest debts the Government now owes to its people.

Mr. LONDON. Why limit the amount to $1,000?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. For the reason the committee can give attention to larger claims, and because the consideration of small claims takes up the time of the committee, and they clutter up the calendars, and we can not get to them. I think there is good reason for limiting the amount. Some say, "Why do you limit it to 20 years?" The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] a moment ago answered that. We ought to set a time, arbitrary of course, as a limit wherein trustworthy proof can be found. We have to take hearsay and unsatisfactory proof back in past generations. But within 20 years, if the judgment stands on the record, you can collect it in most of the States of the Union. There are a number of claims that have been pending 20 years, and that have been allowed by this House two or three times, that never have gotten through the Senate, or have been allowed by the Senate and have never gotten through the House. Are we going to close the doors on this class of meritorious claims?

Mr. ROACH. Does not the gentleman believe that if these claims are established by competent evidence they should be allowed, even if they are more than 20 years old?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They are not affected by this bill.

Mr. ROACH. Why limit it at all if they are just claims, supported by legal evidence?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It is thought here that that privilege might be abused if the evidence was not available on account of the length of time that had elapsed since the claim accrued, and if we reduced the limit of time under 20 years it is thought we might shut off some just claims.

Mr. ROACH. Claims have been allowed in this Congress time and time again that were more than 20 years old.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman is a lawyer, and he knows that in framing legislation legislative tribunals always try to restrict matters where proof is required to a given length of time in order to shut out the possibility of perjury and taking hearsay testimony.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman does not advocate a statute of limitations against a meritorious claim, does he?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Under the amendment I have offered gentlemen will have plenty of time to come to Congress and ask it to consider their claims.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Why make it 20 years?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Well, you might ask, Why not make it 5 years or why not make it 2 years? I think 20 years is established as a reasonable limitation in this country, from the fact that within that time a judgment is held to be valid. That is why I fixed it at 20 years. There are many claims pending before the Committee on Claims that are over 20 years old. The chairman of that committee will tell you that there are many such claims.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the gentleman much confidence that classes of claims not covered by this bill will be passed hereafter in the manner usually provided for—in the form of separate bills?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. There are some claims over 20 years old that are reported by the committee. I think the committee would have more time in which to consider those bills if this little stuff were taken off their hands.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There would not be much trouble here if it were not for the objections made by individual Members to such bills.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The trouble is that those bills get on the calendar, and it takes so long to get to them that people are worn out in the effort to get them passed through here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LONDON. I understand that in many States the statute of limitations in cases of tort is three years. Twenty years may be reasonable in a claim based on an indenture or bond, but is unthinkable in accident cases. To open now the floodgates to all the claimants, and to enable a subordinate in a department to settle a claim 15 or 18 or 20 years old, will throw upon Members of Congress a new obligation. Every claimant would urge his Member of Congress to become his advocate in presenting the merits of a particular claim.

I think 20 years is entirely out of the question. It should not be considered at all. I would prefer to see all these claims go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONDON. Yes. But I will vote for the bill, because it seems a majority of the membership are inclined to reject the idea of requiring a claimant in a case of tort to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am a lawyer myself, and I take it the gentleman is a lawyer. Does the gentleman think the litigant should be required to go to the Court of Claims with a claim of $40 or $60 or $100, or something like that?

Mr. LONDON. There should surely be a court to accommodate a claimant against the Government. In most of the States they provide that where a man has a claim against the city government he must notify the corporation counsel or the representative of the city government, so as to give the city government the opportunity to adjust the claim; but if they fail to reach an adjustment the court should be open to him. I regret that the committee has failed to give us an idea of the character of the claims that are now before the committee. They have failed to give us an analysis of the claims. I understand there are a thousand claims pending.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; there are a thousand claims pending.

Mr. LONDON. What is the character of those claims?

Mr. EDMONDS. On last Wednesday I gave a detailed list of them.

Mr. LONDON. So you have a complete record?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; we have a complete record. They have to do with all kinds of accidents, airplane accidents, and automobile accidents, and—

Mr. LONDON. How old are they?

Mr. EDMONDS. We had the other day before us one man who wanted to call up a Revolutionary claim. They run back as far as to the year 1777. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman will admit that it would not be safe to leave to the head of a bureau the final determination of a claim 20 years old?

Mr. EDMONDS. I am going to speak of the amendment in a few minutes. I do not agree with the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, much as I sympathize with the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND], I do not think it would be advisable for us to go into retroactive legislation. Undoubtedly it would greatly relieve the committee. It might be possible to amend it so as to go back a year or two, but even that is not good legislation. Of course, knowing that these claims will be settled by the departments in the future and that none of them will come to the committee, the work of the committee will be just that much more expeditious on back claims. We could get these out of the way, undoubtedly, and in doing so we would not have claims for small amounts coming before us to disturb us while we are considering claims for larger amounts.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. It might make it easier for the consideration of the committee, but it would not make it easier for the consideration of such claims in this body or in the other body?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; it would not.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. This does not include personal damages or post-office cases where there has been robbery committed?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. It only applies to one class of claims.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The passage of this bill will not take from the Congress the jurisdiction of claims where some department reports to Congress?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. If the department refuses to report on a claim that the committee thinks is just, there is no reason why Congress should not pass that claim over the opinion of the department.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. You would still have concurrent jurisdiction?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The question that occurs to me is the multiplicity of agencies to settle these claims. Would it not be wiser to have a commission to pass upon these claims? I think you should have some method of procedure in keeping with the customary action in matters of this character.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the amount of these claims would come within $100,000 a year. I do not believe it would be necessary to have any big body to determine them.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not mean to have any big body to determine them.

Mr. EDMONDS. Or to spend any money to hear them. I think they can be settled very reasonably in the departments. I have been looking at department reports on claims for 10 years, and I find that the departments are generally sensible in their conclusions on these claims.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But you do not confine it to these departments. The bill relates to minor officials also.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; that has been stricken out.

Mr. BARBOUR. For my own information I should like to ask the gentleman about personal injuries. The bill provides for the settlement of claims for loss and damage on account of injury to privately owned property.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will say to the gentleman that four years ago I took up the question with a number of Philadelphia lawyers in regard to whether it would not be a good thing for the Government to take care of personal-injury claims by allowing suits to be brought in court. These gentlemen were all high-class lawyers, and after they got through considering the matter they decided that it would be very inadvisable to allow personal-injury claims to be presented to a jury, owing to the fact that judgments would be rendered against the Government by juries which they would not render against individuals. I think we had better handle these cases in the way we are handling them, particularly in view of the number of cases that have been brought recently against municipalities, in which cases there have been shown to be collusion and fraud.

Mr. BARBOUR. Of course Government employees are taken care of, as I understand, under the United States compensation law?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct.

Mr. BARBOUR. And only the personal-injury claims of outsiders would have to be considered?

Mr. EDMONDS. We are taking care of personal-injury claims pretty well in the Committee on Claims. We are rather more sympathetic with those claims than we are with property claims.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by making it 10 years instead of 20, or 1912 instead of 1902, as it now reads.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am very much in favor of this amendment. We hear much said against retroactive legislation, but if I owe a debt I do not see any reason why I should not pay it because the debt was incurred a year or two years ago, or five or ten years ago, so long as the evidence is definite. As long as it is possible for satisfactory and convincing evidence to be submitted to a Cabinet head, I see no reason why these claims should not be considered. We have limited this bill very largely in its application now; and if a man has a just claim—and presumably this deals only with just claims against the Government—if he has been waiting for five or ten years, I do not see why his claim should not be adjusted the same as that of a man whose claim arises to-morrow. It seems to me the very fact that a claimant has been waiting a number of years adds to the weight of his claim rather than otherwise.

Mr. LAYTON. In other words, to emphasize what the gentleman has said, if a man has a just claim and has been deprived of it for all those years, he ought to enjoy the benefit of a speedy adjustment.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Undoubtedly so. So it seems to me that in justice to our citizens, and to our Government as well, this amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have serious doubt about making this bill retroactive to the extent of 10 years, as is now proposed in the amendment. That will include a great many claims that have been passed on by the Committee on Claims and by the House. While the work of the committee is congested and is not being satisfactorily done, I believe it would be better not to reopen old cases that have been passed on, many of which have dragged along during these 10 years. I think that would be attended with more risk than it is safe for us to assume.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I know my friend is an industrious member of the committee. What assurance can the gentleman give this House of any speedy adjustment of the claims that he has before his committee? What assurance can be given that they will be considered here on the floor of the House and then considered by the other body of this Congress within any reasonable time?

Mr. BOX. I am not able to give the gentleman the assurance he would like to have. At the same time I am not willing to have all these claims reopened, many of which have been considered and reported adversely by the committee. I believe that is unfair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. We ought to remember the interests of the Government as well as the interests of the claimants in passing a bill of this sort. No one wants to impede the settlement of a just claim. On the other hand, we have no desire to pay unjust claims just because they are against the Government. When we pass a bill like this which provides for the settlement of future claims, every department will at once keep track of all the accidents which occur in which the employees of that department are concerned; but if you pass a law to allow settlement of claims 10 years old without any action, except by the department, you start and raise up an assembly of ambulance-chaser lawyers. [Applause.] Claims of all sorts will be presented about which the departments know nothing and have no record. These claims will be supported by affidavits which are very easily obtained in some parts of the country.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I have in mind a post-office claim.

Mr. MANN. That is the trouble. The gentleman has in mind a particular claim.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I have in mind the one the gentleman referred to a moment ago, where an automobile truck hit a man. That is the one the gentleman referred to a moment ago. I have a claim of that character in mind. The Post Office Department made an investigation and now have a full and complete record and ask to submit it to the Committee on Claims. The department have made an investigation and have considered payment, but they have not the authority.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is taking my time to repeat a statement which he made to the House a while ago. In order to get his claim settled, which can be settled now under the jurisdiction of Congress, he wants to throw the door open so that a man who has no legitimate claim can go before the Post Office Department and file affidavits, which can be obtained for a dollar apiece, stating that some automobile was injured 10 years ago, about which the Post Office Department knows nothing, but must accept the testimony which is presented in the absence of any knowledge on the part of anyone in the department. I am not in favor of that kind of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "after," strike out the words "the passage of this act" and insert the words "January 1, 1912."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND of Indiana) there were—ayes 10, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the date when this act goes into effect."

Mr. MANN. That means the same thing.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, strike out the period and insert "Provided, That no claim shall be considered by a department or other independent establishment unless presented to it within two years from the date of the accrual of said claim."

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a provision limiting the claims that are provided for in the act. In every State we have a limitation as to the time when claims can be filed. The same thing should be provided in this act to protect the Government. In other words, a claim may accrue and if we have no limitation they may wait four or five years until the Government is unable to obtain evidence and the Government would be at a disadvantage, whereas if it is provided that the claim shall be presented to the Government within a certain time you have some protection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Railroads in regard to bills of lading and shipping live stock provide that the claim for damages must be presented within 30 or 60 days after the damage accrues. Does not the gentleman think 60 days is a reasonable time in the presentation for claims. Two years is a long time, and an administration might change in two years and many of its personnel.

Mr. CABLE. That might be, but I do not think it will. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The employees' compensation act has a limitation of time during which the employee of the Government may file a claim. I do not recall what the limitation is, but this limitation should not be for any longer period than that provided for in the compensation act. Perhaps some one will remember what that limitation is.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think it is one year.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by making it one year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in that regard. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 2, line 2, by striking out the word "and" and inserting the word "or."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN: Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the language of the bill would apparently indicate that no settlement could be made for injury to property unless it was an entire loss. I think it should be so that settlement could be made for damage or injury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice in line 3 it says "damages to or loss of privately owned property." Does that mean that the property must be owned by the claimant?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If he has hired the property or leased it, he can not make the claim?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; it must be made by the owner.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with sundry amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7912) to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 75 ayes and 11 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 254, nays 24, answered "present" 5, not voting 147, as follows:

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs is now considering the Muscle Shoals proposition and it is now in session, and I have been requested by the chairman of that committee to ask unanimous consent that the committee might sit during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be permitted to sit during the session of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma reserves all points of order. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

DAMAGES FROM COLLISION WITH NAVAL VESSELS.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5349.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a bill on the Union Calendar and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5349, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5349, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5349) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," approved June 24, 1910 (Public. No. 261, 61st Cong., 2d sess.), authorizing the Secretary of the Navy "to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $500, hereafter occasioned by collision, for which collisions vessels of the Navy shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so determined to be due the claimants to Congress at each session thereof through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, namely:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages, where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $5,000, occasioned since April 6, 1917, and hereafter, by collisions or other accidents for which collisions or other accidents vessels of the Navy or vessels in the Naval Service shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to the Congress through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor."

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "other," and after the word "accident" insert the words "incident to the operations of vessels." And on page 2, line 13, strike out the word "other."

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the committee and passed by the committee, with the approval of the Navy Department. The only changes from the present law in this bill is the raising of the amount from $500 to $5,000 and allowing damages to other property, like wharves, and so forth, to come under the bill. In other words, anything that would be incident to the operation of vessels. It appears that we have a great many small collisions in connection with the operations of vessels in the Navy, and it does not take much of a collision to make more than $5,000 in damages, and in settling these cases the Navy Department finds that they can only settle about 25 per cent. They thought where it was found the Navy Department was at fault that it would be just as well for them to pay these claims, rather than go to the trouble and the expense of printing, and then pass them through the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. In looking over the report and the bill I do not find any information as to how many new employees will be required. I would like the chairman to tell us whether it will be necessary to employ any more lawyers or any other additional help in settling these claims?

Mr. EDMONDS. Not a person. They are all investigated by courts of inquiry, and will be so investigated in the future, whether we pass this bill or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And it will not furnish opportunity to employ any more lawyers?

Mr. EDMONDS. Not another person.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. BRIGGS. Upon what basis does the committee make this recommendation and draw a distinction between the authority of the Navy Department to pass on claims of this character to the extent of $5,000 when all the other departments in reference to other claims are limited to $1,000, such as in the case of the bill we just passed?

Mr. EDMONDS. We are taking into consideration of the claims made for collisions the amounts will be larger than anything that will be asked in the other departments.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think that we have claims just as important as the claims of another character of cases where boats are injured?

Mr. EDMONDS. Well, the gentleman must remember these people have no chance to go into the courts on these cases. They can not take cases of a collision of a naval vessel in an admiralty court.

Mr. BRIGGS. But they can go into the Court of Claims?

Mr. EDMONDS. No.

Mr. BRIGGS. Well, they can still come before the Claims Committee if the loss is considered to be over $1,000?

Mr. EDMONDS. They can come before the Claims Committee, that is true, and we have passed a number of bills.

Mr. BRIGGS. Another question. Was not that one of the arguments the gentleman offered in the Committee of the Whole awhile ago to get his bill passed, and which we did pass, that the committee would have more time to look into these claims over $1,000 and therefore devote their attention to such claims?

Mr. EDMONDS. Let me answer the gentleman's question. The Navy Department when there is a collision of any kind immediately convenes a court of inquiry. That court passes on the entire circumstances that occasion the accident. If there is something which happens in which they can acknowledge that the Navy is at fault, they acknowledge it. The result is that we respect the opinion of naval men on a naval proposition, and if the committee accepts their judgment we might as well pay them. Our committee accepts the Navy Department reports all the time as to these cases.

Mr. BRIGGS. How many of these cases has the committee reported at this session of Congress?

Mr. EDMONDS. We have reported, I think, about four or five.

Mr. BRIGGS. Have any been left in the committee pending there now?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. How many?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not say exactly. I do not remember.

Mr. BRIGGS. If the committee has just adopted the findings of the Navy Department, why can they not be reported just as they come before the committee?

Mr. EDMONDS. There are a great many cases that we still have to take up in the committee because the Navy Department disputes them.

Mr. BRIGGS. Of course, it can not be regarded as a legal obligation, and still has to come before Congress for appropriate action?

Mr. EDMONDS. Up to $5,000 they send it to the Appropriation Committee and they appropriate for it.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman think that a claim of $5,000 is different from any other?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is a different character of operation that has to be considered by the House. In one case a man's automobile is damaged for $300 or $400, or an airplane hits his field and it is damaged for $75; it is a smaller claim.

Mr. BRIGGS. If it is damaged for $1,500—

Mr. EDMONDS. He has to come before the committee.

Mr. BRIGGS. But these gentlemen go right to the department and have their settlements made up to $5,000?

Mr. EDMONDS. That may be true. But remember that every day you detain one of these boats you pay demurrage for it, and the courts always allow the demurrage on boats that are in a collision.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman knows that in filing a libel they give a bond.

Mr. EDMONDS. A man has no opportunity to do it. He can not proceed in admiralty against a Government vessel, and they can not libel a Government vessel.

Mr. BRIGGS. I know that. He has the same redress that every other claimant has that comes before Congress.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true. If you damage a boat for $5,000, every day that the boat is out of commission he charges demurrage on it. If you wait too long, the demurrage will be three or four times the amount of the bill. The demurrage is always acknowledged by the admiralty court and by the Navy Department.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman does not mean to say that the demurrage piles up until the Government restores this $5,000?

Mr. EDMONDS. We have a case before the committee now that answers the gentleman's question. A man had a boat that was run into by a naval boat. It was in the fall. He did not want to use the boat in the winter. He laid it up all winter and repaired it in the spring. The Navy Department surveyed the damage and they disputed the demurrage, but he charged them the demurrage until the boat was in commission again.

Mr. BRIGGS. I do not think this demurrage is a proper damage claim against the vessel. I do not think it comes within the rule of damages.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the Shipping Board has been paying sufficient demurrage—

Mr. BRIGGS. That is a part of the damage claimed.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is always a part of the damage claimed. Mr. BRIGGS. And that is a part of the contract where the contract specifies it. That is an element of tort. They do not compute demurrage against a vessel by reason of not being able to utilize it as a damage claim.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; they do.

Mr. BRIGGS. Then it might average in a year or two years more than the vessel might have cost.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true.

Mr. BRIGGS. And does the gentleman believe we ought to allow that claim?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. That is the reason it has not been reported out.

Mr. BRIGGS. I think a limitation of $1,000 ought to apply to these claims as well as the others.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am not going to quarrel about the amount. We thought $1,000 was a small amount for a ship as compared with the damage to an individual on shore.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. We just passed a bill to provide for claims that might arise after the passage of the act. Now comes one increasing the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, making that jurisdiction retroactive back to April 6, 1917. What is the idea of the committee in making this great discrimination between that class of claims and between the different departments of the Government?

Mr. EDMONDS. That was at the request of the department.

Mr. WALSH. I know the gentleman too well to believe that his committee would do anything the departments come up and ask him to do. I would like some other reason than that, if any. They did not permit that in the other legislation.

Mr. LONDON. Is not that the date of the declaration of war, April 6, 1917, and is it not a fact that a number of collisions have occurred since that period?

Mr. WALSH. If they have they belong to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Under the bill that you just passed can the Navy Department settle claims for $1,000?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Then, it is increased 100 per cent. What is the use of passing this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because the damage in ships is very much heavier than would be the damage to private individuals.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Not necessarily, is it?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, yes. Damages to ships are very expensive. It takes into question the value of the cargo and the damage of docks, and other things.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Many of us do not know anything about the courts we impanel to try these cases. Who compose the court?

Mr. EDMONDS. The United States district court?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am not speaking of that. You say that the shipping interests or the Government impanel a court or a body of men to determine the damage immediately after the damage has occurred.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is the court of inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Who compose the court of inquiry?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is composed of naval officers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it composed of officers of that ship?

Mr. EDMONDS. The officers of the ship are virtually under suspension. The court of inquiry is convened from outside officers. They go there and make an inquiry as to who is to blame. If a person is blamable, he is properly punished. They would not pay a claim unless they found the officer was to blame.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Now, suppose a ship, after having been damaged, is delayed or held in a port for several weeks or months. Does this board of inquiry award damages for the delay in addition to the damage sustained to the ship?

Mr. EDMONDS. In the case I just cited the repairs were watched by the Navy Department, and when they put in their claim there was demurrage with the claim.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. They put in a claim for demurrage?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; they put in a claim for demurrage, but the department disputes the claim for demurrage, and it does not acknowledge the demurrage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Do they ever award demurrage?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; not so far as this class of claims is concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it the intention of Congress to authorize them to award demurrage? That is not your intention, and it is not the intention of the committee?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. We wanted to raise the amount so as to weed out as many of these claims as possible, and with all possible expedition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. There is no intention to award the demurrages?

Mr. EDMONDS. No. I doubt if these cases would have any demurrage on them if they could settle them promptly.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the bill in its present form. If nobody else desires recognition, I would like to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anybody on the committee opposed to the bill desire recognition? If not, the gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for an hour.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this measure is confined solely to the Navy Department. The bill proposes to extend the jurisdiction of claims from the limit of $500 as fixed in the naval appropriation bill for 1911, approved June 24, 1910, to $5,000, and in addition to that it proposes to increase it so that this $5,000 jurisdiction will apply to all cases of damages from accidents or otherwise arising since April 6, 1917.

Now, on the bill that we passed previously we voted down an amendment making it retroactive. There is no reason why we should give the Navy Department this power to settle cases just because it happens to concern damages to vessels and that class of property.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman believe that we ought to single out the Navy Department or any other department and to give it this jurisdiction in the case of claims reaching the sum of $5,000 when we have just passed a bill here limiting the amount to $1,000 covering all departments and independent establishments, including the Navy Department?

Mr. WALSH. I think if we are going to do that, it ought to be done in one bill, and I think that the other measure should have carried a provision with reference to damages to vessels. But the gentleman from Texas will appreciate, of course, the fact that when floating property—vessels and barges and launches and yachts and other craft of that sort—is damaged by naval vessels, the $500 or the $1,000 limit ordinarily in these times will not cover much of damage to that sort of property, and possibly there may be some good reason for increasing the limit within which the Navy Department can make adjustments and settlements.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am free to concede that there may be many instances of that kind, but I also assert that there are many instances in the case of other property where they have gone before the Committee on Claims, before Congress, and pursued the usual method of procedure, whereas now they will have only to go before the Navy Department in order to get their claims settled. I think it should be uniform.

Mr. WALSH. Well, that is true.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Even if there is a good and valid reason for making the limit so much larger in the case of the Navy Department, is there any good reason for making this legislation retroactive?

Mr. WALSH. No. I was about to say that even though there is good reason for placing the limit here at $5,000, certainly we ought not to make the provisions of this law retroactive, because we have just refused to do that to enable every other department to make settlements, even in the case of the Navy Department, and confined that measure to cases that occur after the passage of that bill. But with reference to vessels it is proposed that they can go back to April 6, 1917. In my judgment, we should not pick out a single class and make a special preference and discrimination in favor of a few vessel owners who may have claims pending which could not be settled because of the $500 limit. We should not increase the limit to $5,000 and in addition provide that we will let them in and have their claims settled even if they accrued at any time since April 6, 1917. I therefore suggest to the committee the advisability of amending this bill by eliminating the language, "occasioned since April 6, 1917," and substituting the language "accruing hereafter." If we do that, we can at least say that upon one calendar Wednesday, while acting upon legislation from a single committee, in attempting to pass a bill covering matters similar in character, we to that extent have been consistent, and, if we do that, we shall establish a record that will be embellished with glory and effulgence. I would like to say further—

Mr. BUTLER. Tell us some more about that matter of embellishing. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I think that the sum—$5,000—is a little bit large. The chairman of the committee stated that the reason why they reported this bill out is because the Navy Department wanted it. Well, we used to do that in the days when we were in the war. The gentleman who is now chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BUTLER], the colleague of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. EDMONDS], realizes that many times he brought measures in here, or his committee reported measures in here, that were supported by himself and the members of his committee, and that because of the war emergency they were considered and passed without question. But we are beyond the war now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Surely this bill is not in the interest of the Navy or naval vessels. It is in the interest of other people.

Mr. WALSH. Absolutely. This is not in the interest of the Navy Department. It is not in the interest of the preservation of naval vessels. It is for the benefit of people who have been unfortunate enough to have had their vessels damaged during the war. Well, there are a lot of other people who have suffered damage during the war as the result of activities in other departments of the Government.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman will agree that we are here to represent not only the Navy Department but we are here representing the other people of the country, too.

Mr. WALSH. Well, sometimes we are representing the other people, too, but there ought to be a few of us here remembering that down yonder there is the Treasury Department that they try to lock up every night; but I am afraid that at times when the doors are not locked, as a result of our activities here, quite a considerable portion of the funds will become abstracted.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman whether he has discovered how many of these claims there are?

Mr. WALSH. I doubt whether the Navy Department told the Committee on Claims that, or gave them any information except that they wanted this legislation passed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And there are 57 varieties of these claims.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether we should not postpone action until we get information on this very important question as to how many claims have arisen since April 6, 1917.

Mr. WALSH. We certainly ought to have that information.

Mr. LONDON. I do not believe we should take any action until we have that information.

Mr. RICKETTS. We ought not to take any action until we know.

Mr. WALSH. It might take more time than I have at my disposal before the gentleman could get the information. I yielded to my friend to enable him to propound an inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to know how many of these claims there are pending. Once in a while we hear of a case where some fellow who is not able to steer his boat very well bumps up against a dock and knocks down a piece of the dock, or bumps into some other boat, but I did not know that it was necessary to pass this measure.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania take us into his confidence. We can not hear what he is saying.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to know how many of these claims there are.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know how many there are that will come under this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the amount involved? It might run up into the millions of dollars.

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, it will be nothing like that. There will probably be not more than 30 claims.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman any information whatever as to how many claims there have been?

Mr. EDMONDS. The information given me by the department was that the total number of claims under $500 that have been settled since January 1, 1919, is 195.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts yielded his time?

Mr. WALSH. I have not. I yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] to propound an inquiry. I assumed that if the information was to be furnished it would be furnished by the gentleman's colleague [Mr. EDMONDS] in his own time.

Mr. BUTLER. I have propounded my inquiry, and my colleague [Mr. EDMONDS] has given me the information as nearly as he can. I am surprised, however, to know that so many of these claims for collisions with naval vessels have been made against the Government, because naval gentlemen are supposed not to run against somebody else's ship. The gentleman says there have been 195 of these collision cases settled.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee how many claims in excess of $500 have been filed with the Navy Department?

Mr. EDMONDS. I can not answer that question. The only information they have given me is that 80 per cent of their claims are under $500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What is the use of this Congress undertaking to legislate on a matter concerning which we have absolutely no information? The chairman has stated the number of claims under $500 that have been settled, but he has no information as to the number of claims that have been made in excess of that amount, whether 1 or 500. He just says he wants to pass this bill because the Navy Department want it passed. The people of this country repudiated that kind of business last year. They said they wanted economy and wanted to know the reason why.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, has not the naval appropriation bill always limited the amount of damages that may be paid in any one case to not exceeding $500?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Time and time again the effort has been made to raise the limit to a higher figure, but Congress has always refused.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] is chairman of the important Committee on Claims. Is he in favor of increasing the amount from $500 to $5,000, and is he in favor of making this legislation retroactive to April 6, 1917?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman from Massachusetts wishes to offer an amendment to prevent the bill being retroactive, I am willing.

Mr. WALSH. How about the limit to the amount?

Mr. EDMONDS. I am satisfied to reduce the limit. I think the committee will agree to reduce the limit.

Mr. WALSH. How about $2,500?

Mr. EDMONDS. A limit of $2,500 is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to know more about this than I do now before I will vote for this bill. The effort has been made here several times to increase the limit, and Congress has always refused to raise it above $500.

Mr. WALSH. If the amendments which I have indicated are agreeable to the chairman I do not care to use the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN. What are the amendments which are proposed?

Mr. WALSH. To limit it to claims arising after the passage of this act and to reduce the limit from $5,000 to $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," approved June 24, 1910 (Public, No. 261, 61st Cong., 2d sess.), authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $500, hereafter occasioned by collision, for which collisions vessels of the Navy shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so determined to be due the claimants to Congress at each session thereof through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, namely:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages, where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $5,000, occasioned since April 6, 1917, and hereafter, by collisions or other accidents for which collisions or other accidents vessels of the Navy or vessels in the Naval Service shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to the Congress through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor."

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "or," strike out the word "other," and, after the word "accidents," insert the words "incident to the operation of vessels."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "or," strike out the word "other."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a suggestion. The bill says:

Where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $5,000 occasioned since April 6, 1917, and hereafter by collisions or accidents incident to the operation of vessels.

I wondered whether that ought not to be "damages incident to the operation of vessels." I do not know that I have any objection, but I think it would be better to say "damages incident to the operation of vessels."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. While the language as proposed is not as lucid as it should be, it seems manifest that the word "damages" in line 10 must be occasioned by collision or accident incident to the operation of vessels. Therefore the word damages is related to the two methods of operation.

Mr. MANN. I think that is true the way the bill is drawn, but I wondered whether it ought not to be "damages occasioned by collision or other damages incident to the operation of vessels."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "damages," insert the words "occurring after the passage of this act," and, in line 11, strike out the words "occasioned since April 6, 1917," and strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert the figures "$2,500."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, have the three committee amendments been agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. All the committee amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. This bill is an amendment to existing law, and when you say in your amendment accidents that may occur hereafter, the legal interpretation would carry that word "hereafter" to the date of the original bill, and you might be making a provision that you do not intend to.

Mr. WALSH. I do not say "hereafter," but I say "after the passage of this act."

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It is the same thing and might refer to the passage of the original act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by having it read "after the passage of this amendatory act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks to modify his amendment in the manner suggested. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment as modified is along the line of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania assented to during the general debate. It does not make the provisions of the bill retroactive but only applies to claims arising after the passage of the amendatory act and reduces the sum from $5,000 to $2,500. As I said before, it may be possible, because of the nature of the property and the great number of naval craft in the various harbors of the country, that claims for a little larger amount should be given consideration than was the case in the bill that we passed previously. For that reason I have offered these amendments, and if they are agreed to I see no serious objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment to strike out "2,500" and insert "1,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TINCHER to the amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: In the last line of the amendment strike out the figures "2,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1,000."

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed generally to class legislation. We have spent the greater portion of the day in the consideration of a bill which passed the House giving the departments of this Government the power to settle claims up to a certain amount, namely, $1,000. Now you say to the country that the Navy and the people owning ships on the high seas are entitled to legislation that will enable certain officers of the Navy to settle their claims in a different manner from the claims of others, and it seems to me rather ridiculous. The present law authorizes settlement of these claims up to $500.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman's amendment is agreed to, there is no use in passing the bill at all, because the other bill provides just what the gentleman now seeks. Therefore we might as well dispense with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. TINCHER. That might not be a great mistake.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Possibly not, but I am calling the gentleman's attention to the effect of his amendment.

Mr. TINCHER. I know, and call upon the committee to stop and think how ridiculous it will be that we should select out one class of claims and say, because a man is in the shipping business and has a boat, that therefore his claim ought to have a preference over other classes of claims.

I do not think there is any reason why this Congress should contemplate that the men working for Uncle Sam on the naval vessels are going to be reckless and do damage to other people's property to any greater extent than any other branch of the Government. I can not see why a man who has a damage of $2,500 to his vessel should have a separate and distinct way of having his claim adjusted from what the man has who has a claim against the Government in some other line.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Perhaps there is a good reason. I know the gentleman wants to be fair about it. Damage to floating property is generally higher than ordinary damages caused by automobiles, for instance, because the property runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars in valuation. Therefore, the damages are higher as a rule.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, Congress is going to be in session. We are going to have time, since we have given this power to the various departments to consider these small claims, to consider other claims. I am against delegating to any particular branch of the Government power to spend money without proper consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I agree with the gentleman. Before he offered his amendment we passed a bill providing for the payment of claims up to $1,000.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, I was here at the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. We doubted the jurisdiction and gave them $1,000. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] claims that because vessels are floating property damages may be higher than to some other class of property. I have been on the floor of this House and have seen Congress pass claims for $5,000 and $10,000 because of accidents and other things, so that that argument does not hold good. I think we ought to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment, because I know he is opposed to class legislation.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment. I think this bill is in the interest of economy for the Government. We all know that where it is acknowledged by the Navy Department that certain damage has occurred—and we also know that that damage will be higher in floating property than it will be on shore—that the committee itself will approve of paying the bill, because it is absolutely useless to throw a case into court where the Navy Department itself acknowledges that they have damaged a man for so much. We have always taken their reports. We have refused to settle upon the statements of the claimants because they very frequently ask a very much higher amount. We have tried to play the game squarely. I do not think, if gentlemen will stop to think a minute, that we will save any money for the Government by reducing this amount below $2,500.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true that the committee usually regards the recommendation of the department for a lower amount than the claim as being the amount which the committee would approve if it passes the claim at all?

Mr. EDMONDS. We always do.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is not that true not only of the Navy Department but of other departments?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; we have changed the claims from other departments, and we have brought in bills for claims that the other departments would not grant.

Mr. BRIGGS. But those are exceptions.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; I do not think so. I think the committee generally acts upon its own idea in respect to those claims.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true of the committee when a claim is filed that it submits that claim to the department for recommendation, and, when the recommendation of the department comes in for a certain amount, that that is usually the amount regarded as of merit?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no; there is a considerable difference between having a court of naval experts sit on a collision case and having some man who is the foreman of a gang of laborers out in the Forestry Bureau make a report in respect to some accident that has occurred. There is a good deal of difference between having an expert tell you the result of a survey made, to ascertain the amount of the damage, and a department official walking in and saying that this or that man was hurt and that we ought to pay him something. We send a letter to the department to the effect that one man puts in a bill claiming $10,000 damages, or where another man puts in a bill claiming $5,000 damages. The department sends back a recommendation and says yes, that they think that the man ought to have $10,000, and in the case of the $5,000 man they think that the man ought to have $5,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman will admit that the Navy Department is not the only department that has experts who pass on cases. There may be legal questions involved in the matter outside of the actual damages.

Mr. EDMONDS. Wherever the department disputes a claim we put through an admiralty bill for it.

Mr. BRIGGS. Suppose it does not. Suppose the naval men down there are not disputing the claim and they think that the computation of the amount of damages might be the amount of damages actually suffered without any question with respect to the legal liability one way or the other or the question of whether the United States ought to be regarded as liable. Is not that a matter that ought to go before the committee?

Mr. EDMONDS. Wherever there is a question of liability the Navy Department does not pass on the claim. They say there is a question and they dispute the claim. Where they come in and practically say to you, "If you take this case to court, we are going to go in and say that we have damaged this man in the amount of $4,392." What are you going to do about it?

Mr. BRIGGS. But suppose the War Department has some trucks that damage an automobile and they say that we have injured the man to the extent of $1,500. What about that?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I did not vote for the former bill, but I am willing in this case to vote for $5,000, or if that be defeated I will vote for $2,500. This bill suggests something which I think is rather an opprobrium to our Government. Private owners of ships have no remedy when they suffer damages by reason of collisions with the public vessels of our Government. We are among the very few nations in the world occupying such a position. As the chairman of the committee states, we have endeavored to meet this opprobrium by special bills from time to time. But we really do not meet it by this method because special bills very seldom get through this House. They are objected to by gentlemen who know nothing on earth about them. Consequently we have no remedy, and our Government suffers in the eyes of the civilized world. We insist that Government can do no wrong, and I am opposed to the application of any such regal maxim to the institutions of a free people. Governments do wrong just as individuals do wrong. Another observation: This class of cases are distinct from other cases that we deal with. The departments of the Government that pass upon damages are not experts as a rule. In the case of the Navy they are experts, and they are the most rigid experts in favor of their own freedom from negligence and of the fault of the private vessel, and when a board of naval experts admit the contention or claim of the private vessel it is almost self-evident that the Government is at fault in the collision. Therefore it seems to me if we wish to save time, to practice economy and justice, we should pass a measure of this sort.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I referred to a matter not involved in this amendment and that is the language of the bill providing for damages occasioned by collision and other accidents incident to the operation of vessels and suggested that probably the word "accidents" ought to be "damages." The report on this bill says:

It appears that upon occasions vessels cause damage to cargoes on vessels or docks by the discharge of oil or water, and to vessels and docks by their lines, and in other ways.

The bill makes provision for the payment of such claims as a collision claim. I think that is in error. The discharge of oil and water is not an accident and it is not a collision. If it is to be covered, the language of the bill ought to be changed to provide for accidents and damages caused by collision or other damages incident to the operation of vessels.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BRIGGS. May we have that reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment to the amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. EDMONDS) there were—ayes 23, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee if there is any use in proceeding further with the consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. In my opinion I do not think so. I am not a lawyer and I do not know—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then there is no use in proceeding further in the consideration of this bill in view of the fact we have just passed a bill which covers the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts as amended.

The question was taken and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. EDMONDS. I move to strike out the word "accidents" in line 12 and insert in lieu thereof the word "damages."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: On page 2, line 12, strike out the word "accidents" and insert in lieu thereof the word "damages."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the word "accidents," at the end of line 13 and the first part of line 14, and insert in lieu thereof "other damages."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMONDS: Page 2, lines 13 and 14, strike out the word "accidents" and insert in lieu thereof the words "other damages."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, what is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. REED of New York. Will that language be broad enough to cover demurrage?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think after the explanation we have the department will pay the demurrage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "thereof," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the rules of the common law shall control in ascertaining the elements and amount of damage."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when that suggestion came to my mind, the amount of which the department would have jurisdiction under the bill was $5,000. I do not believe there is very much danger now in view of the limit of $1,000 set by the amendment since adopted. But I wanted to call to the attention of the committee the fact that to the lay mind ordinary demurrage is an element of damage, just as much as physical injury to the property. I remember very well when I first began practicing law—when my mind was that of a layman, although I had a license—I brought an action against a carrier for delay in transporting goods for $3,000 damages, and the judge very properly on demurrer knocked out every cent of the allegation of damages. Now, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee, when he was on the floor, said that elements of damage, such as demurrage, were very often and usually claimed, and that in one case where the injury occurred in the winter, about the time they were tying up the boat, and could not operate it on account of the ice, and the repairs were not made, demurrage was charged for the whole period of time. Before the Committee on War Claims a claim was filed by a bill for injury done to a vessel in New York Harbor by a Government boat. The amount claimed was over $5,000, and of that nearly $3,000 was for demurrage. Now, there can not be, according to the rules of the common law, any recovery for demurrage, except for the period necessary for repairs, and that demurrage must be established by the strict rule of common law. The proposition is this: The Secretary of the Navy may not be a lawyer, and the naval court may not be familiar with the rules of the common law as to damage. They may be familiar as to the operation of ships, and therefore be able to carefully and strictly ascertain the question of liability and never impose liability upon the Government except where it is a clear case of liability, but having ascertained liability they must go further and ascertain the extent and nature of the damage. And therefore we must, to protect this Government, be bound by the rules of common law and not leave the act wide open and, merely because we were at fault, pay the man what he claims. I mean, merely because our boat was at fault.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman knows that the admiralty law recognizes demurrage as a proper claim?

Mr. McSWAIN. I did not know that. I am not a proctor.

Mr. EDMONDS. The reason we denied the claim here on the floor was that they would not pay him demurrage for all winter. The committee does not feel justified in giving it to him, either.

Mr. McSWAIN. Anyway, Mr. Chairman, this is not to be an admiralty court, but a court created by the law of this Congress, and we have the right to prescribe the rules of evidence and the rules that should govern the ascertainment of damages.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5349) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 9, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR PEPPER—MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the able junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is reported to have delivered a speech at the Albany County Republican Club last evening. I would devote no attention to the speech if it were delivered by other than a Member of this body, but I can not believe he was correctly quoted in the morning papers, because I remember that when the junior Senator from Pennsylvania was appointed the organ of reform, the Philadelphia North American, commenting on the appointment, carried an editorial headed "Thank God!" So, evidently the junior Senator from Pennsylvania has been misquoted. I have, however, examined five or six different newspapers, two of them being Philadelphia newspapers, and they all carry the same dispatch. So I will let the junior Senator from Pennsylvania when he arrives tell the Senate whether or not he is correctly quoted when he is reported to have spoken as follows:

I am happy to be the bearer of greetings from Republicans in Pennsylvania to a loyal and representative group of Republicans of the Empire State.

It is to be regretted that this greeting could not be given to you by one whose proved service to the Nation and to the party was itself a passport to your esteem. If either of those two great leaders in whose shadow I stand were here to deliver the message, I realize that it would be far more worthily presented. A greeting by Senator Knox or Senator Penrose would be a far more fitting tribute to your own beloved leader, William Barnes.

But you must take me as I am—a new man in public life—the newest Member of the Senate of the United States, untested as yet by the trying experience of public service; a man who has his spurs yet to win, but who is terribly in earnest in his determination to win them; a man who has every incentive to strenuous effort, including the friendship of the colleague who bore me your invitation, the distinguished senior Senator from New York, JAMES W. WADSWORTH, JR., and possessing also the trust and confidence of the man whose political heroism put me where I am, the rightful leader of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania, William Cameron Sproul.

He then proceeds to discuss the issues of the day, following which he adverts to a subject which was decided two days after he took the oath of office here. I would not be so offensive as to assume that the Senator from Pennsylvania voted without examining the record in the Newberry case, which consists of 2,000 pages; he had two days in which to do it, and it can be done in two days. Discussing the Newberry case, the Senator is reported to have spoken as follows:

I now mention an example of individual courage. I refer to the action of those Republican Senators who steadfastly refused to be terrorized into voting to expel from the Senate the man who had been sent there by a clear majority of the voters of his State. When you realize the success attained by Senator NEWBERRY's implacable enemy in misstating the issue to the public, when you realize how millions of good people in this country had been fooled by Ford's insidious publicity into believing that not they themselves but the Michigan electorate had been duped, you will understand that it took no small degree of courage to face public moral condemnation, which was as vehement as it was unjust.

And in this test of moral courage every single Democrat in the Senate was found wanting. Not one soul was man enough to vote in accordance with his convictions.

"Not one soul was man enough to vote in accordance with his convictions."

They mouthed about the honor of the Senate and the integrity of the individual, and then they proceeded to tarnish that honor and impair that integrity by voting like a flock of sheep. Every single Democrat voted slavishly to dishonor his own colleague for what an unimpeachable majority of the people of Michigan had done when, with full knowledge of all the facts, they freely registered their preference for Senator NEWBERRY.

Mr. President, it can not be that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania has been correctly quoted. I believe he is a man of courage. I have had opportunity within the past 8 or 10 years to be in Philadelphia and to know the people with whom the new Senator associates. They are a moral, upright, and courageous people. His attitude and demeanor since he took his seat here have been the attitude and demeanor of a gentleman. Therefore he must have been misquoted when he imputes dishonor to every Democratic Senator. Had he spoken those words upon the floor of the Senate, the gavel of our distinguished Vice President would have called him to order, and he could not again have opened his mouth until the Senate bade him proceed. I regret he is not here this morning, but I know when he arrives he will either avow or disavow this alleged speech.

This report of the speech makes him say that every single Democratic Senator acted dishonorably in their votes in the Newberry case. I call attention to the fact that eight Republicans voted with the Democrats. If the Democrats impaired their integrity when they cast those votes, then WILLIAM E. BORAH violated his conscience when he voted the same as did Members on this side of the Chamber; ARTHUR CAPPER stained his soul if the Democrats did; and JONES of Washington placed upon his conscience a stain if the Democrats did.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Evidently the President did not feel that way about it, because he appointed one of the Senators who voted as did the Democrats, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], to a seat on the United States circuit court bench.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, one of the most powerful speeches delivered in the Senate in opposition to seating Mr. NEWBERRY was the speech of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the junior Senator from Pennsylvania voted to ratify and confirm the appointment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] voted to exclude the sitting Member, Mr. NEWBERRY; that dauntless man from Wisconsin, who has stood up manfully under the most terrific flail of abuse that ever a public man received [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], voted to exclude the sitting Member; the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] voted to exclude Mr. NEWBERRY; and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], whom I will here designate as the most useful man in public life, voted to exclude Mr. NEWBERRY.

So I regret that the public press should carry a statement attributed to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania as having said that every Democrat violated his honor and violated his conscience when he voted to exclude the sitting Member from Michigan.

But, Mr. President, it is well to recur to the record in this case. Two days after the junior Senator from Pennsylvania took his seat he voted for the following resolution:

*Resolved, * *  That whether the amount expended in the primary was $195,000, as was fully reported and openly acknowledged, or whether there were some few thousand dollars in excess, the amount expended was in either case too large, much larger than ought to have been expended.

The expenditure of such excessive sums in behalf of a candidate, either with or without his knowledge and consent, being contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the honor and dignity of the Senate, and dangerous to the perpetuity of a free government, such excessive expenditures are hereby severely condemned and disapproved.

Eight Republicans and the Senators on this side voted to refuse a seat to a man who was the beneficiary of such methods, and yet the morning newspapers make the junior Senator from Pennsylvania say that the Democrats stained their conscience with dishonor because they refused to seat a man whose election had been brought about by the methods which it has been disclosed were employed.

The junior Senator from Pennsylvania on the roll call voted for that resolution, which declared that such methods as were employed in the Newberry case were harmful to the honor and dignity of the Nation, and the morning newspapers make the junior Senator from Pennsylvania say that those who voted to put the seal of disapproval on such methods have stained themselves with dishonor.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say at this time in connection with this matter. I do not believe that GEORGE WHAR-

TON PEPPER uttered any such speech. He is not present this morning, and is entitled to the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator what sort of an apology the Senator from Arizona is going to make if he finds out that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania did say what he is quoted to have said?

Mr. ASHURST. In the absence of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, I am not going to say as to that; but, possibly, I will have something more to say later in connection with this case. The public press carry a dispatch that a Senator has said that I have been guilty of something dishonorable and that every Senator on this side has acted dishonorably and cowardly. I do not propose, first, that the newspapers shall carry such items without having their accuracy inquired into, and, if such a statement has been made, then I shall know what judgment to make of the recruit.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I do not wonder that the Senator from Arizona, who is my good personal friend and who is a man of the highest character and greatest charm, should be a bit oversensitive about the vote in the Newberry case. I am free to say that the more I look into it and I believe the more that the country looks into it the more inconceivable it is how any man of the unquestioned high character of the Senator from Arizona could ever have voted as he did.

I only suggest at this moment that while it is entirely to be understood that one might be a little sensitive about criticism of such a vote as the Senator from Arizona and his colleagues upon the other side of the Chamber gave in that case, nevertheless the junior Senator from Pennsylvania is not in the Chamber—

Mr. ASHURST. I have already made that observation.

Mr. SPENCER. And undoubtedly he is fully able to take care of himself without any assistance. Undoubtedly everything that he said he will stand by.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I am not quite through. I suggest that the time is a bit premature, and yet I want again to say how cordially I sympathize with the Senator from Arizona in his anxiety over any criticism of his vote, because I know the Senator was wrong, and I hope the time will come when the Senator will be able to see as clearly as I believe the country is seeing more and more how unjust and unfair and unwarranted and inexplicable, from the standpoint which the Senator occupies as a man of distinction and ability, such a vote as he cast was.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. Does the Senator from Missouri approve the remarks attributed by the press to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, and quoted by the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SPENCER. I was not in the Chamber when the remarks were read. I do not know what the junior Senator from Pennsylvania said, and I should not be willing to pass opinions upon a newspaper report in the absence of the man himself. If the junior Senator from Pennsylvania characterized in gentlemanly and parliamentary language, as I know he would, the unfortunate and misguided and unfounded action of the Democratic side with regard to the Newberry case, I should indorse it unqualifiedly. I have done precisely the same thing myself, and I hope to have the opportunity many times to do that thing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Missouri has illustrated the inadvisability of speaking here when one is totally unfamiliar with the question at issue. The Senator from Missouri usually discloses some familiarity with the subject concerning which he speaks. On this occasion he has demonstrated a total ignorance of the matter under discussion by the Senator from Arizona. The Senator from Arizona has read press reports of a speech which is alleged to have been delivered by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, characterizing in distinctly unparliamentary language the acts of all Senators who voted against seating the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY]. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] will, of course, be afforded an opportunity either to affirm or to repudiate that press report.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], in what I take to be one of his characteristic efforts at humor, has expressed sympathy for Senators who voted against seating the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY]; yet it is true, Mr. President, that in the very resolution which secured the Senator from Michigan his seat in this body a shameful, humiliating, and ignoble declaration is made—a declaration that casts a stain upon the title of the Senator from Michigan to his seat; a declaration that the methods by which he has acquired that seat are to be condemned; that the methods by which he obtained that seat are contrary to public policy, subversive of free government, and destructive of the honor and dignity of the Senate. When the Senator from Missouri votes for a resolution containing that declaration he is welcome to take all the pleasure he can derive from my vote, cast in an honest compliance with what I believe to be my duty to the Senate of the United States and to the people of this country. I decline to make a silly jest of a matter of such importance.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have reflected on the question as to whether or not I should advert to the matter in the absence of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, and since the junior Senator from Missouri has come into the Chamber I will repeat what I said. I am familiar with some of the acts of public life of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, who to-day bears an excellent reputation. That he is a charming orator no man can doubt. That he is a scholar and a Christian gentleman no man doubts. Hence, as I said before the junior Senator from Missouri came into the Chamber, I was not prejudging this case. I was only calling attention to the fact that the Philadelphia papers, one Washington paper, and other papers carried the same dispatch, to wit, that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, in the course of a speech given at Albany, at which Mr. William Barnes was present, had seen fit, so the papers say, to apply opprobrious epithets to his own colleagues; had seen fit, so the papers say, to charge them with moral cowardice and with dishonor. I am simply saying that I expect and believe, I have so much confidence in the mental fairness of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] that I believe that when he arrives here he will at once seek recognition and disavow the alleged speech. If he says "I said it," we can quarrel that out here; so I am not drawing any conclusions or making any condemnation at this time.

Let me read again, for the information of the Senator from Missouri, what the junior Senator from Pennsylvania is alleged to have said.

The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is alleged by the papers of the country this morning to have said that a certain vote was a test of statesmanship and then that the Newberry vote was a test of moral courage. Now, I am not much given to thrashing old straw. The Senate, by a solemn vote, decided the Newberry case, and it was ended so far as I was concerned; and there is no man who would stand in my presence and say that I tried to make any miserable political capital out of the blood of a fellow Member of the Senate, because if some man, big or little, said that to me he would receive something else than words, because his words would be foully false.

In addition to that, I feel justified this morning in saying that I have never by any insinuation charged a Member of the majority with an improper motive in any vote that he cast on the Newberry case. On this side we have been accused of partisanship in the Newberry case. Now, the papers say that Democratic Senators are accused of dishonor and of staining our souls with the crime of voting to turn out a fellow Member simply because of partisan prejudice. I am willing to believe that the votes in the Newberry case on your side, sirs, were cast because you believed you were right; but you have not the manhood over there, it seems—I do not go outside the Chamber to say this—you have not the manhood to say that Senators on this side voted for what they thought was right? It is eternally dinned in the public ear that we are voting for politics. Let the Democratic Party lose forever if it must win on the blood of some innocent citizen.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. KING. I suggest to my friend from Arizona that on the other side there were a number of distinguished Senators, some of whom I see in the Chamber this morning—the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and of course the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and other Republicans—who voted against seating Mr. NEWBERRY. If the Senator from Pennsylvania is quoted accurately, then he charges with dishonor Senators of honor and integrity upon his own side.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, I do not think anyone on this side of the Chamber who voted against Mr. NEWBERRY is in need of any defense.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator listen to the statement that has been published in the morning papers?

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me add that the reason why these charges are made upon the other side is because they have to get an excuse for their position, and this is their defense.

Mr. STANLEY. It is as good a one as they have.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. The excuse is that we voted corruptly.

Mr. ASHURST. It is unpleasant to thrash old straw, but the Senate now occupies a position that it shall not continue to occupy without my protest.

On the day when the unknown soldier was buried, where was the United States Senate? Patriotically, we came here at an early hour to take part in those sad yet beautiful exercises. We went out upon the portico. There we were told that the governors of the States would take the first place—very well; that the Justices of the Supreme Court would then take their place in the line—very well; then that the Cabinet ministers would take their place ahead of Senators in the line—very well; that the Assistant Secretaries of State and chiefs of bureaus should then take their place—very well; that the stenographers of the Cabinet ministers and the messengers to the Cabinet ministers should then take their place in the line of march; and then the Senators should take their places.

We took our places without murmuring, our sense of duty and propriety caused us to decline to object or make a complaint at that time. It would have been indecent under the circumstances if we had protested against the indignity that was offered to the Senate upon that occasion when the indignity was offered to us the War Department—

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. WARREN. This is leading to debate that is entirely out of order until the bill is read. Senators insisted upon the bill having the formal reading, and under our rules nothing can intervene until that reading is completed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the reading of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the pending appropriation bill.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether in his reference to a demand being made for the reading of the bill he alludes to a statement made by the junior Senator from Utah yesterday?

Mr. WARREN. The junior Senator from Utah objected to a unanimous-consent agreement, which, of course, forced the reading of the bill, and it is about to be read as the Senator insisted should be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Wyoming will do me the courtesy to state, or at least to believe, that the demand for the reading of the bill was merely because of the lateness of the hour, it then being half past 5.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator undertook to make the Senate sit still later by asking to have it read twice. That is the fact.

Mr. KING. If the Senator is going to insist, very well. I was about to withdraw my request. I rose merely to ask the Senator whether he considered the attitude of the Senator from Utah yesterday as a request for the reading, and I was going to withdraw that if he so considered; but if the Senator desires to be offensive—

Mr. WARREN. The Senator was very slow, after he came in, about withdrawing his request. The matter of these appropriation bills is nothing to me personally, but they have to be passed. There must be some time when they can be considered, and if the Senator insist on his right to object to a unanimous-consent agreement to do away with the formal reading, I, of course, submit with perfect good nature and ask that it may be done. When that is done we can proceed, then, in regular order, and if there is debate, it may occur; but certainly it can not occur in order when the first formal reading of the bill is in progress.

Mr. KING. If I may be permitted one moment, I resent the statement made by the Senator that there was any indication of delay upon my part in withdrawing my request for the reading of the bill when I came into the Chamber to-day. When I came into the Chamber the Senator from Arizona had the floor. I did not know what had preceded my entrance into the Chamber; so I deny the implication carried in the words of the Senator from Wyoming. The Senator from Wyoming seems to think that he has a preeminent right here, a right of way for everything. I withdraw my request.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator knows I am not insisting upon any right not possessed by him and every other Senator. As I understand, the Senator has withdrawn the objection to a unanimous-consent agreement that we may omit the formal reading and proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall finish in a very few moments.

Mr. WARREN. What I did intend to say to the Senator was that the reading should be first attended to. Have I consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield, but I want to conclude in a few minutes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the bill is now up for consideration, and I assume that if Senators address the Chair or address the Senate, their remarks will be directed to the bill, and that the latitude usually taken by Senators will be taken.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has no right to impose any such condition.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I give notice that I am going to speak on another subject, and I am going to speak quite soon, or we will have a quorum here all day, and I will speak all day at different times. I have postponed speaking for two days in order to allow some important legislation to be passed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senators evidently misunderstand me. The question is whether there is an appropriation bill before the Senate or not, and a Senator probably can indulge in the liberty that so often entertains the Senate and speak on another subject. But, of course, he must recognize that it is during the consideration of an appropriation bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I misunderstood the Senator. I give notice that I shall speak on another subject.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR PEPPER—MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator from Arizona has very pertinently and very properly commented upon the disposition to relegate the legislative department of this Government to that subordinate position in the public eye which it actually occupies in the transaction of the public business. Is the Senator surprised that the time has come when the heads of departments, when chief clerks in bureaus, who are really running this country, should advise this formal, stately, and comparatively innocuous assembly to go away back and sit down when there is something doing in the public eye? There was a time when, pursuant to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, we enacted laws, and those laws governed the country. To-day we are more and more a mere conduit by which the constitutional power vested in us by the people is quietly and silently conveyed to various bureaus who run the country. This is not a government of laws any longer; it is a government of regulation, and why not let the rulers of the country have the first place on a great occasion of that kind, and let these little Senators, who once occupied a position of power, get in wherever they can?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, when I was interrupted some time ago I was pointing out that on the day when the beautiful and sad services in honor of the unknown dead were had in this city, Senators, through some mistake or through some willful, deliberate attempt to insult the Senate, were relegated to the rear, but that the Senate was composed of men of good manners, and they declined at that time to notice the insult cast upon them by the War Department, and they declined to scramble and mar the symmetry of such beautiful exercises. Hence they took their places and marched behind the bureau chiefs et al.

We are all proud of the Senate. There is not a youth in the land but who hopes he may sometime have an opportunity either to be a Member of the Senate or to sit in its galleries and hear Senators discuss those questions which deal with the sovereignty of 48 States and the ever-present and complex propositions of State and national sovereignty; but surely the Senate will not pass by and ignore a report wherein it has been alleged that some Member has charged nearly half of the membership with dishonor, cowardice, and with a partisanship so rank and so venomous that they are incapable of doing their duty on a great moral question. Let me read again the article referred to, because the junior Senator from Missouri has asked for the reading of it, and I read it to him. The report alleges that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania said:

And in this test of moral courage every single Democrat in the Senate was found wanting. Not one soul was man enough to vote in accordance with his convictions. They mouthed about the honor of the Senate and the integrity of the individual; and they then proceeded to tarnish that honor and impair that integrity by voting like a flock of sheep. Every single Democrat voted slavishly to dishonor his own colleague for what an unimpeachable majority of the people of Michigan had done when, with full knowledge of all the facts, they freely registered their preference for Senator NEWBERRY.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Missouri, who does me the honor to listen to these remarks, having made the report in the Senate from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, according to the custom of the Senate, had charge of the Newberry case. He has spoken several times. He spoke ably. He gave himself a new dignity as a Senator; but I never heard from him the charge that those who did not agree with him on this great question stained themselves with dishonor. In the most heated conflicts, when the blood is running riot and when we are in clashing debate, I never heard him say, even in the moment of heat or anger or resentment, that anybody on this side or on any other side who did not agree with him was guilty of dishonor. So I trust that Senators will not feel impatient when I rise to speak on a question which I conceive to be of importance. Have you from North Carolina, sir, have you from Kentucky, have you from Alabama, have you, sir, from Utah, have you from Texas, has any Senator descended to such an estate that he can be told by the public press that a fellow Senator has said that he was guilty of dishonor when he voted his convictions?

The dignity and honor of this Senate will be maintained. When you open the door to your breasts and consult that monitor which all men carry—your conscience—you will say you do not believe that the Senator from Pennsylvania made that speech; and if he did make it, he should not have made it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the record in this case shows that there were enough Senators on the other side of the Chamber who agreed with our position with reference to this matter to have made the seating of NEWBERRY impossible, and they only secured success in their schemes for keeping him in this body by the adoption of a stultifying resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. That is pretty severe.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean to say that those who believe he was not entitled to his seat under the circumstances are not confined to this side of the Chamber; and I mean to say that there were enough on the other side of the Chamber, if I am advised correctly, who would have joined with us in our action but for a stultifying resolution which was adopted in order to get their votes.

Mr. ASHURST. In view of the resolution adopted by the majority, declaring that the methods used to procure the election of the junior Senator from Michigan were subversive of public liberty and were against the national honor, it does not lie in the mouth of any Senator on the other side to accuse us of dishonor when we vote to refuse a seat to the beneficiary of such methods.

Talk about Lorimerism. William Lorimer stood three days in that aisle and delivered a speech which I well remember. It brought tears to the eyes of spectators and of Senators alike. Had such a preamble as was attached to the Newberry resolution been attached to the Lorimer resolution, Lorimer would have torn it into pieces and flung it into the face of the one who introduced it, even though it would have seated him to accept it. I repeat, it does not lie in the mouth of anybody on the other side to charge the Democratic Senators and eight Republicans with dishonor simply because they do not agree with a majority on a great question which ought not to be partisan.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD, in 8-point type, in parallel columns, the resolution seating the sitting Member from Michigan and the alleged speech of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, so far as it refers to the Newberry case. May I have that permission, and may the Public Printer be directed to print the two in parallel columns?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator will not press his request. The newspaper clipping which he has is premature. If the Senator will modify his request to insert in parallel columns the resolution to which he refers and the full statement or full speech of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, which can easily be obtained, I think there will be no objection.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe the Senator is right. I will therefore ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD what has just been furnished to me as the speech of our colleague, Mr. PEPPER. I read the legend:

For release 10 p. m., February 8.—Remarks of GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER, junior Senator from Pennsylvania, at dinner of the Albany County Republican organization, February 8, 1922.

I do not know that this actually is the speech of the Senator. There has been furnished to me purporting to be a copy given to the press. I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD this purported or alleged speech, and opposite the paragraph wherein the junior Senator from Pennsylvania is alleged to have talked of the Newberry case, I ask unanimous consent to insert the resolution adopted in the Newberry case.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the Senator compared the clipping with the paper that he holds in his hand, and does he find that the newspaper correctly quotes the paper given to the press for release?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I have not. I think that is a wise observation. I will therefore ask the Secretary to read that portion of the alleged speech of Senator PEPPER whilst I compare it. I will ask the Secretary to begin with the last paragraph of the alleged speech, on page 1, and we will now compare and see whether the speech given to the press gallery compares or tallies with the speech that was published.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

That is an illustration of party loyalty. I now mention an example of individual courage. I refer to the action of those Republican Senators who steadfastly refused to be terrorized into voting to expel from the Senate the man who had been sent there by a clear majority of the voters of his State. When you realize the success attained by Senator NEWBERRY's implacable enemy is misstating the issue to the public—when you realize how millions of good people in this country had been fooled by Ford's insidious publicity into believing that not they themselves but the Michigan electorate had been duped—you will understand that it took no small degree of courage to face public moral condemnation, which was as vehement as it was unjust. And in this test of moral courage every single Democrat in the Senate was found wanting. Not one soul was man enough to vote in accordance with his convictions. They mouthed about the honor of the Senate and the integrity of the individual and then they proceeded to tarnish that honor and impair that integrity by voting like a flock of sheep. Every single Democrat voted slavishly to dishonor his own colleague for what an unimpeachable majority of the people of Michigan had done when with full knowledge of all the facts they freely registered their preference for Senator NEWBERRY.

Mr. ASHURST. That is all I care to have read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask whether the Senator from Missouri indorses that?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I do not believe, any more than the junior Senator from Pennsylvania believes—and I dare speak for him—that the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber are less honorable than the Senators on this side of the Chamber. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania, if Senators will read that language in the light of the circumstances around it, says no such thing as the Senator from Arizona seems to read into it. I believe that any man who voted to put the badge of eternal dishonor upon a colleague was branding himself, his own honor, by such an act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Not yet. That does not mean that the man who voted through lack of information or for any one of a thousand other reasons is himself a dishonest man; but I do say to the Senator from Washington, who asked me the question, that any man who could vote to put upon his colleague a brand of eternal dishonor branded his own honor by the act. By that I do not mean that the man himself is a man of dishonor; I do not mean that the man is a dishonorable man, but I mean that that act reflects upon the man who thus voted and not upon the man against whom he voted. I do not want to quibble with words.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Missouri has quibbled with words and is guilty of a casuistry that is not worthy the distinguished Senator. His statement just made deliberately is worse, in my opinion, than the statement attributed to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania. The junior Senator from Missouri has now branded every man who voted to unseat Mr. NEWBERRY as dishonorable and as guilty of dishonor, and the Senator from Missouri, I deliberately charge here, has made a more serious charge against his colleagues than was made by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senate will now understand that I have caused to be read the alleged speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania, so far as it relates to the Newberry case. It tallies with the report which appears in the press dispatches of the Philadelphia Ledger, a reputable journal. I do not know its party politics, but it is a journal of wide circulation.

I now conclude my remarks, with the understanding that I have secured permission and that the Public Printer is directed to print the alleged speech in the RECORD, and opposite to and parallel with the paragraph relating to the Newberry case there is to be printed the resolution adopted by the Senate seating the sitting Member [Mr. NEWBERRY], and the roll call as well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SPENCER. I have not a particle of objection; in fact, I can see the desirability of printing in full the speech which the junior Senator from Pennsylvania made—

Mr. ASHURST. Is alleged to have made.

Mr. SPENCER. Is alleged to have made, and I have no doubt that the copy which the Senator from Arizona produces is in all probability a true copy. It comes with the earmarks, coming from the press, of an advance copy of the speech.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad the Senator says that, because it gives me a feeling that I am not doing wrong in presenting it for the RECORD.

Mr. SPENCER. I think it has all the earmarks of authenticity.

Mr. ASHURST. It may be.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection whatever to incorporating in the RECORD the resolution in connection with the Newberry case, and the vote. In fact, I am proud of the vote, and the more often these two things are incorporated in the RECORD, the better I shall be pleased. But I suggest to the Senator that, aside from the typographical difficulty of the case, it is not quite fair to arrange them in any particular artistic arrangement. Let what the Senator wants precede the resolution, but do not let us draw a diagram of argument and insert in parallel columns in a partisan address something that is not directly concerned with the address.

Mr. ASHURST. No; there is a paragraph in the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania which charges eight Republicans, as I construe it, and a number of Democrats, with dishonor. It charges them with a base and servile act. It charges them with having voted contrary to their consciences. It charges them with having voted as a flock of sheep on the most important question that can come before the Senate, to wit, the right of a sitting Member to a seat or of a man claiming the right to a seat. We are alleged to have been charged by a Member of this body with an act of dishonor, an act which, if true, should make our names a hissing and a byword throughout the Nation. There is a charge of a specific act of infamy; I want the country and the Senate to know what it was we did that put upon us this stain of dishonor. We are charged with this dishonor because we voted to unseat a man whom you yourselves say procured the election by means subversive of public liberty and national honor.

I ask again for unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in parallel columns that paragraph on the alleged speech of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania making the charge and opposite that what we really did. I am not seeking the niceties and artistic appearance of the RECORD. I want the charge to appear. I want the act upon which the charge is predicated to appear, and to appear opposite in parallel columns, so that when FURNIFOLD McLEND SIMMONS's constituents read that he has been guilty of dishonor, when THADDEUS H. CARAWAY's constituents read that he has been guilty of dishonor, when the constituents of that man who possesses as much greatness of heart and brain as any man this Republic ever produced, WILLIAM E. BORAH, read that he has been guilty of an act of dishonor, they can turn to the other column and see what that act was. When the constituents of the useful and able Senator from Washington, Mr. JONES, read that he has been guilty of an act of dishonor, let them, without thumbing through many pages, cast their eye over one column and see what it is he did that brought upon him this merciless flailing.

I think the Senate should grant me the right to direct the Public Printer to print in parallel columns the charge of dishonor made against us, and our reply, the resolution upon which we voted. The junior Senator from Missouri ought to withdraw his objection and let it be printed in the RECORD in that way.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator, in addition to what he has said about having to resort to the adoption of a stultifying and dishonoring resolution, if he does not know the fact, and it is a very significant fact in connection with this charge of partisan motives on this side of the Chamber, that the administration and all the forces of the Republican Party had to bring to bear all possible pressure from every direction in order to get enough Republican votes to seat Mr. NEWBERRY.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I renew my request.

Mr. SPENCER. I can not see in it any useful purpose, and I conceive it to be a bad precedent for the Senate to direct the typographical arrangement of material in the RECORD. I hope the Senator will print the full address of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania; I shall be glad to have him print the entire resolution; but I object to the designation as to the arrangement which the Senator from Arizona suggests.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Public Printer be directed to print in the RECORD, in 8-point type, the alleged speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and that directly opposite the paragraph charging Democratic Senators with dishonor the Public Printer be directed to print, in the opposite column, the resolution adopted seating the sitting Member, TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Norris	Stanfield
Ball	Heflin	Oddie	Swanson
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Underwood
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Page	Wadsworth
Caraway	Kendrick	Phipps	Warren
Colt	Keyes	Polindexter	Watson, Ga.
Cullerson	King	Pomerene	Weller
Fernald	Ladd	Ransdell	Williams
Fletcher	La Follette	Robinson	Willis
France	Lodge	Sheppard
Glass	McKinley	Simmons
Hale	McNary	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators and the following Senator answered to his name when called:

Hitchcock

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Borah	Calder	Kellogg	McCormick
Broussard	Ernst	Kenyon	Moses
Bursum	Gerry	Lenroot	Sutherland

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, when a quorum was called I had moved that there be printed in the RECORD the alleged speech of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania; and I further moved that directly opposite the paragraph wherein he charged certain Senators with dishonor there be printed the resolution adopted by the Senate seating Mr. NEWBERRY, but upon reflection it occurs to me that I ought to withhold that motion until the junior Senator from Pennsylvania is present to avow or disavow the speech. Hence I will ask permission to defer the motion until the junior Senator from Pennsylvania shall have had an opportunity to avow or disavow the correctness of the speech which I have asked be inserted in the RECORD this morning. Mr. President, have I permission to insert the alleged speech in the RECORD? Is that understood?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The speech referred to is as follows:

REMARKS OF GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER, JUNIOR SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA, AT DINNER OF THE ALBANY COUNTY REPUBLICAN ORGANIZATION, FEBRUARY 8, 1922.

I am happy to be the bearer of greetings from Republicans in Pennsylvania to a loyal and representative group of Republicans of the Empire State.

It is to be regretted that this greeting could not be given to you by one whose proved service to the Nation and to the party was itself a passport to your esteem. If either of those two great leaders in whose shadow I stand were here to deliver the message I realize that it would be far more worthily presented. A greeting by Senator Knox or Senator Penrose would be a far more fitting tribute to your own beloved leader, William R. Barnes.

But you must take me as I am—a new man in public life—the newest member of the Senate of the United States—untested as yet by the trying experience of public service—a man who has his spurs yet to win, but who is terribly in earnest in his determination to win them. A man who has every incentive to strenuous effort, including the friendship of the colleague who bore me your invitation, the distinguished senior Senator from New York, JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Jr., and possessing also the trust and confidence of the man whose political heroism put me where I am, the rightful leader of the Republican Party in Pennsylvania, William Cameron Sproul.

It has always been a great thing to be a Republican; but it is especially satisfying to be a Republican to-day. The true test of satisfaction in life is the greatness of responsibility; and we are the heirs of the responsibility which crushed the Democratic Party—a responsibility so heavy that nobody but Republicans can discharge it. Therefore nobody can daunt us by pointing to the enormous difficulties in our path. Nobody can terrorize us by recounting the obstacles to achievement. We are they who are at their best when great demands are made upon them. We are the undaunted and the unterrified. We are Republicans.

There are three Republican characteristics which are standing us in good stead now. They are loyalty, courage, and a wholesome mixture of vision and common sense.

In the Senate the other day we passed the bill empowering the President, through a commission, to refund the indebtedness of foreign Governments to the United States. Democratic orators drew gloomy pictures of the frightful results which would follow if we insisted upon adopting a business method of dealing with a business situation. The recognized Democratic spokesmen on the floor of the Senate shrieked about the business connections of the Secretary of the Treasury, hinted darkly at the prospective control of the commission by international bankers, and broadly intimated that the administration could not be trusted in such a transaction. This was a challenge to party loyalty. We were not slow to respond. We declared our assurance that the interests of the Treasury are safe in the hands of Secretary Mellon, and we gave a rousing vote of confidence to our wise and faithful leader, President Harding.

That is an illustration of party loyalty. I now mention an example of individual courage. I refer to the action of those Republican Senators who steadfastly refused to be terrorized into voting to expel from the Senate the man who had been sent there by a clear majority of the voters of his State. When you realize the success attained by Senator NEWBERRY's implacable enemy in misstating the issue to the public—when you realize how millions of good people in this country had been fooled by Ford's insidious publicity into believing that not they themselves but the Michigan electorate had been duped—you will understand that it took no small degree of courage to face public moral condemnation which was as vehement as it was unjust. And in this test of moral courage every single Democrat in the Senate was found wanting. Not one soul was man enough to vote in accordance with his convictions. They mouthed about the honor of the Senate and the integrity of the individual, and then they proceeded to tarnish that honor and impair that integrity by voting like a flock of sheep. Every single Democrat voted slavishly to dishonor his own colleague for what an unimpeachable majority of the people of Michigan had done when, with full knowledge of all the facts, they freely registered their preference for Senator NEWBERRY.

Having given an illustration of party loyalty and of individual courage, I wish to refer briefly to what I have described as a wholesome mixture of vision and common sense. The Congress that is called upon both to enact a wise tariff law and, in the Senate, to pass upon the treaties which will come before us, must have these combined qualities in eminent degree.

It will be a statesman's task to determine whether the tariff or the treaties should first be disposed of. When I give free rein to my vision I am eager to take up the treaties. When I am dominated by prosaic common sense I give heed to the fact that the needs of American business unquestionably demand an immediate solution of the tariff problem. With the rashness of inexperience, if the decision were mine I should unhesitatingly press for an immediate consideration of the tariff, push it through against all irresponsible efforts at obstruction, and then proceed to the all-important problem of foreign relationships.

However, the order in which the tariff and the treaties shall come before the Senate will be determined by wiser heads than mine.

In anticipation of the coming of the treaties I have no disposition to discuss the several documents in detail. When you study them you will find that they are not so many isolated documents but that they are interrelated in such a way as to be parts of a great plan for dealing with international problems.

Perhaps you will permit me to state briefly my own attitude toward international relations.

I have always believed that a sound procedure is to apply on a world-wide scale principles which are familiar to all who in daily life are called upon to deal with ruptures between individuals.

If I perceive that two or more of my friends are drifting through misunderstanding toward hostility, I must take one of three courses with reference to their situation.

I may stand aloof on the theory that intervention may do more harm than good.

I may go to the other extreme and try to get all parties to exchange pledges with me that as their controversies develop they will submit them to my determination, will abide by my award, and that those who keep their pledge will unite with me in disciplining one who breaks it.

I may avoid both these extremes and say to my friends, "I do not ask you to assent to any particular solution of your problems or to make any promise respecting the course that you will pursue if efforts at adjustment fail; but I do ask you to give me your pledge that before you break apart or do any hostile act toward one another you will give me an opportunity to talk it over with you and a last chance to bring your minds together."

Here are three perfectly distinct courses: First, to stand aloof; second, to pledge the disputants to a particular method of settlement and to a plan for coercing the refractory; third, to exchange promises that before any hostile act is done by anybody all parties concerned will sit down and talk the situation over.

The first of these courses seems to me to be wholly inadequate. The second of them is essentially the program of the League of Nations, to the whole theory and practice of which the United States is unalterably opposed as ever. The third course is the one along which our President would lead us, and in so leading us I believe that he will have behind him the vast majority of right-thinking Americans.

In this connection I call your attention to the remarkable speech made by ex-Gov. Cox at a recent Jackson Day banquet. I commend this utterance to you as a comprehensive statement of the political philosophy which the Democratic Party would apply to world problems. I hope that neither Gov. Cox nor his party will ever be permitted to get away from that speech. With obvious sincerity it commends to the American people a single remedy for industrial depression, high prices, international complications, and the financial difficulties of foreign States. The simple and sufficient remedy thus commended is to join the League of Nations. This naive prescription is accompanied by an attack upon the work of the American delegates to the Washington conference and is coupled with the following dignified assertion: "In the face of these fundamental truths the administration at Washington is vainly trying to bring better times by resort to the noisy methods of a circus." If a Republican administration were actually doing anything of this sort it would be deplorable judgment, for in this highly specialized line we must admit the superiority of our Democratic friends and the preeminent qualification of Gov. Cox to be the central figure in that particular form of popular entertainment.

But just as the Democratic standard bearer was sensing the failure of the Washington conference, the announcements were made which demonstrated its entire success. Just as he was luxuriating in the prospect of deepening international gloom, the sun burst forth and a new day dawned. And this was precisely what anybody but a Democrat might have expected, for just as President Harding has shown his capacity to gather about him the kind of men whom America likes to trust, so he and his great Secretary of State have worked out a method of dealing with international problems that is as effective as it is sound. If in a few words you are ever asked to sum up the difference between Republicans and Democrats, you can not do better than place side by side the present Cabinet and the one that immediately preceded it. If you are ever asked to make a comparative exhibit of Republican and Democratic achievement, you will do well to compare the splendid outcome of a conference modestly undertaken in the proper spirit with the futilities of a grandiose scheme that was bad in conception and worse in execution.

You, my good friends, and such as you are those who will stand behind the President as thus he resolutely attacks one grave problem after another, and as loyal Republicans you will rejoice with exceeding great joy when on the day of reckoning a grateful country exclaims, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) transferring to the custody of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution certain relics now in the possession of the Department of State, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 487) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1948) for the relief of Virgil O. McWhorter (Rept. No. 488); and

A bill (H. R. 7483) for the relief of Robert G. Whitfield (Rept. No. 489).

Mr. BURSUM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 942) for the relief of James Johnson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 490) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (S. 3130) granting an increase of pension to Ruby J. C. Furlong (with accompanying papers); which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhues, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) providing for the printing of 16,800 additional copies of Senate Document No. 114, Sixty-seventh Congress, relative to the improvement of the St. Lawrence River.

The message also announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5349. An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels; and

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1831. An act to amend section 237 of the Judicial Code;

S. 2124. An act to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands contained within sections 17 and 20, township 3 south, range 1 west, St. Stephens meridian, Alabama;

S. J. Res. 99. Joint resolution providing a site upon public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., for the erection of a statue of Dante; and

S. J. Res. 140. Joint resolution relative to payment of tuition for Indian children enrolled in Montana State public schools.

MEAT PACKERS AND UNRELATED LINES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request for printing in the RECORD. Senators will remember that on the 3d day of February there was under consideration a resolution introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] relative to a modification of the so-called consent decree which related to the packers. The resolution was adopted by the Senate unanimously, as far as I recall. I voted for it, I now remember, and I think every Senator present did.

I think as a matter of fairness, to keep the record straight, this statement from the Attorney General ought to go in the RECORD, because it is now discovered that on the 20th of January, almost two weeks before the time the Senate adopted the resolution, the interdepartmental committee had already reported to the Attorney General, and that report has now been approved.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a brief statement from the New York Times under date of February 8, 1922.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Feb. 8, 1922.]

DAUGHERTY REFUSES CANNERS TO COURT—REFUSES TO SEEK MODIFICATION OF DECREE FORBIDDING SALE OF UNRELATED COMMODITIES.

[Special to the New York Times.]

WASHINGTON, February 7.

The Department of Justice has turned a deaf ear to the request of California cannery companies that it should move for a modification of the decree forbidding packing companies to engage in the sale of commodities unrelated to their business. Attorney General Daugherty has ruled that the appeal should be made direct to the courts.

In the following statement issued this afternoon Mr. Daugherty said: "On the question of a modification of the consent decree in the case of the United States of America v. Swift & Co. and others, with reference to unrelated commodities, I have come to the conclusion that such grave and far-reaching questions, which affect not only the provisions of the decree with respect to unrelated commodities but which also strike at the very foundation of the entire decree and are of such vital interest to the public generally, are matters which, regardless of what position the Department of Justice might assume, must be ultimately decided by the court which entered the decree before any modification could be made, and as those who most strongly oppose any modification, namely, the wholesale grocers, are now parties to this cause by intervention, which intervention has been sustained by the court since the request for this hearing before the Attorney General was granted, it seems that the way is now open for those who urged a modification and who so earnestly contended that they have been seriously injured by this decree and have never had their day in court to present such questions and contentions in the first instance to the court for decision, without the same being in any way prejudged by the Attorney General.

"Therefore I feel that this request by the California Cooperative Canneries Co. and others for a modification of this decree should be presented in the first instance to the court which entered this decree and not to the Attorney General."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 5349. An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels; and

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave before 1 o'clock on business connected with the conference, and I am going to ask the indulgence of the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate to allow me to have an amendment on page 30 of this bill disposed of, if possible, before I go. I think there will be no objection to the request.

Mr. WARREN. There is no objection on the part of the chairman of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee amendment on page 30 proposes, beginning with line 20 on that page, to strike out all of lines 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, and on page 31 all of lines 1 to 6, both inclusive, in the following words:

No part of the moneys appropriated or made available by this act shall be used or expended for the purchase, acquisition, repair, or reconditioning of any vessel, commodity, article, or thing which, at the time of the proposed purchase, acquisition, repair, or reconditioning, can be manufactured, produced, repaired, or reconditioned in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased, acquired, repaired, or reconditioned otherwise: Provided, That this limitation shall only apply to vessels while in the harbors of the United States, and all expenditures in connection with such work are to be considered in estimating the cost.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to take the time of the Senate in regard to that provision, which is part of the House bill, further than to say that it is based on provisions now existing in both the Army and the Navy appropriation acts providing for the supplying of articles required by the Government by navy yards and arsenals if they can furnish them cheaper than they can be obtained in the open market; and this provision adds "repair or reconditioning of any vessel." As I say, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to go into the details about it; but I have talked with the members of the committee and I think they will make no objection to leaving the House provision as it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What page is it?

Mr. LODGE. Page 30.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senator, but the matter really is not clear to my mind, and if the Senator can give a little further information about it I shall be under obligations to him.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is now provided by law, on page 29 of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922:

No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquisition of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquisition can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government arsenals of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased or procured otherwise.

There is the same provision in regard to the Navy in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1922, on page 20:

No part of the moneys appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquisition of any article or articles that, at the time of the proposed acquisition, can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards of the United States, when time and facilities permit, for a sum less than it can be purchased or acquired otherwise.

That is, it is a provision that where the Government is making certain articles, those articles can be purchased by other departments of the Government when they can get them cheaper in the open market. This provision of the House bill extends it to the repair or conditioning of ships. It gives an opportunity to the navy yards of the country to make bids on the conditioning or repair of ships, and if they are lower than those offered by private yards it gives an opportunity for the Government to have such bids taken.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether it is the intention, so far as the Senator knows, to keep up all of these navy yards at the expense of the Government, keeping the employees in the employ of the Government and subject to retirement?

Mr. LODGE. This, of course, can only apply to navy yards that are in existence, where the overhead charges are going on all the time. If their machinery and docks and everything are lying idle, and can be used to save money to the Government by supplying other Government departments with Government work, this provision gives them an opportunity to make the bid. That is all it is.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have that opportunity now, have they not?

Mr. LODGE. No; they have not the authority.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the course suggested by the Senator will not be effective unless certain factors of cost are not charged to the Government, because experience has demonstrated that ordinarily it costs a great deal more to take care of Government matters than for private persons to do the same thing.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had hoped not to be obliged to go into all these details. This work has been done by Government yards, and done much below the bids made by private yards, in the past. These provisions are strongly approved by the Director of the Budget, who certainly is economical. What is provided in the laws that I have already read—and I can show how much has been done in that way, if it is necessary—was put in by the House. The provision is a House provision, and they are not engaged in wasting money now.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the evidence before our committee was that it would be very costly to the Government.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, I suppose there is no help for it except to go into it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the Senator read the testimony given before the committee by Mr. Lasker, who said that while it might save money in some respects to keep the navy yards going, he gave an example of a ship in Louisiana which was costing $800 a day. He said that if he had to write back to a navy yard to get a little steering wheel or something of that kind which would cost $25, it would cost $1,000 to keep up the ship while he was getting the little piece of machinery for it. He could buy the piece of machinery for $25, but being required to go to the navy yard to get it it would cost $1,000. That was the evidence before our committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is also other evidence before the committee in the House.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will yield to me a minute, I should like to make an observation on this amendment, so that, if I am wrong about it, he can answer it in what he has to say.

The committee amendment strikes out this provision as incorporated in the House bill. Therefore, if it remains stricken out, it of course goes to conference, where it can be readjusted if it is deemed desirable. If we enact what the House enacted, as the Senator from Massachusetts indicates, we put ourselves in what seems to me a perfectly impossible condition, and I submit to this Senate this single illustration:

The House provision says that no part of the money of this appropriation can be expended for the repair of any ship unless that repair has been submitted to a navy yard, and it is found that the navy yard can not make the repair for a less sum than an outside bid. Now, everybody knows that a navy yard can not give anybody a bid, and never has given anybody a bid.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I yielded for a question.

Mr. SPENCER. I did not ask the Senator to yield for a question. I asked him to yield for a statement.

Mr. LODGE. I did not yield the floor.

Mr. SPENCER. No; I asked the Senator if I might make a statement. I will stop at once, if the Senator desires, for I recognize his right to the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator if he wants to make an argument now.

Mr. SPENCER. My statement will not be long, because I want to hear from the Senator from Massachusetts if I am wrong about it.

The navy yards never have given bids. All that they can do is to give estimates, and if, in the performance of a repair, the cost is larger than their estimate it has to be paid, and therefore it never can come into competition with an outside bid which is definite in its amount.

One thing more, and I am through:

Here is a ship in the harbor—and this amendment applies only to ships in the harbor. This is what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] evidently had in mind when he was speaking a moment ago. Two hours before that ship is ready to sail, some repair is found necessary. If this bill passes as the House passed it, no repair could be made unless it had first been submitted to a navy yard, which might be 400 miles away, and unless their estimate had been obtained; and the ship would be kept in harbor and kept from sailing until they got that estimate back from the navy yard, because the prohibition is explicit that no money can be spent for any repair of any kind while a ship is in harbor unless a navy yard has first bid on it.

I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that that provision as the House has passed it is impracticable, is impossible, and will result in the grossest of extravagance.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, now that the Senator has made his statement and disposed completely of the amendment and declared what it is, and all about it, without giving me an opportunity to say anything or asking me a question, I will try to say something; but I hope he will at least give me his attention while I do so.

I am fairly familiar with navy yards. I have been on the Naval Affairs Committee for a great many years. There is a navy yard in Boston, and I am pretty familiar with the matter of navy yards. I am aware that they can not make what the Senator calls a bid. They make an estimate. It has been done repeatedly. The work has been sent to them on that basis.

I was going to say, first, on this very matter of the Leviathan, which is what has brought up this subject, that in 1920 the Todd Shipbuilding Co. bid $10,740,000 for the reconditioning of the Leviathan, complete, including painting, refurnishing, and everything. The Boston Navy Yard estimated $8,938,000 to recondition the Leviathan. That kind of work has been done at the navy yards before—not merely at the Boston yard, but it has been done at the Brooklyn yard—and the same request has been made. The Brooklyn yard has done the same thing, and all the yards with large forces of men desire to have this opportunity. There was a difference, in round numbers, of $1,700,000 in favor of the yard. It seems to me that it is inexcusable in these times to leave these great yards like the Brooklyn and Norfolk and New York and Boston yards, with all their great machinery, with a dock—the Norfolk dock is not yet finished, but with the largest dock in this country at Boston, which they would have to use for the hull of the Leviathan—it is inexcusable to leave those yards idle and unoccupied on Government work—I am not undertaking to have them compete on private work—and not even allow them to make an estimate, when they offer accommodations that no other yard can offer at this moment.

I will admit that there is a side to the matter which appeals very strongly to me, but which is not an argument that will have any effect whatever when we are considering solely the cost to the Government; but there were 33,000 men employed during the war in the Boston Navy Yard and the Fore River yards. There are 5,000 employed to-day, and those men, nearly all skilled mechanics, are now out of employment. It happens—

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I yielded in order that he might get this matter up and dispose of it; but I understand that there are four or five Senators on this side who object to it and want to discuss it.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has a perfect right to make that objection, and I will let it go over; but I desire to be heard on it, and heard at some length, when it is up. I think I can demonstrate to the Senate, as it was demonstrated to the House, that this is in the direct interest of economy, and I will not put it on any other ground.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish the matter might be finished at this time.

Mr. KING. It can not be finished at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor under the unanimous-consent agreement. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I told the Senator from Alabama, who I understood was entitled to be recognized, that I did not expect this would lead to protracted debate, but if it is going to lead to debate, it will take some time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to ask a question for information?

Mr. HEFLIN. If it will take but a moment. I have yielded for two days.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, if this prohibition is omitted from the bill, whether the authorities would still be at liberty, in making repairs, to make them in the navy yards?

Mr. LODGE. They would not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Or must they make them by contract under the law?

Mr. LODGE. They would not be at liberty to allow the navy yards to recondition or repair vessels.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, the law requires them to let it by contract outside of the navy yards?

Mr. LODGE. There is no authority now for the yards to be used for work other than that belonging directly to naval ships. This is a question, of course, of a Government ship, of a Shipping Board vessel. They built in the Boston yard, for instance, vessels for the Lighthouse Service, for the revenue service, tugs, which are not strictly naval vessels, but they have been allowed to bid on them in war times.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One more question. Why make it obligatory on the administrative officers to submit it to navy yards for estimates in all cases? Why not make it simply permissive? In many cases it might be very highly objectionable.

Mr. LODGE. I do not see any reason why the Government should not have the authority to repair its own vessels.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But it is made obligatory in this provision.

Mr. LODGE. The House provision requires them to take bids.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not make it obligatory unless they do it for less money than the outsiders.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct. The trouble is that they are shut off, and we are left with all this great machinery, unable to take a chance of saving money. This would probably save a million and a half. Of course, the question which has aroused this is that of repairing the Leviathan. The effort to prevent it is the effort to give it to a private yard, and I think the Government should at least have a chance to say whether it can do it cheaper or not in its own yards.

I beg the pardon of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator has read the testimony taken before the House committee but he has not read the testimony taken before the Senate committee. The Shipping Board says it is impossible to do this without costing the Government a thousand million dollars.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has not listened to the debate or he would know that is not the fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Chair hold that the committee amendment which was briefly debated by the Senator from Massachusetts is the one now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, that amendment is pending.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator should ask unanimous consent to have it laid aside.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is nothing to prevent the Senator from Alabama from making his speech, leaving that amendment pending, except that I can not be here for an hour or two.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I object to taking up anything until I proceed with my speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was undertaking to provide that the Senator's speech might be in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not object, if that is the plan. I did not want to have time taken to read the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the time has not arrived when one Senator can object to the taking up of a bill which is before the Senate in the regular way.

Mr. HEFLIN. I misunderstood the proposition, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming, and it is so ordered.

DEFLATION POLICY OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for nearly five hours, he said:

Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Wyoming desires to proceed later to-night? I think it will probably take me an hour longer to complete my speech. I am also pretty tired. I have been speaking nearly all day and have had no lunch.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator how long it will probably take him to conclude?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think I can finish in the morning in at least 30 or 40 minutes.

Mr. WARREN. With all respect to the Senator, I desire to say that he advised me yesterday and this morning that he would not speak longer than an hour or so to-day to finish his speech.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not have any idea of occupying so much time.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has now talked about six hours, and I am inclined to think that he may continue for a long time to-morrow.

Mr. HEFLIN. I assure the Senator that I have not much more material, and I will print much of it without reading.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator if he intends to speak long to-morrow to give me notice as to how long he expects to proceed, so that I may go to my committee room and do some of the crowding work that is on hand all the time. I therefore wish he would tell me approximately how long it will take him to conclude.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think it is possible that I shall speak over 40 minutes. This is a very important matter, and I have a great deal of data which I wish to put into the Record.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the Senator from Wyoming moves to adjourn, will he yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield the floor with the understanding that I shall have the floor in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The Senator from Alabama still has the floor.

Mr. WARREN. I have no intention of moving to adjourn. I am going to propose that instead of adjourning, at the conclusion of to-day's session the Senate take a recess. It may be the desire to have an executive session or to transact routine business.

Mr. LODGE. We desire to have a short executive session.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Alabama will yield to me for a moment, I ask unanimous consent that when the executive session shall have been concluded the Senate may take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session to-day it shall stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have consented to yield the floor, with the understanding that I may have the floor and proceed in the morning when the Senate convenes at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair may not be in the chair at that time, and can not tell what the Senate will do or whom the Presiding Officer at that time will recognize.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Wyoming, in charge of the appropriation bill, has agreed to such an arrangement, and I am sure that nobody will object to any arrangement made in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no duty to perform in the premises. The Chair is waiting for any motion that any Senator may desire to make.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes to-morrow at 11 o'clock I may resume my speech. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the great Federal reserve system that had stood foursquare to every wind that blew, that financed the World War and defied the expense and waste of that costly world conflict to shake in the least its firm foundations, is now insulted and humiliated by the Senator from Virginia when he intimates that it stood with fear and trembling because of a little financial disturbance in the silk industry of little Japan. That was an excuse that Wall Street made for its wholesale robbery of the people of the South and West. I want to read at this point some excerpts from Federal Reserve Board Bulletin, March, 1920. Let me give you a few excerpts from this bulletin:

No ground for actual pessimism is to be noted. In district No. 5 (Richmond) "the year has opened prosperously, with no indications of any general business curtailment."

In district No. 6 (Atlanta) observations similar to those reported from the Cleveland district are presented. The need of increased production is recognized.

The outlook for agricultural development is good.

Mr. President, while the farmers were planting their crops and the merchants and bankers in the agricultural sections were all committing themselves on a large scale for the year's operations in 1920 the Federal Reserve Board was operating at another place. It was seeking to injure our foreign export trade. I read from the same Federal Reserve Board bulletin, as follows:

A material cut in the amount of credit available for the support of exportation is taking place.

CHANGE IN INVESTMENT CONDITIONS.

Brief mention has already been made of the report of the Federal Reserve Board which was issued to the public on February 23. In the report the board has restated its policy.

It should be recognized that credits extended to Europe create a demand for commodities that competes with the domestic demands and this competition is one of the potent causes of high prices. The expansion of credit set in motion by the war must be checked. Credit must be brought under effective control. Deflation, however, merely for the sake of deflation and a speedy return to "normal" for the sake of restoring security values and commodity prices to their prewar levels without regard to other consequences, would be an insensate proceeding in the existing posture of national and world affairs. All these factors were brought to the attention of the meeting of the Federal advisory council at its stated session on February 17.

Mr. President, in my speech I shall show by the facts of what was really done that the Federal Reserve Board did just what it said in this bulletin should not be done. I have said repeatedly that the Federal reserve banking system was amply able to meet the credit and currency demands of 1920, but that the Federal Reserve Board would not permit it to do so. Again I read from the Federal Reserve Board bulletin:

DISCOUNT POLICY AND CREDIT CONTROL.

[Extract from the sixth annual report of the Federal Reserve Board to Congress. Reprinted owing to exhaustion of advance edition of the annual report.]

The experience of the past three years has demonstrated the expansive power of the Federal reserve system. It should be understood, however, that an elastic system of reserve credit and note issue implies capacity to control and the ability to curtail credit. The ability of the system to check expansion under present circumstances and to induce healthy liquidation is now to be tested.

The Federal reserve system has met the requirements of war and readjustment by expanding without, however, encroaching upon its legal reserves; it is capable, if need be, of expanding still further without having recourse to the emergency provisions of the act, and very much further by availing itself of those provisions. But the time has come for it to demonstrate its power to move in the opposite direction, and to prove its ability to do so without shock and with a minimum disturbance of business and industry.

It must never be forgotten that productive industry is profoundly affected by credit conditions. Modern business is done on credit. One of its life-giving principles is credit. The mood and temper of the business community are deeply affected by the state of credit and may easily be disturbed by ill-considered or precipitate action. A system of credit control must always be judged by what it does to maintain a healthy condition of mind on the part of all sections and classes of the producing community. The ultimate test of the functioning of a credit system must be found in what it does to promote and increase the production of goods. True, in general, the truth of this observation deserves to be particularly emphasized in the present deranged state of the world industry and world trade when production is the crying need of the hour everywhere.

Too rapid or too drastic deflation would defeat the very purpose of a well-regulated credit system by the needless unsettlement of mind it would produce and the disastrous reaction that such unsettlement would have upon productive industry. Radical and drastic deflation is not, therefore, in contemplation.

The credit situation in the United States is at bottom sound and safe.

Our economic and financial position is essentially strong. There need be no occasion for apprehension as to our ability to effect the transition from war-time to peace-time conditions if reasonable safeguards against abuse of credit are respected.

There is, however, no need for precipitate action or extreme measures. Extremes must be avoided. The process of adjusting the volume of credit to normal basis should be effected in an orderly manner.

Senators, you will observe that Gov. Harding in this statement says: "A system of credit control must always be judged by what it does," and so forth. I agree with that statement, and upon it I indict the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy which has resulted in business destruction and financial disaster.

Lincoln has truly said:

Any movement to artificially deflate before the debt can be paid, to change the medium of circulation upon which the debt was contracted, would be a crime.

In another warning, in effect, he said:

I warn the American people not to permit a repetition of the crimes of history. Following great periods of inflation, if drastic artificial deflation is attempted, disastrous results must follow. I warn them not to permit the money powers to take advantage of the condition of the people. I warn them not to permit high and usurious interest rates, contraction of the currency, or any change in the circulating medium that will affect the debt contracted until it has been discharged.

In Circular No. 98, 1920, from the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, there is the following statement:

The rise in rates has checked borrowing or expansion as it was intended to do.

Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] made a speech in defense of the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board, and stated that the time had come for some one to combat the persistent misrepresentations made in the Senate for more than a year regarding that policy.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the magazine called the Annals for the month of January is practically filled with defensive articles on the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy. The Senator from Virginia spoke in the same month in which these articles were published and sent all over the country. For quite awhile the Federal Reserve Board has been seeking to get some one to defend its deflation policy upon this floor. I have been undertaking for more than a year to show to the country the evils of their deflation policy, of the ruin it has wrought amongst the people of the United States, and no one appeared to defend that indefensible policy upon this floor.

It appears that the Federal Reserve Board, and especially the governor of the board, thought that if they could induce the able and distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to come to their defense, that would probably be the very best thing that could happen. It is like the situation we frequently find in the country, when a man whose conduct has been very reprehensible, who has been guilty of the commission of high crimes and misdemeanors, employs a lawyer of ability and good standing to defend him, so that it will help his case with the jury, and create the impression that if his case were not a good one this lawyer would not appear in it. So it was with the Federal Reserve Board; it felt that if it could prevail upon Senator GLASS, one of the authors of the Federal reserve banking system, to defend their crime of mismanagement and praise their infamous policy of deflation it would help them in the estimation of the American people.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] did not give me any notice that he intended to criticize my position and to take me to task, so that I could be present; but I was kind enough to tell him yesterday that I was going to speak to-day, and would like for him to be present, and I am glad that he is here.

I said, Mr. President, when I spoke before, and interrupted the Senator briefly, that I did not agree with a good many things he was saying, and that after I conferred with John Skelton Williams, the former Comptroller of the Currency, an able, distinguished, and fearless Virginian, I would reply to many of the incorrect and misleading statements that he made in his speech.

I have had three conferences with that distinguished Virginian, Mr. Williams, who has given me the main data, facts and figures that I shall use to-day. My office adjoins the office of the Senator from Virginia, and when Mr. Williams was there discussing with me the many incorrect statements that appeared in the speech of Senator GLASS the Senator from Virginia heard him and phoned to me that he thought he should call my attention to the fact that he was hearing what we were saying. I told him the next day that there was no secret about it, and that I would not object to having him know all that we said. I told him that I was getting facts from one who knew, in the hope of setting him right.

The Senator from Virginia has made his speech. I have not sought to give any publicity to my brief reply, although I have received scores and scores of letters, some from his own State, congratulating me upon what I said immediately after he had finished a prepared speech several hours long. I have not undertaken to get anything I said into any newspaper in the United States, but a gentleman from New York, who works in connection with the Democratic national executive committee, slipped into a weekly bulletin an item to go out to Democratic newspapers of the United States, to the effect that the Senator from Virginia had corrected "these misrepresentations about the Federal Reserve Board, and had rendered the country a great service," and so forth.

Mr. President, that misleading statement regarding Senator GLASS's speech defending the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board was sent out without the knowledge or approval of the committee.

I gave out the following statement at that time, and I desire that it shall appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

To the Democratic newspapers of the United States:

Under the direction of Mr. Richard Linthicum, of New York, director of publicity for the Democratic national committee, there appeared, strange to say, on January 27 in the weekly news article sent out to the Democratic newspapers of the country a statement regarding the speech of Senator GLASS defending the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. A portion of that statement undertakes to create the impression that the Democrats in Congress and the Democrats of the country approve the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. That portion of the statement which would leave the impression that the Democrats indorse the drastic and destructive deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board does violence to the truth and misrepresents the Democratic attitude upon this particular subject. I praise the Federal reserve banking system, but I condemn and repudiate the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board which destroyed property values by the billions in the United States, paralyzed business, drove men into insane asylums, and caused others to kill themselves. That deflation policy was inspired and set on foot by a Republican Senator and carried out under the direction of Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, who, according to an editorial in the Washington Times of April 12, 1921, supported the Republican ticket in the national election of 1920.

Mr. President, as I stated before, I gave this statement to the Associated Press, the International News Service, and to other papers. I requested the legislative committee in the Library of Congress, that looks up information for Members of the Senate, to scan the papers of the country, and they were unable to find that article in a single newspaper in the United States. Who suppressed that article? The statement sent out to the effect that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] had exposed the misrepresentations of those who had attacked the Federal Reserve Board went all over the country. Who was it that wanted my statement kept from the Democrats of the country?

Mr. President, in 1919 the value of the agricultural products of the United States was $16,000,000,000. In 1920 they had been driven down by this remorseless deflation process to $10,000,000,000, and in 1921 down to $6,000,000,000. All that happened under the drive of this destructive and deadly deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board inspired and ordered by the Republican Party. I want it distinctly understood at the outset that I praise the Federal reserve banking system, I helped to create it, I voted for it, I think it is a great system, but I have seen it perverted from the ends of its institution, I have seen it made the handy instrument of the money lords of Wall Street, and I have seen them manipulate it so as to deny sufficient money and credits to the South and West to prevent demoralization in business and financial disaster.

Mr. President, I repeat the trail of the serpent is over it all. I called the attention of the Senate once before to the fact that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and myself and the former Senator from Georgia, Mr. Hoke Smith, and Congressman POU, of North Carolina, went down and called upon Gov. Harding in the early summer of 1919. We were trying to help the cotton producers. He told us that McFadden, a big cotton broker, had told him that cotton was going down to 15 cents, and I remarked that it would come nearer going up to three times 15 cents. I saw then that he was not friendly to an advance in prices. We talked about it after we left, and I am sure that Gov. Harding impressed the others as he had me. Cotton did advance, as I said it would.

I wish to show that that was the time they intended to start this deflation policy. The Republican Party was in control of Congress. It had obtained a majority in the House and Senate in the fall election of 1918. They got control of Congress on the 4th of March, 1919, and then is when the trouble commenced. The President was stricken down with a long and serious illness. Then it was that the money lords commenced their devilment. They tied up the farm loan banking system of the United States in the Supreme Court, and the farmers of the South and West could not get money from that source.

What next? We find Gov. Harding, head of the Federal Reserve Board, supporting the Republican ticket, according to the Washington Times, and he has never denied it. It is clear that Gov. Harding was seeking to placate the powers that he knew would be in charge of the Government after March 4, 1921. Gov. Harding's work of deflation pleased Republican leaders, and he has held on to his office.

In the early spring of 1920 the Republican Congress passed an amendment to the Federal reserve banking law which authorized and empowered the Federal Reserve Board to increase the rediscount rate. That is when the Republican plan was laid for the most destructive deflation policy that was ever instituted in the history of our country. When people needed money and credits more than ever that plan was to make it harder than ever to get either. They determined that the deflation policy must be commenced, and Republican leaders wanted the War Finance Corporation put out of commission, and the Federal Reserve Board advised that that be done. On May 10 that great and helpful agency ceased to function.

Then what happened? The Federal Reserve Board called a meeting and the advisory council met here and was in session on the 16th and 17th of May, 1920. Further plans for deflation were made. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] comes upon the floor of the Senate and gets through a resolution. On May 17, 1920, the Republican Senate passed that resolution. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be directed to advise the Senate what steps it purposes to take or to recommend to the member banks of the Federal reserve system to meet the existing inflation of currency and credits and the consequent high prices, and what further steps it purposes to take or recommend to mobilize credits in order to move the 1920 crop.

Senator OWEN, of Oklahoma, a Democrat, opposed the passage of that resolution and told you that it meant deflation and depression, and subsequent developments have shown that he was right. Here is what Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, said in response to that deflation resolution:

The board will not hesitate, so far as it may be necessary, to bring to bear all its statutory powers in regulating the volume of credits, but wishes to point out that the most vital problems relating to the movement of the 1920 crop are physical rather than financial.

What is he telling the Republican Senate, this W. P. G. Harding, who believes a Republican is going to be elected President? He said:

The board will not hesitate to use every statutory power to regulate currency and credits.

In other words, he is assuring those with whom he is seeking favor that they can count on him to go the limit in producing the results that they desired. The Democratic Party was betrayed, and I repudiate the betrayer and denounce the betrayal.

Again I say the trail of the serpent is over it all. What next? The Republican Party in its platform adopted in June, 1920, at its national convention gave its approval to a policy of deflation. Never until the Republicans got control of Congress was there any disturbance of the wholesome and helpful service rendered by the Federal reserve banking system. As I said a moment ago, this deadly work was commenced by an amendment which was passed by a Republican Congress. Here is what occurred: Congressman PLATT, of New York, a Republican and chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], a Republican and chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, introduced simultaneously the rediscount progressive rate amendment which proved to be so destructive to legitimate business in the South and West.

They both denied that it was in any way intended to work injury to the farmer. Congress was deceived as to the main purpose of the amendment. I was in Alabama in the primary campaign for the Senate when you passed it through the House, but I have noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that ex-Congressman McKeown, a Democrat, from Oklahoma, said that it would prevent the agricultural sections from obtaining the money and credits needed to prevent the sacrifice of their crops. The Republican leaders denied that it would do that, but that is exactly what it did.

The crime of 1873, when they demonetized silver, was put over in much the same way. Republican leaders at that time explained that "It was just a minor amendment to the mint laws." Nobody but the perpetrators of the crime knew that that amendment would demonetize silver and produce a panic.

Republican leaders assured Congress when they passed the rediscount amendment to the Federal reserve act, which meant financial disaster and business ruin to the agricultural sections, that it was intended to keep the large cities from getting the bulk of the money, so that the agricultural interests could be cared for and supplied. Gov. Harding told Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, that that was the purpose of the amendment. So, I repeat, the amendment was passed through Congress by the practice of deception and hypocrisy.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my good friend the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to inquire of the Senator if that progressive scheme of interest to which he has referred was not a scheme by which the Federal reserve banks were enabled to charge certain member banks as much as 86 or 87 per cent interest.

Mr. HEFLIN. They did that very thing to a bank in Alabama.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was the scheme under which they did it, was it not?

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely. That was impossible before that amendment was passed. We had been getting money prior to that time at 3, 4, and 4½ per cent, but they raised it up to 7 and then through that ruinous progressive interest scheme they went on up to as high as 87½ per cent, and they killed business in the South and West. The Senator from North Carolina is right. Under that progressive scale they beat down struggling banks in my State and other States that were trying to help farmers to hold their cotton so that they could at least sell for a price that would cover the cost of production. Then the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is surprised when I refer to that destructive deflation as a murderous policy.

That is not all, Mr. President. What else happened? They got that bill through the House of Representatives; they got it through the Senate, and when it was up in the Senate here is what Senator OWEN said—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the date to which the Senator from Alabama refers?

Mr. HEFLIN. This is May 18, 1920, at the time the crooked scheme of deflation was being put through. First, the farm loan bank was tied up in the Supreme Court; then the War Finance Corporation was suspended on May 10. The advisory council of the Federal Reserve Board assembled on the 16th and 17th, and the Senator from Oklahoma made this speech. Here is what the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma said:

The resolution of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], however, offers a hook and an invitation from the Senate to the Federal Reserve Board to declare a policy of "deflation." It carries the suggestion of deflation. The policy of deflation set by the Wall Street stock exchange control, which broke the stock market by high-interest rates, meets the approval of the same class of financial experts domiciled in Chicago, who might naturally advise the Senator from Illinois; but I warn the Federal Reserve Board, and I warn the country, that if a panic in this country results from their policy they are liable to have a North Dakota reaction, where a State bank was established to furnish money at fair and stable rates, using the credit of the State and the taxing power of the people of the State for that purpose. You can go too far in the matter of taxing the people of this country by high-interest rates and the "deflation" of credit. If the Reserve Board leads the procession of banks in fixing high rates on the people; that is, on their own depositors, and a great industrial depression follows, why should they wonder if the people of this country should demand as a remedy that the reserve banks be made banks of deposit and discount? I warn the Federal Reserve Board that this country is not going to submit to any depression brought about by the banks of the country or under the policy of the board or under the advice of financiers domiciled either in New York or Chicago.

There you are. The Senator from Oklahoma, Hike Jove's war horse, "scented the battle from afar"; he knew what it all meant. He knew they meant financial distress and business depression, and he said so. Who is this great Democrat from Oklahoma? The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], interrupting the Senator from Oklahoma, said:

I think the Senator from Oklahoma probably has more knowledge on this subject than any other man. He is the real father of the Federal reserve system. Was it intended that these Federal reserve banks should be institutions for making money?

Mr. OWEN. It was not.

The Senator from Oklahoma was right.

Again, the Senator from Oklahoma said:

Now, these banks, making 100 per cent on a 4 per cent rate, ought not to be encouraged to make 50 per cent more than they made last year.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I took pains some days ago to have looked up in the Congressional Library newspapers which printed statements of Gov. Harding in 1920, and in every single instance where he put out a statement for the press to the effect that there would be a further reduction in the amount of money in circulation and in credits to be extended the newspaper in its market reports shows that cotton especially would break from 50 to 100 points the very next day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely. Mr. President, I am going to print in the RECORD some clippings from New York newspapers giving the market prices and making comments along the very line which the Senator from Georgia has suggested, which show beyond all doubt that the deflation policy conducted by Gov. Harding and his board drove the price of cotton down and down. It drove it down until the farmer who had 10 bales of cotton worth $2,000 when the deflation policy was begun was forced to sell for one-fourth of that amount, just $500.

And yet the Senator from Virginia, whose State produces an infinitesimal amount of cotton, is unable to appreciate the ruin wrought by that deflation policy in the cotton-growing States.

RESERVE GOVERNOR REFUSES TO GRANT HEARINGS.

Senators and Representatives, farmers, merchants, and bankers from the cotton-growing States pleaded with Gov. Harding to change his policy and prevent the sacrifice of the 1920 cotton crop and the complete loss of that year's labor and investment. Gov. Harding declined to do it. He exhibited irritation and impatience toward the able and faithful Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] when he asked for a hearing upon this matter by the Federal Reserve Board. The Senator from North Carolina then demanded the hearing and got it.

It is strange, is it not, that Gov. Harding failed to impress those who appeared before him that he was very much concerned or disturbed about the distress that he was producing.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I asked the Senator to allow me to interrupt him to make the statement which I made a moment ago, because in their booklet or annals or magazine, whichever it is, which they have gotten out they endeavored to prove and claim they did prove that the volume of circulation diminished because prices had diminished, when it was just exactly the reverse, and the current newspaper market reports show it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely. It does not take a wise man, a man does not have to be the author of any banking system, to understand what I am about to state. If the price of cotton is 40 cents and the spinners are buying and consuming the crop, and then the price is beaten down to 30 cents, if you will back the farmer financially so that he can hold until that price is paid, of course he will get 30 cents, because the spinner would be compelled to pay that price. The spinners said during that time that they were willing to pay 30 cents, that they wanted the farmer to get the cost of production and a little profit. Now, suppose that had been done; suppose that price-destroying Federal Reserve Board had said, "We are going to help you, not to hold the cotton for 40 cents but we will help you hold it for 30 cents, because your price has been reduced from 40 cents to 30 cents; that represents a loss of $50 a bale, and that is as much as any farmer should be required to lose in one year on a bale of cotton. We are going to help you to get 30 cents a pound." Had that been done, there is not any more doubt that cotton would have brought 30 cents a pound than that I live and God reigns. The failure to do that not only forced the cotton crop of 1920 to sell below the cost of production but it left the farmer in debt.

Now, let me show you what they did. The Senator from Virginia furnished the Senate a table of the cotton prices. I hold in my hand a table which was prepared by John Skelton Williams, in whose word I believe implicitly and whose statement I accept upon the subject of banking and currency above that of anybody else in this country.

Now, I wish to show you what happened. The price of cotton in May, 1920, was 40 cents while in October, 1920, six months later, it had fallen to 20 cents. Senators, do you know how great a loss that was to the farmers of the South on a crop of 12,500,000 bales? I will tell you. In six months time, from May to October, a loss of 20 cents a pound was equivalent to $100 a bale, so that on a crop of 12,500,000 bales the total loss was $1,250,000,000. That was the loss on the cotton crop of the United States, on cotton which brings to this country in normal times the balance of trade, which gives to this country gold when all other products fail; cotton, which, when put in a dry place, can be kept for a hundred years. In that state no insect pest can harm it and no tooth of time can destroy it. No moth can corrupt it then, but thieves do sometimes break through and steal. The Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy literally robbed the farmers of the South of $1,250,000,000 in six months, between May and October, 1920.

Senators, did it ever occur to you that the nearer to the presidential election Gov. Harding got, the harder he bore down with his deflation policy? Did you know that Democrats in Tennessee, Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico will tell you that the deflation policy carried out by the Federal Reserve Board gave those States to the Republican ticket in the fall of 1920? Yes; they will. And it is the plain truth. From May, 1920, to May, 1921, just 12 months, during this mighty drive of the Federal Reserve Board under its deflation policy, the farmers of the South lost $1,750,000,000. Do Senators wonder, then, that we had depression in the country? Do they wonder, then, that the grain growers of the West could not get a good price for their grain, when the policy of the Federal Reserve Board had killed the purchasing power of the South?

Let me say to my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that we in the South buy grain from the people of his section; we buy meat; we buy mules. When cotton brought a fair price, we paid good prices for all those commodities; but when the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board struck cotton down and deprived the farmers of the South, and therefore the merchants and bankers of their purchasing power, they struck the grain industry, the cattle industry, and the mule industry of the West a body blow.

What else did this man Gov. Harding do? He testified before the investigating committee of the Congress that Gov.

Cox, the Democratic nominee for the Presidency, saw him here in Washington in the early part of 1921, and told him that he endorsed the deflation policy and that he was glad he did not change it. I knew that Gov. Cox did not say that, so I wired informing him of Gov. Harding's statement. In reply he wrote me a long letter denying that he had said that to Gov. Harding. He stated in his letter to me that he, while touring the West in the fall of 1920, had wired Gov. Harding telling him that something had to be done to save the cattle industry. He said he realized that following the war it would be necessary to take some steps to meet conditions arising in the reconstruction period, but that he had in mind a safe, sane, and gradual coming down in prices and not the drastic deflation policy employed.

So Gov. Cox repudiated the statement of Gov. Harding, but, nevertheless, Gov. Harding when he revised his remarks in the printed book to which I have referred let that statement remain just as he had made it before, when he knew that Gov. Cox had repudiated his statement. That is the gentleman the Senator from Virginia is defending upon this floor. Again I say the trail of the serpent is over it all.

Now let us proceed a little further. The Republican platform of 1920 takes the Democratic Party to task for inflation. Smoke was curling from every smokestack in the country; industry was humming; the army of the hobo was put out of commission; every man and woman who wanted work found employment; and under the Democratic administration prosperity was seen everywhere. Here is what the Republican Party said in its platform in June, 1920, following the deflation resolution passed through this body at the instance of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick]. After referring to inflation, the Republican platform says:

The continuance of this policy since the armistice lays the administration open to severe criticism.

Then, down further, the Republican platform says:

As a matter of public policy we urge all banks to give credit preference to essential industries.

Mr. President, there is where the devilment was done. They gave notice to the banks: "This thing has got to come down, and come down in a hurry. We urge all banks to give preference to essential industries." What did they mean by that? They did not mean agriculture, because the Bible says, "By their fruits ye shall know them"; and we know that it crippled and nearly killed agriculture. Here is the Republican deflation mandate to the bankers of the country.

What did the Democratic Party say in its platform at that time?

Indeed, one vital danger against which the American people should keep constantly on guard is the commitment of this system to partisan enemies who struggled against its adoption and vainly attempted to retain in the hands of speculative bankers a monopoly of the currency credits of the Nation.

Listen, Senators:

Already there are well-defined indications of an assault upon the vital principles of the system in the event of Republican success in the elections in November.

You did not see anything in the Democratic platform demanding a deflation policy; but here it is in the Republican platform, couched in this language, intended to deceive the average man, but to carry the command home to the banker. It sent the pangs of fear through the whole banking fraternity of the United States.

Mr. President, what is the record?

1. Republicans take charge of Congress in 1919.
2. A trust company ties up the Federal farm loan banks in the Supreme Court in 1919.
3. A Republican Congress passed the rediscount amendment to the Federal reserve banking law in April, 1920, under which interest rates from 7 to 87½ per cent were charged.
4. A Republican Senate passed the McCormick deflation resolution May 17, 1920.
5. Gov. Harding assured the Republican Senate that he would use every power at his command to carry out the purposes of the deflation resolution.
6. The Republican platform adopted in June, 1920, committed that party to the policy of deflation.
7. In July, 1920, Gov. Harding commenced to operate the field guns of Republican deflation upon the agricultural sections of the South and West.

At first I could not believe that the Federal Reserve Board had been guilty of such wrongdoing and such reprehensible conduct as some others believed it had. I commenced to study the question, and upon investigation I was convinced that the Federal Reserve Board had been guilty of conduct that contributed to wholesale distress and business ruin in the agricultural sections of the country.

I see around me Senators now with whom I talked about this matter, and I found that they felt as I did. Senators SUMMONS; OVERMAN; HARRIS, of Georgia; SMITH, of South Carolina; FLETCHER, of Florida, and others that I could mention.

Mr. President, I believe that Gov. Harding and the board told Platt, "You put the bill through the House, give us the power to increase the rate from 4½ to 87½ per cent, so that we can deflate with a vengeance, and we will reward you and recommend you for appointment on the board," and when they got him on the board this man Platt and Harding became the "gold dust twins," one a wishy-washy or half-hammered Democrat and the other a hickory-nut-headed Republican, and they have hohobbed together through all of the affliction and long suffering that they brought upon the people. Why, this man Platt wrote some letters to Judge Brand, of Georgia, that contain suggestions just like some of those used in the speech of the Senator from Virginia. He suggested how hard worked Gov. Harding was. I want to say to the Senate, in the hearing of the Senator from Virginia, that Gov. Harding may have been hard worked, but he was not too hard worked to wire or write congratulations to the Republican nominee for President when he got his nomination. He was not too hard worked, I am reliably informed, to write him or wire him congratulations upon his acceptance speech at Marion, Ohio, when he was sounding the bugle call to battle against the Democrats, and he was not too hard worked to visit him in person at Marion during the fall of 1920.

In the fall of 1920 I was out in Oklahoma. I spoke to a large number of cotton producers. I said: "The Federal reserve system gives you a right to borrow on your warehouse receipt and hold your cotton until you can make them pay you the cost of production plus a profit." They did not applaud at all. Usually when I talked about that system and compared it with the old system, they clapped their hands, but they beheld in the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy the old Wall Street hydra-headed monster that robbed them and fed upon their substance in the years that had gone.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] smiles when I talk about the hydra-headed monster of Wall Street; the Senator from Virginia must wake up to the fact that while the banking system that he helped to create is a good one, that Wall Street has gotten hold of its governing power. Christ did not try to destroy the temple at Jerusalem, but He did display indignation as He drove the money changers out of it. May we not condemn those who have maladministered the Federal reserve banking system in our efforts to protect and preserve the system?

Mr. President, when I finished my speech in Oklahoma the farmers came up and said, "You observed that we did not applaud your praise of the Federal reserve system." I said, "Yes." They said, "Word has come here from the Federal Reserve Board that the banks are not to lend any more money on cotton." Gov. Bickett, of North Carolina, testified before the Committee on Agriculture that word had come down the line to stop loaning and force collections, and he said, "Gentlemen, the situation with us is simply terrible. We can not get the money and credits needed to save our business." Senator Gronna, of North Dakota, testified that the Federal reserve banks were not furnishing money or credits to the cattle industry of his State.

No witness, not a single one, testified that the cotton producer, the grain producer, or the cattleman was receiving either credits or currency to enable them to sell their products for even the cost of production. The Senator from Virginia defends the Federal Reserve Board, and puts the blame upon the local banks. I want to testify for the bankers of my State, those that I know about, that they wanted to help the farmer. They did help him as long as they could do it and save themselves. No man should be required to put up his substance to save a situation that was intended should grow worse and worse, and when the powers that be were doing the thing that was making the risk one of certain loss and maybe ruin to the local banker.

The Senator from Virginia said that the banks in Alabama had eight millions of credit—eight millions, I believe—that they did not apply for. Why did they not apply for it? There was not any trouble when they could get money at 4 and 4½ per cent; but it was a different matter when the Federal Reserve Board put it up to 7 per cent, and the banks of my State could charge no more than 8 per cent, 1 per cent more than the rediscount rate of 7 per cent, making the bank indorse a man's paper and put all of its possessions behind it in order to make 1 per cent, when it knew that the Federal Reserve Board had refused to make a statement that it would help to secure a profitable price for cotton, and it was going down and down, and cotton would be in two weeks' time $25 a bale cheaper than when the bank loaned money on it. That is what did it, not the local banks.

Let me call your attention to another thing. The local banks were caught and held hard in the grip of the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy. They had no notice that it was coming, and when it struck in all its fury the local banks were tied up and could not make any more loans until they were granted more money by the Federal reserve banks.

I want to read in this connection a statement published in the Birmingham News by Hugh McElderry, of Talladega, Ala., a banker and a very fine man.

MR. McELDERY COMES TO BAT.

To the Editor THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS:

The statement of Mr. W. P. G. Harding, as governor of the reserve board, that the country banker is responsible for the present deplorable condition of the farmer should not go unchallenged.

The reserve board had a brain storm and raised the discount rate to 7 per cent, and thereby tied a rock around the neck of the country banker and threw him into the sea. This action in turn, by deflation, threw the farmer, the retail merchant, the fertilizer manufacturer, in fact the whole country, into the sea of bankruptcy.

More than this, this action, by making the American dollar many times the value of the European dollar, fixed the exchange so we could do no business with Europe on a scale commensurate with their wants.

During the war, by every device conceivable by man and woman, we were induced to buy Government bonds at a low rate of interest, and thereby the Government absorbed the liquid capital of the country. If the reserve board had not had a brain storm and gotten panicky, they should never have raised the discount rate above 5 per cent, but raising the rate to 7 per cent, those of us who saw conditions refused to borrow at this rate and trimmed our sails for the inevitable bankruptcy we saw coming. Now to tell us we bankrupted the farmer, when almost to a man we stood solidly behind him and refused to foreclose a single loan, is little short of nonsense.

HUGH L. McELDERY.

TALLADEGA, ALA., December 16, 1921.

Mr. President, I have undertaken to show briefly some things about Gov. Harding. He sent an evasive letter up here to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to read, about not going to Alabama to vote in 1920, and the Senator said that there was one line in it that he hated to read, and that was he, Harding, did not want to vote for me. He must have known that if I got in the Senate I would expose his very bad record. I do not have to depend for election upon men who violate a public trust and prove unfaithful to their country.

Again I say, the Federal reserve bank in New York City paid more for a bank-building lot than all the Corn Exchange Bank's 26 structures cost in the city of New York. Senators, what do you think of that? Then gentlemen tell me that there was no graft in that crooked performance.

They got that bill through the House in February, 1919, just before the Republicans went in. It contained a provision which permitted those banks to set aside vast sums for procuring banking quarters. That was done at the instance of the Federal Reserve Board, when it had the respect and confidence of Congress. I was not there. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said the Senator from Alabama was present and voted for it. I said that day that I would like to see the RECORD. I knew I had no recollection of it. The Senator from Virginia said, "I have seen the RECORD." When I looked up the RECORD I found they did not have a record vote on the amendment. They passed it 15 minutes before the House adjourned, and according to those who participated in the debate there was nobody there except Platt, this same "gold dust twin" of Gov. Harding, manipulating it, working for it, and a few others, and they got it through. A quorum call some two or three hours before that did disclose that I was there, but I knew nothing about this matter. I was not present when it was passed and I did not vote for it.

I have talked to other Members about it, but nobody had any idea that it meant to let these banks have such a large per cent of the earnings for the purpose of speculating in real estate and doling out millions through the pretense of providing buildings for the banks.

Then they went out with that big progressive interest rate, and took money from the South and West, and the New York Federal Reserve Bank alone is able to take $25,000,000 and put it into one bank building, which costs more than this Capitol, the House Office Building, the Senate Office Building, and the State War and Navy Building in this city. Yes; more than all four of them, and the lot on which it is to be built cost as much as all the 26 bank buildings of the Corn Exchange Bank in the city of New York. Do you wonder that I have made enemies among the crooks who have benefited by that graft game? In a colloquy which took place upon this floor between myself and the Senator from Virginia he said that New York bank building was to house 5,000 employees. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I believe, said, "Are those people employed there now?" The Senator from Virginia said, "Will be." The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], Johnny on the spot, said, "Are now."

The truth is that many people will not be and are not now employed there. I do not mean to say that either one of the Senators misrepresented the situation to the Senate intentionally. A young man in my office gave me a note saying, "The Federal Reserve Board phoned me that they had cut down the force, which would now run up to 3,000." That is 2,000 short of 5,000. So, if the Senator from Virginia was mistaken in that, we will have to mix a little salt with a good many statements that he made about the whole matter under discussion. The Federal Reserve Board has palmed off on him a whole lot of misinformation.

There are millions of people in the South and West who have suffered tremendous losses under the policy of deflation. They have eaten, to their sorrow, its bitter, bitter fruit. They know where the shoe pinches, and they approve the stand that I have taken and the course that I am pursuing in this matter.

By the fight that I have made in this body, with the Senators from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS and Mr. WATSON], Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, both the Senators from North Carolina, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and others, we have brought the interest rate down from 7 per cent to 5 per cent. Nothing but our constant, persistent protests against that robber rediscount rate of 7 per cent caused it to be abandoned. But, Mr. President, they did not abandon it until it had well-nigh ruined the farmers, merchants, and bankers of the South and West, and Wall Street had fed until it was full.

The Senator from Virginia said the time had come for some one to combat the persistent misrepresentations made about the Federal Reserve Board and its policy. I agree that the time has come to speak plainly. A Republican was running for President, and Gov. Harding, appointed by a Democratic President, who was lying stricken upon his bed, while a Republican House and Senate sat on Capitol Hill, wired, I am told, his congratulations to the candidate of the opposition party, felicitated him later upon his speech of acceptance, and went a little later to Marion, Ohio, to see him. The Times was right when it said he supported the Republican ticket. How did they get that information? I did not see it in the paper. A newspaper friend of Gov. Harding told me about the editorial being in the Times, and I unearthed it. May I say again that the trail of the serpent is over it all.

Mr. President, Democracy with me is almost a religion. I am a Democrat from hat crown to shoe sole. I believe that the right solution for all the problems that confront this country lies in the hands of the Democratic Party, and I have never been more convinced of that than since I have seen the Republican Party in power since the 4th of March, 1919. Here is the great money power, which controls the currency and credit of the country, lodged in the hands of this board. It is a tremendous power, Senators. I have seen it turned over until it is now working in a manner satisfactory to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who fought the system in the beginning, working satisfactorily to Mr. Platt, who fought it in the House in the beginning. Platt, a man who tried to kill it, now helps to administer it. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who tried to defeat it, now comes to the rescue of the Senator from Virginia when he assails me about my arraignment of the Federal Reserve Board.

It is time to indulge in plain talk, Mr. President. Let us turn that picture of Gov. Harding's actions around. If a man had been appointed governor of that board by a Republican President, and he had smiled and bowed all the way through the administration, and at last the chief was stricken down, lying prone upon his back in bed, and the opposition party should be around the country marshaling its forces, and they should select a candidate, and you would find the head of that board wiring the Democratic candidate congratulations, and then writing him on his acceptance speech, and then going to see him, would you not think he was sort of dicker with the Democratic Party? Would you not think he was trying to make fair weather with the party that he believed would soon come into power?

To clinch it, I am informed by good authority, and I have written to one of the men who heard the conversation, and he said it was a private conversation, and Gov. Harding can deny it if he chooses, that he (Harding) said in the presence of the governor of a southern State and a high official of the American Cotton Association, that he and Platt had arranged the matter and that he would remain on the board. The time has come, I repeat, for plain talk, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator, if he has any information on this point, whether the interests the Senator has been assailing are backing Mr. Harding on the board? Do they desire and are they seeking his retention? Has the Senator any information about that?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have had numbers of letters saying that the very forces I have been fighting in Wall Street demanded that this man be retained. It was said here three or four weeks ago—I referred to it then, though I have forgotten what paper it was, that said they demanded that Harding be retained. Certainly that is so. I do not know whether it was the Wall Street paper or what paper it was, but these interests are for him. The interests that fought the Federal reserve banking system are now pleased with the way the Federal Reserve Board is manipulating it. The same Wall Street interests said to President Wilson, "If you will let this old banking system remain, we will support you and your party. We do not care anything about the Democratic Party or the Republican Party as such. We will help the party that will permit us to control the money supply of the country." But Wilson said, "No; I am going to knock out your teeth and I am going to cut off your claws. I am going to restore the control of the money supply and credit of this country to the Government, so the people can all obtain at all times what is necessary to carry on their legitimate business." And that is what we meant to do and did do when we broke the Wall Street control of the money supply of a hundred millions of people.

Now, what do we see? We see a banking system over there in New York with Gov. Strong at the head of it, who increased his salary from $30,000 to $50,000 by the sanction of the Federal Reserve Board, and clerks who drew $1,600 increased to $16,000, and clerks who drew $1,800 increased to $18,000 by the sanction of the same board.

Gov. Strong must be a pretty bad egg. I have been told that the Senator from Virginia who sits before me wrote to a man or told him in person down in Virginia that Strong was an unfit man to be at the head of that banking system up there. I heard him testify down here. He is a man of great energy and determination. He dominates the Federal Reserve Board now. He is the invisible governing power. He is also a very egotistical man, I am told. I understand that while the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] was Secretary of the Treasury Mr. Strong strode around in that pompous fashion of his and talked about what he would do and would not do, and Senator GLASS reminded him that he could and probably would ask for his resignation.

I am informed that that took place. That is the crowd whose strange conduct I have been criticizing and condemning.

Am I right or am I wrong in demanding that the Federal reserve banking system be administered fairly and honestly in the interest of legitimate business in this country?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator any information that he can give the Senate showing the connection with Wall Street of the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, Mr. Strong? I have heard the charge frequently made that it was through Mr. Strong that Wall Street had been pipe-lined into the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; so have I.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator any information that he can give us showing Mr. Strong's connection with it, and especially with the great banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co., because I have heard—I do not know whether it is true or not—that in some way or other he had some such business connection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have heard the same thing and I have some statements in connection with my speech that I shall print in the RECORD emanating from John Skelton Williams that I think tie up the Federal reserve bank in New York with Wall Street's operations. He sets out and charges that on a number of occasions they loaned those speculative interests up there not millions but hundreds of millions of dollars; in fact, that at one time in the fall of 1920 they were loaning to two banks in New York $250,000,000, and at the same time they were loaning on agricultural and call paper in 18 States just $15,000,000. As I said the other day, that is $5,000,000 less than the fertilizer bill of the farmers of my State alone.

Think of it. Wall Street! Why, the old system took money up there and drained the country. The old system sucked it out of the country and fed it into the maw of Wall Street, and I do not propose that the new system shall suck it up and carry it into Wall Street without my solemn protest.

I defend the system. Mr. President, I think it is the greatest banking system ever devised by the genius of man, and I do not intend that anybody shall pervert and twist and confuse my indorsement of the system with my criticism and condemnation of the policy of the Federal Reserve Board. The great ocean steamer that has many times carried American passengers back and forth across the sea is not to be condemned because an incompetent or criminal pilot steers it upon the rocks. I am not condemning the Federal reserve banking system. I am condemning those who abused and violated the trust reposed in them and used that system to hurt rather than help American business in the time of great distress. The Senator from Virginia told us that it was the silk industry of Japan—poor little Japan—that precipitated a financial riot in the business world. How ridiculous, Mr. President.

Mr. President, when I saw the excuse that was made by the Federal Reserve Board as to why it would not permit Federal reserve banks to grant loans as it had done before, I thought of what happened to Harpalus, who kept the strong box of Alexander the Great, and who had charge of the trophies that he had captured with his conquering army. For a long time he kept and cared for the precious store intrusted to him and dealt honestly and squarely with his chief, but one day the tempter came and in an evil hour Harpalus betrayed his trust and proved false to his friend and benefactor. He fled with all his golden store to Athens. When they noised the news around that Harpalus with all this treasure was in the city, the people were indignant. They said, "Assemble the people. Send for Demosthenes to come and address them. Under the spell of his great eloquence Harpalus, the criminal, will be driven from the confines of dear old Athens." Harpalus sent for Demosthenes, and Demosthenes responded in person to the request. Harpalus placed upon a table a large and beautiful loving cup made of gold, and as soon as Demosthenes's eyes fell upon it he was fascinated and drawn to it. He went up to it and lifting it with both hands, he said, "How much is this worth?" Harpalus said, in substance, "It will not cost you anything." He called his servant and said, "Bind this up and send it over to Demosthenes's home." Demosthenes's rage commenced to cool.

The next day the people assembled, Demosthenes came into the hall, and at sight of the great orator of Athens the people cried, "Speech! Speech!" But Demosthenes stood with wool tied around his throat and said in a whisper, "I am too hoarse to speak." And the people of Athens banished him.

Mr. President, when I saw the Federal Reserve Board sitting above the storm of battle and administering this mighty Federal reserve banking system so as to meet every demand, when I saw the interests of the East and Northeast calling for money to loan the Allies, and it quickly responded, and when I saw the country itself call for a loan of $10,000,000,000 for the allied nations and it quickly responded, and when I saw it called upon to float twenty-odd billion dollars of Liberty bonds, and it graciously responded without a tremor, I said, "God bless the great Federal reserve banking system."

Then I saw it when the bugle sounded truce on the battle fields of France, when the war was over and the curtain went down. I saw it after peace had come, in the year 1920, when the hungry wolves of Wall Street commenced to howl in anticipation of the financial feast that they somehow knew was going to be prepared for them from the substance of the South and West. I saw them advance as they did under the old banking system, and I said: "Let them come. We will meet them in the open field and fight them and whip them as we have done with the guns and battle blades of the Federal reserve banking system. Send for Gov. Harding, and when he comes out and tells those wolves of Wall Street that we are going to be furnished with the guns and ammunition necessary to whip them, they will turn and flee as they did in 1919." Gov. Harding appears with something tied around his throat and he tells the farmers, merchants, and bankers of the South and West that he, like Demosthenes, is too hoarse to speak. The wolves of Wall Street, like Harpalus, had their way; but, strange to say, President Harding, unlike the indignant people of Athens, did not dismiss or banish the governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. President, I commend to my friend, the Senator from Virginia, the public statements and speeches of John Skelton Williams. I was talking to the Senator yesterday about it, and I know he will not object if I tell you that he said he had never read a statement or a speech of John Skelton Williams on this great subject. Then I knew how to account for all the misinformation that the Senator from Virginia had inflicted upon the Senate and the country regarding the Republican deflation policy carried out by the Federal Reserve Board.

John Skelton Williams, at the time he acquired the valuable information that he has given to the country, was Comptroller of the Currency and a member of the Federal Reserve Board. He is a man of great ability and very high character. While he sat on that board he called Gov. Harding's attention and the board's attention to the fact that instead of deflating credits and contracting the currency they could and should issue $2,000,000,000 more without endangering in the least the gold reserve. He told them that, and he told them the truth; but they would not do it. Instead of doing that and preventing widespread disaster, they pumped the lifeblood out of the body of business in America and paralysis set in, and we have had a dreadful and terrible time, Senators. John Skelton Williams has dared to tell the people of the country the truth about the Federal Reserve Board's hurtful policy after a change took place in the mood and conduct of the members of that board. He has told us how, after the deflation policy had been ordered, the Federal Reserve Board held secret meetings to which he, a member of the board, was not invited. Who is this John Skelton Williams? He is the man of whom I am informed two years ago at a farmers' meeting in Lynchburg, Va., the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] said, in substance, "He is the greatest Comptroller of the Currency we have ever had, and practically the only one in 40 years." Now, back to the secret meetings of the Federal Reserve Board. Does that look like everything was open and aboveboard? It looks very suspicious and crooked to me. Why, Mr. President, the Manufacturers' Record, probably the greatest business magazine in the country, a periodical of high standing and large circulation amongst business men, has from the beginning strongly criticized the Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy. It said, among other things, that Gov. Harding had hoarded the lifeblood of the Nation and would not let it circulate.

COMMENDING MY COURSE.

And it told the truth. Col. George W. Armstrong, of Fort Worth, Tex., a big cotton farmer and cattleman, has written a book on that destructive deflation policy, called "The Crime of 'Twenty,'" and he has dedicated it to the editor of the Manufacturers' Record for the great fight that he has made along this line. The Manufacturers' Record calls attention to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States condemned the conduct of the Federal Reserve Board. Am I not in good company with John Skelton Williams, Richard H. Edmonds, of the Manufacturers' Record, George W. Armstrong, and the Supreme Court? Mr. President, the people of my section have suffered sorely because of the crime of 1920, and the people of the West have suffered the same afflictions. As long as I have the strength to battle I shall fight for a fair and honest administration of our great Federal reserve banking system. I may not be able to get my arguments into the subsidized newspapers of the country. They may be able to keep them out of such papers, but they can not keep them out of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Wherever my speech has gone, the one I made in brief reply to the Senator from Virginia, I have received many letters, some from his own State, commending my course and indorsing the fight that I am making for an honest administration of our great banking system.

To my mind the Federal Reserve Board has committed a grievous wrong against the people of the United States. Senators, it is no small offense for a board of five men to cut off credits and place the money supply beyond the reach of business that needed it to prevent financial ruin. I am fighting to make such a crime so odious that it will never be committed again. Of course, I know that those who made millions and hundreds of millions through the policy of deflation hope to be able to do it again, and that is the reason they dislike for me and others to expose this crime now. But I am not seeking to please them; I am fighting them and I shall continue to fight them whenever they work injury to my country.

What did John Skelton Williams tell them? He said, "You are shutting up money and hoarding gold that should be in circulation serving the purpose for which it was created." The Washington Post of January 23, 1922, declared that our country had been hurt by hoarding gold. What an indictment against the deflation policy that I have for months condemned. I am told of what a Senator quoting John Skelton Williams said to President Harding when the President said, "Well, you must admit that we have a very large gold reserve." The Senator said, "Mr. President, suppose the city of Washington was on fire and block after block was being swept away, and every fire alarm in the city was sounding, but no fire engine or fire fighter appeared on the scene. What would you think when it was all over and millions of dollars worth of property had been destroyed, if the firemen should come to you and boast that they had the largest water supply in the history of the city?"

Mr. President, at the instance of Wall Street gold was hoarded and kept out of circulation so that Wall Street could work its will on the helpless masses of America. When I was down home the other day I saw a young man moving his household goods along the road to a cotton-mill town. Two years before he owned a beautiful little farm, with young fruit trees about his dwelling house. He had a bright, cheerful wife and a fine boy and girl—twin joys of a happy little home upon the farm. The 14-year-old boy was walking along by the wagon. He had a troubled look upon his face as he walked along gazing upon the ground. I saw his little 6-year-old sister sitting with her mother in the wagon as she hugged a little doll to her bosom. The good wife and mother was trying to be brave through it all. The crop of 1920 and the little farm on which it was produced had been sacrificed upon the altar of a cruel and remorseless deflation policy.

He told me what had happened. The debt-paying power of his products had been destroyed and the little home and farm that he had provided for those he loved had been swept away and he was leaving the community where he was born and reared with debts incurred in farm operations still hanging over him.

Here was a hopeful, buoyant, and successful young farmer broken in spirit and ruined in business simply because he could not obtain financial aid to prevent the destruction of the debt-paying power of his products. He is one of the hundreds of thousands of farmers in the South who were literally robbed by that policy. When I saw this same young farmer previously he had a cheerful look on his face, but when I saw him leaving the home and moving his household effects along the public road he was a changed man. The bright and cheerful look that I had seen before was gone.

A lump came in his throat when he told me that the most trying ordeal came when his boy, with tears in his eyes and a sad tone in his voice, said, "Papa, what does all this mean?" Senators, that question was asked by many thousands of once happy boys and girls upon their fathers' farms in the South and West during the deadly drive of that destructive deflation. The farmer's products were taken from him at prices below the cost of production and then sold to the consumer at exorbitant prices and tremendous profits. Farmers lost their homes and farms and tens of thousands of them were driven from agricultural pursuits into cotton-mill towns and industrial centers.

Mr. President, when I saw this work of destruction going on I thought of the unfortunate Acadian farmers about whom Longfellow wrote in his poem Evangeline:

Waste are those pleasant farms, and the farmers forever departed!
Scattered like dust and leaves, when the mighty blasts of October
Seize them, and whirl them aloft, and sprinkle them far o'er the ocean.

As cruel as the decree of the king which took the crops and lands of the Acadian farmers was the disastrous deflation policy that destroyed the business and took away the farms of innumerable American farmers.

In describing the Acadian farmers' farewell to home and farm Longfellow said:

Soon o'er the yellow fields, in silent and mournful procession,
Came from the neighboring hamlets and farms the Acadian women,
Driving in ponderous wains their household goods to the seashore,
Pausing and looking back to gaze once more on their dwellings
Ere they were shut from sight by the winding road and the woodland.
Close at their sides their children ran, and urged on the oxen,
While in their little hands they clasped some fragments of playthings.

Tragedies as sad and heart-rending as this one have been enacted right here in the agricultural sections of the South and West. That deadly deflation policy left broken spirits, deserted farms, and ruined homes in its trail, and yet the Senator from Virginia and the cold and cruel Federal Reserve Board wonder why I should dare to criticize and condemn a policy that has brought so much distress and misery to millions of people in the agricultural sections of my country. Mr. President, I want to read something about the subject under consideration from some very eminent authorities. First, the governor of the Bank of France; second, the former chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. McKenna; and so on.

I read:

We have welcomed, whether by means of rediscount or by direct discount, all paper whose creation responded to the legitimate needs of commerce and production. By this liberal policy we expect to support with all our power the activities of widely varying business enterprises which in France are needed to lessen the violence of the crisis.

If the Federal Reserve Board had felt that way the story would be quite different.

Now, I will read to you the views expressed by the Hon. Reginald McKenna, formerly chancellor of the exchequer of England and now president of the London Joint City and Midland Bank, the largest bank in the world. These extracts from Mr. McKenna's statement are contained in an English newspaper, the Clarion, published under date of February 4, 1921:

Let us look at the policy of monetary deflation to be obtained by a high bank rate and a restriction of credit. Let us suppose that it were practicable by this process to bring prices permanently down to the prewar level. What sort of charge would our national debt then mean to us? It ranks to-day at $9,700,000,000, mostly borrowed when money was worth very much less than before the war. With prices back to their former level, the true burden of the debt would be more than doubled, or, in other words, the creditor would receive a huge premium at the expense of the debtor.

I think I have said enough to show that an attempt at monetary deflation of this kind can only end in the strangulation of business and widespread unemployment.

The editor of the Clarion, commenting on this statement, says:

Thus, in Mr. McKenna's opinion, the Government policy now being carried out by the banks, the policy of reducing the supply of money for industry, will inevitably result in—

1. The robbery of the majority of the people for the benefit of a few rich.
2. An unbearable rate of taxation.
3. Widespread unemployment.

Continuing, he says:

Mr. McKenna on this question is in entire agreement with us. He says:

"Monetary inflation, unlike speculative inflation, is not a temporary condition capable of remedy by raising the bank rate and restricting credits. Prices in this case are forced up over a protracted period of time, wages and contracts of all kinds are adjusted to new price levels, and fresh capital is embarked in business on this basis. In circumstances such as these the first effect of an attempt to force down prices by monetary deflation must be to cause severe trade depression. * * * The consequences of a continuous fall in prices entailed by dear money and restriction of credit, and accentuated by heavy taxation, must be complete stagnation of business."

Mr. President, that is as true as the Gospel. When cotton was 40 cents a pound the farmer in my county who made 10 bales of cotton could pay $2,000 worth of debts with it, but when this deflation policy commenced and the price went down to 10 cents a pound, it required 40 bales of cotton, four times the amount he had, which would mean four crops, to pay the indebtedness that he incurred in making one crop in the terrible year of deflation. I read again:

"I think I have said enough to show that to attempt a monetary deflation of this kind can only end in the strangulation of business and widespread unemployment."

The editor of the Clarion, commenting on this statement, says:

Thus, in Mr. McKenna's opinion, the Government policy now being carried out by the banks—the policy of reducing the supply of money for industry—will inevitably result in—the robbery of the majority of the people for the benefit of a few rich men; second, an unbearable rate of taxation; third, widespread unemployment.

What have we in this country now? We have exactly those conditions. That is what Mr. McKenna said would happen under deflation, and that is what did happen. The masses have been robbed, a favored few have increased their already immense fortunes, and millions of men are out of employment.

I showed to the Senate a little while ago that we lost in 12 months' time on one cotton crop $1,750,000,000. We lost that amount and Wall Street speculators got it. I have said here once before and I now repeat that if a man had sold a thousand bales of cotton on the bear side of the market in July, 1920, and had held his contract for seven weeks, he would have made $45,000 on the 1,000 bales. Who lost that $45,000? The cotton farmer. Who made it? The speculator in New York and other places. So when I am talking about the farmer losing so much money I want you to know that somebody got every dollar he lost.

What about wheat? Wheat had been selling for $2 and a little more a bushel, but when it went down to $1 a bushel what happened to the consumer? He did not get any benefit from the reduction; he continued to pay a high price for flour and bread. What happened to corn? The price of corn was beaten down low. What happened to the products of corn? Corn flakes—and I have referred to this once before in the Senate—sold for 15 cents a saucer.

I paid 15 cents for a saucer of corn flakes when the farmer of the West was getting 20 cents a bushel for his corn. I paid 15 cents for a saucer of oatmeal when the farmer was getting 17 cents a bushel for oats. Who got the money the farmer lost on grain? Not the consumer but the speculator. How about live stock? A sheepman in the West testified that he could not get financial aid to enable him to retain his large flock of sheep, that he was forced to sell them. He said after paying for feed on the way to market and for freight charges that he received above that amount just 34 cents a head. He lost more than $8 a head on his flock of sheep. And yet at that very time the hotels of Washington were charging from 35 to 50 cents for one lamb chop.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia. Mr. WATSON of Georgia. A few days ago there was brought to me from the reception room a card bearing the name of Mr. Will Kendrick, of Mayfield, Ga., a business man whom I have known for many years. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] perhaps knows him. He is a worthy gentleman and entirely trustworthy. Among other things which he told me, showing conditions in Georgia, was this: His son-in-law, a large farmer, found it necessary to run his farm on a basis of 15 plows less than he had been doing. That left him with 15 surplus mules, which, of course, he wanted to sell. There being no local demand for mules he shipped them to Atlanta—a carload of mules. They were sold and his net return from that carload of mules, which cost him $150 apiece two or three years ago, was less than $1 apiece for the mules, the net return being $12.50.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, there are innumerable instances akin to the one mentioned by the Senator from Georgia.

Right in line with what the Senator from Georgia said, let me read from the testimony of Mr. Wilcox, a gentleman who represented farming interests and who appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture. He said:

When this call came for money, when the Eastern banks called on the Western banks for money, the Western banks called on the cattlemen, with the result that the cattlemen simply pushed into the market what they had; liquidated their cattle—they played square and gave what they had to settle and tried to settle. Then started an absolute flood of cattle going into the market back yonder, beginning in the spring when the cattle should have gone to the range.

Mr. President, I said that this terrible thing commenced in the spring of 1920, in May of that year, and that is when he says this devilment was done to the cattlemen of the country. Again he said:

In other words, instead of those cattle going to the range, as is customary and as should be the case, on account of this calling of loans they went to Chicago, Omaha, and Kansas City. As far as I could find out on my trip, there is probably not more than 50 per cent as many cattle on the ranges in the Northwestern country as there was a year ago. This situation is due altogether, so far as I can see, to the fact that they had to liquidate.

Yet my friend from Virginia does not seem to know that they were forced to liquidate. The cattle industry of the country was stricken down. Here is the testimony. The Senator wanted proof of a deflation, and here it is. This man said when the cattle ought to have been feeding upon the plains, when they should have been producing meat to feed the world, they were driven into the market place. They went to pay as far as they could go. One farmer in Iowa asked the question of the bankers, "What are you going to do with this money when you get it from us? Are you not going to loan it to somebody? Then, if you are, is there any interest more closely bound up with the welfare of the whole country than agriculture?" They have not answered him yet. What did they do with that money? They took it to New York and loaned it out in Wall Street, where the speculator could use it in beating down still lower the price of farm products. The Federal Reserve Board, although its actions would indicate it, is not the private property of any bank or set of banks. It is composed of Government officials, whose duty it is to see that the Federal reserve banking system is justly and honestly administered.

Mr. President, I have here a number of authorities upon this subject that I will read and make some comments upon, including some statements from Mr. Williams, so that my friend from Virginia can read them and answer them, if he can.

The Senator from Virginia says the Federal reserve banks did not refuse to lend money. The governor of North Carolina, Mr. Bickett, who appeared before our committee, says the trouble was that the call came all down the line to "Pay up your loans." He said that was the trouble, and the bankers of North Carolina said it came from the Federal Reserve Board in Washington; so the Senator from Virginia accepts the statement of Gov. Harding and his gold-dust twin, Platt, rather than believe the statement of reputable bankers in North Carolina.

Mr. President, I interrogated Gov. Harding right in that connection, and I want to read something that was said. Congressman BYRNES of South Carolina before that committee read a bulletin issued by the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, dated December 20, 1919, addressed to all member banks, saying:

Our present task, therefore, is to proceed with the deflation of credits as rapidly and as systematically as possible.

The Senator from Virginia said he wanted proof, and here it is.

What does that mean? "Go out after them. Take them as you come to them. Begin now and let none escape." That statement was inspired by the Federal Reserve Board and was of itself enough to frighten bankers and demoralize business.

Now, listen. Gov. Harding said before our Committee on Agriculture:

I think that was excellent advice.

A little more light on the subject of deflation for the Senator from Virginia, and this from the governor of the board.

Do you get that, Senators? The very man who denies that he had anything to do with deflation admits that he gave sanction to a policy of deflation that was to be carried out as rapidly as possible.

When did they start in earnest and with a vengeance that merciless policy? They waited until May, 1920, until every cotton seed was in the ground and until the farmers of the West had planted. They waited until they got the farmers committed to large plans for the year's operations. They waited until they had bought their fertilizer and gone into debt on an inflated dollar. They waited until they had bought their implements and other things. They waited until the farmer was tied up and it was too late for him to beat a retreat. The merchants had made large advances and the local banks had granted credits. Then it was that the deadly deflation was begun. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] says there were some who saw the storm coming and went to shelter. Yes; that is true. A Senator from a western State told me about a man who said to him in 1920: "The Republicans are going to put into operation a deflation policy. I have got $25,000, and under deflation I can be worth $50,000 at the end of the year." The man who had money could go to shelter or go and speculate and get out of things that he knew were going to be in the crash; but the farmer could not do that, and the merchant and banker who had made advances could not do that. Mr. President, he was bound hard and fast while the destructive policy of deflation beat upon him with all its fury.

When the Federal Reserve Board refused to go, as it had done before, to his rescue there was nothing he could do but to stand and suffer.

Now, let us see a little further about Gov. Harding.

In 1919 I received a telegram from a firm of merchants in my town, Stanley & Singer. They said:

Rumored here that Federal reserve banks will not back the local banks in carrying cotton.

That is another proof that they intended to start this deflation in the summer of 1919, when they had tied up the farm land banks, as I said. All of these things link up and connect. This firm wired me, and I called Gov. Harding myself and told him about the rumor being circulated in Alabama and I inquired if it was true. He waited a little while and said, "No." He is not very talkative on anything that would benefit the people, but he is a mighty palaverer when he is trying to evade an issue or dodge the truth on the witness stand. He has no equal when it comes to that. He is as slick as an eel in a bucket of soapsuds. But, Mr. President, I said to him, "It is not true is it?" He finally said, "No." I told him that I was going to wire down there that the rumor was untrue and that Federal reserve banks will continue as formerly to back the local banks, and he gave his permission for me to do that. I wired Stanley & Singer, in substance, this, "No truth in rumor. Federal reserve banks will continue to back local banks as formerly in handling cotton."

That telegram was printed in some Alabama papers and other newspapers in the South. We had Gov. Harding before the Committee on Agriculture in December, 1920, and he dodged and evaded questions propounded by Senator NORRIS, Senator KENYON, and others as to his willingness to change the policy of deflation and aid agriculture. He would dodge and evade and say, "That reminds me of so and so," and off he would go. We talked among ourselves about what a slick, smooth witness he was. I decided to pin him down and get a direct answer. I asked about Alabama banks complaining about the conduct of the board.

Let me read the questions and answers:

Mr. HEFLIN. Have they not complained to you that the banks are not being treated as they were last year? Have you not had complaints from banks in Alabama?

Mr. HARDING. We have had no general complaints. I have had a few complaints.

Of course, they made them to the governor of the board!

Mr. HEFLIN. Did you not have complaints in October that some action of the board had broken the price of cotton?

Mr. HARDING. I was urged while in Birmingham, on the 9th of October, to make a statement that the resources of the Federal reserve system would be available to the cotton producers of the South to hold their cotton until such time as cotton might go back to 40 cents a pound, and I declined to make any such statement.

Mr. President, does not the very tone of that reply show that he was not in favor of giving any aid at all?

His very manner and bearing impressed me that he was not friendly but hostile toward the plan to aid cotton producers.

Then I said to him:

I think that these conditions that now exist, caused by the war, require that something should be done to tide the farmers of the South and West over, and to keep them from suffering this severe loss.

Mr. HARDING. I would be very glad to do anything in my power to help the farmers of the South and West.

Now, Mr. President, in order to show that he did not desire or intend to aid the farmers of the South and West, I will read to you a question asked by me and his evasive answer. I said:

Are we authorized by your position in the matter of lending money on farm products to local banks, through regional banks in the Federal reserve system, to give out a statement that you and the Federal Reserve Board do not oppose but encourage regional banks in giving the fullest aid possible to farmers in handling their crops so as to enable them to obtain a living profit for their farm products?

AN ELUSIVE AND INDIRECT OFFICIAL.

I was putting it squarely up to him. He whirled in his chair, turned pale, and said:

The Federal Reserve Board always prefers to make its own statements.

Did that answer indicate that he wanted to do anything for the farmers of the South and West? I was asking him if he was not willing for us to give out a statement to our constituents that he was friendly to them and that he would help them, but he whirled in his chair and said:

The board always prefers to make its own statements.

I telephoned him once before and asked him if I could make a statement, and he said I could. That was before this conspiracy was entered into. That was before he wired Warren G. Harding, a Republican, congratulating him on his nomination, before he wrote him a letter congratulating him on his acceptance speech. That was before he journeyed, not to Jericho but to Marion, Ohio, in the fall of 1920, and that was before William Boyce Thompson, the treasurer of the Republican campaign committee, borrowed partly under a dummy note $5,000,000 through a member of the Federal reserve bank in New York. It was before all that when he told me that I could make that statement about aiding banks in carrying cotton, and I wired that the Federal reserve banks would continue to back the local banks, and I asked the simple question here if I might do that again, and this gentleman, who is willing to help the farmers all he can, said, "We prefer to give out our own statements."

He never did give out any statement, and so his failure to give it out and his failure to permit me and others to give out a statement shows that he was against doing the thing that we wanted done. He was against reviving the War Finance Corporation. So was Secretary Houston. I put them in the same boat. I believe, as I live, that both of them supported the Republican ticket in 1920, and they were opposed to reviving the War Finance Corporation. At the time they killed it there were applications pending for $65,000,000 to export cotton to countries that needed it beyond the seas; and Eugene Meyer, who testified before the committee, said to Gov. Harding, "You know that all the outstanding debts against the War Finance Corporation were good," and he could not deny it.

What was the reason, then, for killing the War Finance Corporation? I do not know whether my friend from Virginia was in favor of that or not. He did not appear to say anything about it one way or the other, but in referring to the man who succeeded him, Secretary Houston, the Bulletin of the Federal Reserve Board said that "the policy of Houston will be the policy of Secretary GLASS." So my friend from Virginia, my good and genial friend who thinks so much of the Federal Reserve Board, may have held to the same views that Secretary Houston held to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator does not want to be absurd. Secretary Houston succeeded me and I preceded him. Therefore his policy could not have been my policy.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator. The bulletin said that Secretary GLASS's policy would be Secretary Houston's policy.

Mr. GLASS. I repeat, Secretary Houston followed me, and my policy could not have followed Houston's policy.

Mr. HEFLIN. This bulletin said that his policy would be the same as the Senator's policy had been.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator should get it right.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have got it right.

Mr. GLASS. Then it will be the only thing the Senator has gotten right.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am going to set a lot of things right. I am going to set the Senator from Virginia right before I am through with him.

Mr. President, I said further to Gov. Harding:

I know a farmer in my county who has 50 bales of cotton, on which he ought to at least be able to get $5,000.

He is unable to get this money, and he has mortgaged his farm.

Think of that, Senators, going back to the nest egg, driving them with their produce into a dead market, refusing to let them have money to fight the wolves of Wall Street, driving them away from the Federal reserve system, driving them into the farm loan banks to mortgage the roofter and the farm of their fathers to get money to hold one year's crop off the market.

Here is what I said to the governor of the Federal Reserve Board about that:

That is the condition that exists. I do not know what you hear or what comes to you on paper, Governor, but they are in a desperate condition.

Then I said again:

Whatever the amount is that they are getting, it is not sufficient to enable them to handle the crop as they should.

That is my contention, Mr. President, that the farmers of the South and the farmers of the West did not get the money that was necessary to enable them to hold their produce until they could get a price that would yield a profit.

One other thing was about to escape my mind. This deflation was planned, as I have said, at the time the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] introduced the resolution which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] said meant the start of a deflation policy, and told them that it was done at the instance of Chicago and Wall Street, New York. What happened? They put that War Finance Corporation out of commission. We held a meeting over here—I was on the committee—and we reported a resolution in favor of reviving it.

Section 2 of that resolution directed the Federal Reserve Board to go to the aid of American farmers in distress. What happened to that? It died at the hands of a Republican Congress, and I did not hear my friend from Virginia open his mouth in advocacy of that proposition. There were some Senators here who did not favor it, but they could not beat section 2 of that resolution, and we passed it, but it died in the other branch of the Congress, and I understand that the Federal Reserve Board whispered the word down the line to kill it. I know it was killed.

Who is responsible for this deflation policy? If President Harding keeps in power a board which has dickered with the interests of Wall Street, and, as the editor of the Manufacturers' Record said, has lost the confidence and respect of the business men of the country, how can he expect good times to return? I want to assert here what I have said before, that the bankers of this country live in fear and trembling of that board. I have received letters from them.

Other Senators have received letters and have told me about them. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] the other day rose and asked me why it is that the banks are afraid of this board and are not willing to have their names used when they write letters to us about its policy. I say it is because they are afraid. They know what this board will do to them. One man said in a letter to me, "There are so many ways they can affect us injuriously and punish us; do not use my name." What are we coming to? These banking institutions, which should have money in ample supply to meet the needs of honest business, are afraid of five men sitting at the Capital of the Nation, where our great banking system is being mismanaged and run entirely to the satisfaction of Wall Street.

Mr. President, I want to read from a letter from a gentleman who resides in the State of my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. He said:

The rapid increase of bills payable among the banks in the agricultural section to keep the business of our section going are in addition to the exhaustion of the balances which banks are always able to accumulate during the fall, when crops were moving.

What happened? Crops were not moving. Do you expect a manufacturer of cotton to pay 35 cents a pound for cotton when he thinks it is going to 25? Of course not. If he will not do it, do you expect the merchant to pay that and hold it, when he knows he will lose $50 a bale on it? Of course not. Then what happens? This man tells the truth. He says that when the crop is moving they have money with which to do the business of the community. Listen to this:

In the fall of 1920 our banks were not able to build up these balances in their correspondent banks north because of the disappearance of values during the fall of 1920, and January 1, 1921, found the average bank in agricultural sections not only without balances with their correspondents but owing large amounts to their correspondents, which they were absolutely unable to pay because of the inability of their farmer customers to sell their products at a price which would enable them to pay their debts to the banks.

He continues:

This situation, I contend, the banks in the agricultural sections were no more responsible for than the lending banks, both the borrower and the lender being inspired during the year 1920 by the slogan that went all over the country that the farmers should exert themselves to the uttermost to make products to feed and clothe a hungry and naked world. Banks all over the country, borrowing and lending banks, joined in this crusade.

Mr. President, they said to the farmers, "Go to it. Make a big crop of cotton. Make a big crop of wheat. Make a big crop of corn. Times are going to be good for five years. The Old World will consume everything we can make. Go to it." The farmers went to it, and when they came up in the fall time with their harvests to the market place they said, "Won't you aid us to hold this until we can get enough to cover the cost of production?" They turned their backs upon them. What did they do? They shoveled money into Wall Street by the millions and hundreds of millions, and denied it to the farmers, merchants, and bankers of the South and West.

Let me call your attention to a table and statement prepared by John Skelton Williams. It contains some matter to which I have already referred, but I desire for it to appear in full at this point:

THE TRAGEDY OF DEFLATION.

OUR FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM A NATIONAL BLESSING; ITS MISMANAGEMENT A PUBLIC CALAMITY—"DEFLATION"—LIABILITIES OF FAILED BUSINESS HOUSES, 1921, $627,401,838, NEARLY SIX TIMES AS GREAT AS IN 1919 ($113,391,237), AND OVER THREE TIMES AS MUCH AS IN THE PANIC YEAR 1907.

(These figures are exclusive of thousands of farmers and individuals who also became bankrupt and ruined in the same period.)

SUICIDES REPORTED IN UNITED STATES FIRST SIX MONTHS 1921, 7,016; SAME PERIOD LAST YEAR, 2,996; INCREASE IN DEATHS BY SUICIDE, SIX MONTHS, 4,120.

The following table shows the average monthly prices of leading agricultural, mining, and manufacturing products for the month of January, 1920, and for each month from May, 1920, to August, 1921, inclusive; also, the amount of credits extended by the 12 reserve banks for each month for the period from May, 1920. (Figures have been compiled from official monthly issues of the Federal Reserve Bulletins published by the Federal Reserve Board.)

EFFECT OF DEFLATION ON RAILROAD TRAFFIC.

Freight traffic on the principal railroads last year decreased 23.3 per cent compared with 1920, the greatest decline, relatively and absolutely, that the railroads ever experienced in a single year. Net ton-miles totaled 344,167,000,000 during 1921, 103,890,000,000 less than in 1920.

The collapse in prices of agricultural and other commodities was contemporaneous with the enforcement of the Federal Reserve Board's ruinous "deflation policies."

For the four months from the end of January, 1920, to the end of May, 1920, the loans and discounts and bought paper held by the 12 Federal reserve banks show an increase of about $200,000,000, and coincidentally there was an increase, rather than a decline, in commodity prices. Corn at Chicago averaged $1.47 in January and advanced to $1.98 in May. Wheat advanced from $2.63 in January to $2.97 in May. Cotton maintained its price. Cotton yarns advanced; copper was fairly steady.

From the end of May to the end of July there was a reduction of about $100,000,000 in the credits by the Federal reserve system. Disquieting reports were spread as to the deflation policies of the reserve system, and the downward slide in prices got under way. As the table shows, commodity prices, responding to the deflation policies of the Reserve Board, proceeded to tumble. Corn, which had averaged $1.98 in May, declined to $1.52 in August. Cotton, from $0.403 in May, averaged $0.338 in August. Wheat, from $2.97 in May to $2.47 in August. Wool, from $1.16 in May, averaged $0.87 in August.

The aggregate credits extended by the Federal reserve system after declining for June and July from the May level increased somewhat to the end of October as a result of advances for the crop movement, but the curtailment of credit and pressure for the payment of loans was actively enforced in other directions and prices continued to fall. Bank deposits were shrinking and the reserve system failed to extend the aid which would have enabled member banks to meet depositors' demands without forcing the collection of loans, entailing many bankruptcies. Just at this time—September and October, 1920—urgent pleas for a change of policies were made to the Reserve Board by Senators, Congressmen, farmers' associations, and business men throughout the country, and by the Comptroller of the Currency, whose protests both to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the board against the board's destructive policies are of record; but all protests were of no avail. The figures in this table show that from the end of October, 1920, to the end of August, 1921, the deflation of credits by the reserve system was steady and continuous, and as the contraction proceeded prices continued to tumble. A part of the excess interest exacted from member banks was refunded after Mr. Williams in letters and public addresses had demanded of the reserve board that restitution be made.

The pressure exacted was illustrated in the small country national bank—nearly all of its loans to farmers—to which a Federal reserve bank actually charged interest as high as 87 1/2 per cent—average about 45 per cent per annum—for the use of $112,000 for two weeks, September 15 to October 1, 1920.

From May, 1920, to August, 1921, covering exactly the period of the appalling and unprecedented drop in prices of agricultural products, the actual "contraction" or "deflation" of regional reserve bank credits amounted to the huge sum of $1,411,000,000, and coincidentally the country from ocean to ocean and from Canada to the Gulf and the Mexican border experienced the most "crushing losses" and the greatest annihilation of property values in the Nation's history. The baneful effects of the board's plans and policies were seen and felt even before the aggregate of its loans and discounts began to show the shrinkage which, since October, 1920, has been drastic and continuous.

From January 1, 1920, to September 6, 1921, the total deposits of the national banks of the United States shrank from $17,866,000,000 to $14,561,000,000, the total loss in deposits for this period being $3,305,000,000. During this period the Federal reserve banks, instead of easing the situation by granting accommodations to enable the member banks to meet these unprecedented demands upon them, exerted such pressure in requiring them to pay up or curtail their loans that the contraction or deflation in the credits which had been extended by the 12 Federal reserve banks showed, from the end of May, 1920, to the 1st of September, 1921, the colossal and destructive contraction, as above stated, of more than $1,400,000,000.

Between the end of October, 1920, and the end of August, 1921, the amount of Federal reserve notes in circulation also shrank from $3,351,000,000 to $2,481,000,000, a contraction of $870,000,000. This contraction in the circulating currency is all the more significant when we realize that a large portion of the Federal reserve notes outstanding were issued against gold retired from circulation and not against commercial credits with only the statutory percentage of gold.

SUMMARY.

Total loans and discounts and "bought paper" held by all 12 Federal reserve banks May 28, 1920.....	$2,938,031,000
Total loans and discounts and "bought paper" held by all 12 Federal reserve banks Aug. 31, 1921.....	1,527,255,000
Total loans and discounts and "bought paper" held by all 12 Federal reserve banks Jan. 25, 1922.....	932,882,000

Actual contraction in credits extended by the Federal reserve system May 28, 1920, to Aug. 31, 1921..... $1,410,776,000

Actual contraction in credits extended by the Federal reserve system May 28, 1920, to Jan. 25, 1922..... 2,005,149,000

Which means that the credits which were being extended by all Federal reserve banks on August 31, 1920, amounted to only 52 per cent of the amount outstanding May 28, 1920, and on January 25, 1922, the amount outstanding was only 31 per cent of the figures for May, 1920.

Average price for the 16 leading products showing in the above table for the month of May, 1920, was..... $87.12

Average price for the 16 leading products showing in the above table for the month of August, 1921, was..... 27.07

Notwithstanding these facts certain officials of the reserve system are disseminating propaganda alleging directly contrary to the record, that during the period of the great fall in prices there was an increase or nearly a thousand million dollars in credits granted by the reserve banks.

VIEWS OF LEADING MEN AT HOME AND ABROAD.

The paralyzing and destructive deflation policies of the Federal Reserve Board which have been so world-wide in their effects contrast most vividly with the views of the ablest and best thinkers and leaders of our own and other countries.

The following extracts from the expressed opinions of eminent authorities are merely examples of countless others:

Sir Edward Holden, late president of the London Joint City and Midland Bank:

The president of the British Banking Reform League in referring to an address delivered several years ago by Sir Edward Holden on the "Depreciation of Securities in Relation to Gold," said:

"In that illuminating address Sir Edward showed conclusively that the maximum amount of trade which is possible depended upon the volume of bank loans allowed, and that the extent to which loans could be granted depended not upon the demands of trade nor upon the amount of securities offered, but upon the amount of legal-tender reserves controlled by the banks."

Lord Leverhulme, probably the greatest industrial leader in the British Empire:

"The process of too rapid deflation is undoubtedly the cause of the present unemployment and trade stagnation."

"The prices of commodities rose to the extreme limit during the war and their reduction was a prime necessity, but the fall has been too sudden for adjustment. This deflation has been accomplished through the banks calling in loans which were used to finance stocks at high prices, and the effect of the forced realization of these stocks has been to drive down prices of commodities below the cost of production."

Of Lord Leverhulme, a distinguished English writer in his well-known book, "The Mirrors of Downing Street," says: "I suppose that nobody will now dispute that Lord Leverhulme is easily the foremost industrialist, not merely in the British Isles, but in the world. I can think of no one who approaches him in the creative faculty. Not even America, the country of big men and big business, has produced a man of this truly colossal stature."

In marked contrast with the policies of our Federal Reserve Board are the views of the heads of the greatest banks abroad.

Hon. Reginald McKenna, of England, formerly chancellor of the exchequer, now president of the London Joint City and Midland Bank, the largest bank in the world:

"I think I have said enough to show that an attempt at monetary deflation of this kind can only end in the strangulation of business and widespread unemployment."

"The consequences of a continuous fall in prices entailed by dear money and restriction of credit, and accentuated by heavy taxation, must be complete stagnation of business."

The president of the British Banking Reform League, Mr. Arthur Kitson, in acknowledging receipt of one of John Skelton Williams' addresses on the deflation policies of the Federal Reserve Board, which had been sent him by request, said in his letter to Mr. Williams:

"I agree with all that you have written. We have been experiencing the same troubles in this country that you have had in the United States, and from identically the same cause. Our treasury officials under the influence of the big money lenders undertook to deflate our currency."

"The public stopped buying, business collapsed, firms closed their doors, and we have at the present time the greatest roll of unemployed that we have ever had since the 'hungry forties.'"

The same well-known authority in an address published in 1920 said: "The contraction which followed the Napoleonic wars, when our statesmen destroyed the 'cheap' money which had enabled Great Britain to carry on industries during the long war period from 1797 to 1813, and substituted the costly and inadequate gold basis, brought about the great fall in prices and that era of business depression which gave rise to the corn-law agitation resulting in the Chartist riots and the rise of the free-trade movement."

"Neither free traders nor tariff reformers seem to have understood that that period of social misery was directly attributable to the Government's contraction of the money supplies."

Hon. Moreton Frewen, leading English economist and publicist, a year ago in discussing the world crisis:

"What, then, are the common denominators which best account for the universality of that disaster now impending over the new year? I have pointed out one, namely, the deflation of credits and currencies. It is enough to say that if this intentional and malevolent destruction of credit is followed to its logical conclusions men's hearts may well fail them everywhere for the days that are at hand."

The governor of the Bank of France, properly regarded as one of the world's most eminent banking authorities, in his annual report a year ago declared:

"We have welcomed, whether by means of rediscount or by direct discount, all paper whose creation responded to the legitimate needs of commerce and production. By this liberal policy, to which we have remained and always will remain faithful, we expect to support with all our power the activities of widely varying business enterprises which in France are needed to lessen the violence of the crisis."

Prof. Gustav Cassel, an economist of international reputation, in his recent report submitted to the League of Nations:

"The downward movement of prices has not, as is sometimes assumed, been merely a spontaneous result of forces beyond our control. It is essentially the result of a policy deliberately framed with a view to bringing down prices and giving a higher value to the monetary unit."

"The world's work has been brought to a standstill to a degree that we have never witnessed before, and unemployment has risen to alarming figures, particularly in countries where the policy of deflation has been applied most severely."

Prof. J. Laurence Laughlin, professor emeritus of the School of Political Economy, University of Chicago:

"A crisis comes because credit has been unduly expanded in a period of prolonged prosperity; in an optimistic spirit men have entered into transactions beyond their actual means, as is shown when the test of actual payment is exacted, and in a time of fright collateral as well as goods falls in price. In such a situation liquidation needs time if disaster is to be prevented."

"The great need is some means—whatever it may be—which will enable a bank to make loans to a client, who can thereby be saved from failure and from hasty and ruinous liquidation."

Prof. Irving Fisher, professor of political economy, Yale University: The newspapers of January 31, 1922, in dispatches from London quote Prof. Fisher as pointing out in an address before the London School of Economics, at the London University, that the fundamental cause of the collapse in prices in this country was the abrupt way in which the Federal Reserve system raised discount rates under the "false idea that they must get back to the so-called normal of pre-war."

Continuing, the press dispatch quoting Prof. Fisher says: "The idea of suddenly wrenching back price levels when they had reached the heights of 1920 to 1913 level, whilst it did bring about justice to contract parties who had entered into contracts before 1913, produced a frightful injustice to the much larger number who had contracted at these high price levels."

"Consequently," says the dispatch quoted, "Prof. Fisher held it to have been a very great mistake of policy of the Federal Reserve Board to have raised the rates of discount so high and to have produced this fall of prices."

The late A. Barton Hepburn, a leading financier of New York and former Comptroller of the Currency, upon his return last summer from a visit to the Far East, was quoted by the Associated Press as follows: "Japan is backing up the banks in lending funds at a low rate of interest to struggling farmers who would otherwise go under, to the detriment of commercial life."

Contrast the intelligent policy of the banks of Japan with the Federal reserve, which charged in some cases 15 per cent and 20 per cent, and in one instance as high as 87½ per cent, to member banks whose loans were mainly to farmers.

Japan, a newspaper published in Tokyo, Japan, in April, 1921, discussing trade between the United States and China, referred to an instance of machinery purchased by a Chinese firm on a four months' sight draft, said significantly:

"When the Federal Reserve Board called in credits, the firm was told that they would have to pay cash on delivery. This almost threw them into bankruptcy." The newspaper significantly adds:

"The Chinese memory is a long one."

VIEWS OF UNITED STATES SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

The Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, composed of prominent Senators and Representatives of both political parties, says in its report recently submitted to Congress:

"The debacle of prices in 1920 and 1921 reduced the farmer to a condition worse than he has suffered under for 30 years. Farmers are having the greatest difficulty in paying the debts incurred in producing the crops of 1920 and in securing credit necessary for new production. The commission believes that these difficulties are due in a measure to the credit restrictions and limitations of the past 18 months and in part to the fact that the banking machinery of the country is not adequately adapted to the farmers' requirements."

"The commission is of the opinion that a more liberal policy could have been adopted in the latter part of 1920 and the early part of 1921, and that the adoption of such a policy would have served to arrest, in part, the tide of deflation and to reduce the hardships and losses incident thereto."

Reserve Board deaf to repeated warnings. October 18, 1920, the Reserve Board was warned by John Skelton Williams, then Comptroller of the Currency and ex officio member of the board, in the following language:

"The plans and policies which have aided in bringing about deflation in the great staple commodities should be at once taken up for consideration and revised as far as may be necessary to meet present and changed conditions. If this is not done speedily, I am fearful as to the consequences which may ensue." Three days later, October 21, 1920, in a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Houston, Mr. Williams said:

"The strain upon the business fabric of the country is, in some respects, unparalleled and I do feel that the time has come for the exercise of such salutary and constructive powers as may be at our command. The situation has become more aggravated of late, and unless relief can be found an increase in bank failures, I believe, will be inevitable."

The board's answer to these and other warnings was, more pressure and deflation. The reduction in credits by the Federal reserve banks for the 12 months ensuing from October 15, 1920, to October 26, 1921, was more than $1,722,000,000, every month showing a contraction. The shrinkage and annihilation of property values which accompanied this "deflation" of credits exceeds the wealth of empires. The world's history furnishes no parallel for the heart-rending wiping out of values and destruction of enterprises, homes, and fortunes, large and small, which we have witnessed in the past 18 or 20 months, while the Reserve Board was conducting its experiments.

Mr. Williams kept up his efforts to secure a reversal of the board's destructive policies, but his remonstrances were unavailing. In a letter to the Reserve Board governor, January 17, 1921, he said: "It is entirely true that I wish to go on record. I wish to be recorded definitely as having done my utmost to urge our board to saving or palliative action and consideration for the troubles of the public and thereby at least free myself from the censure that will fall on us with crushing force if we omit any possible effort to mitigate present and real suffering or to avert disaster; although the consideration of personal exculpation is, of course, slight and negligible in comparison with my main purpose and hope, which are to obtain from the board some prompt and effective action for relief."

Mr. President, not only was the rediscount rate increased to 7 per cent and the progressive interest rate applied for the purpose of preventing banks from getting money for agricultural purposes but the Federal Reserve Board made it plain to the president of the American Cotton Association and the farm organizations of the West that money would not be advanced for the purpose of holding farm products for a profitable price.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the Washington Times of Friday, January 27, 1922, there appears on the page devoted to business and finance a headline reading as follows:

Reserve banks decrease note circulation. Gold holdings increased by $5,600,000, while the decrease in note circulation was $45,706,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. There it is, Mr. President. Not little by little, but in fell swoops they have done this awful injury to the country. Whose country is this? Does it belong to the banking interests of the East? Are 100,000,000 people to be looked upon as objects of prey for the moneyed interests of New York? The Federal Reserve Board, which did and now does the bidding of Wall Street, has lost the confidence of the American people and should not be at the head of this great banking system. I am fighting to save the system from those who would destroy its usefulness.

The Senator from Virginia seemed himself to feel, while speaking, as John Skelton Williams said, that he was on very uncertain ground, for several times during his speech he frankly invited corrections. For example, in making a certain statement, which I will show was wholly inaccurate; he said in his speech to the Senate:

I hope Senators will take particular note of this declaration and convict me here, if they can, of any inaccuracy that appertains to it.

Later on, after presenting deflation statistics, he again said:

If any Senator can controvert this fact, I pause to have him do it.

Of course, as Mr. Williams said:

It was impossible, while the Senator was speaking, for you or anyone else to dissect and analyze long columns of figures, but I have read them carefully, and I shall point out to you for use in your speech of reply some of his many errors. The Senator's speech may be divided into four parts:

First. His denial that "there was deflation of either regional reserve bank credits or any diminution of Federal reserve currency for the period of the appalling drop in prices of agricultural products."

Second. His denial that gross favoritism and partiality were shown in the distribution of the funds of the Federal reserve system.

Third. His defense of the rank extravagance in the matter of bank buildings for which the Federal Reserve Board has already approved the appropriation of over $72,000,000, with other enormous expenditures pending.

Fourth. His defense of the enormous salaries paid, especially by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

I will now proceed to point out the pitfalls of error and the sloughs of deception through which the distinguished Senator has been so unwittingly dragged by desperate men seeking to defend or cover up their guilt, and who, even now, are doubtless rejoicing at the guilelessness of the Senator from Virginia and the ease with which they have betrayed him in their attempts to dupe the public.

I feel justified in saying that the confidence which the Senator reposes in his informants may be creditable to his heart but not to his head. The result of his unguarded acceptance of the statements, arguments, and pleas and juggled statistics furnished to him by men now under grave criticism and public censure, is that his speech in the Senate will be shown to be reeking with error and saturated with specious claims and false conclusions and delusions.

I want to take up, first, the Senator's bold declaration that "for the period of the appalling drop in prices of agricultural products there was no deflation of either regional reserve bank credits or any diminution of Federal reserve currency."

In order to answer this, it is desirable to determine, first, what was the period to which the Senator from Virginia refers as that of "the appalling drop in prices of agricultural products?"

On page 1441 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 20 I find that he said on the first day of his speech:

"The peak of extortionate prices in this country had all but pierced the clouds in the early summer of 1920, exceeding actually the highest point of the war period."

He repeats that statement a few minutes later and says: "The peak of extortionate prices in the United States, as I said before, had all but pierced the clouds in the early summer of 1920, exceedingly actually the high point of the war period." The leading staple products and their prices in May, 1920, and August, 1921, are as follows:

the country from ocean to ocean and from Canada to the Gulf and the Mexican border experienced the most "crushing losses" and the greatest annihilation of property values in the Nation's history. The baneful effects of the board's plans and policies were seen and felt even before the aggregate of its loans and discounts began to show the shrinkage which since October, 1920, has been drastic and continuous.

From January 1, 1920, to September 6, 1921, the total deposits of the national banks of the United States shrank from $17,866,000,000

We will therefore accept "the early summer of 1920," said Mr. Williams, as he expresses it, as representing the peak of high prices, and the official price reports of the Reserve Bulletins, published monthly by the Reserve Board, confirm this view, for we find that the climax of average prices for the principal commodities was reached that month. For example, the average price in January, 1920, of No. 3 corn at Chicago was $1.47.

Middling cotton at New Orleans averaged in January, 1920, 40 cents, and that high price was the average for May.

Sugar, from $0.15 in January, reached its peak of $0.22 in May, and then the decline began.

No. 2 red winter wheat at Chicago in January was $2.63, but advanced to $2.97 in May.

Hogs at Chicago, which in January, 1920, were reported at $15.12, reached the high average of $15.88 in July; and wool, which was quoted in January at $1.23 and $1.16 in May, steadily declined from the latter date.

In the accompanying large table, in addition to the average prices for each month, I have also shown in a parallel column the total amount of all loans and discounts, including bought paper, or, as the Senator expresses it, of "credits" granted, by all 12 Federal reserve banks and held at the end of each of the months named for this entire period—

Said Mr. Williams.

Mr. President, I will print at this point in my speech a larger chart and a more comprehensive statement furnished me by Mr. Williams.

The table below shows the average monthly prices of leading agricultural, mining, and manufacturing products during the period of great deflation from May, 1920, to August, 1921, inclusive.

From May, 1920, to August, 1921, covering exactly the period of the appalling and unprecedented drop in prices of agricultural products—the actual contraction" or "deflation" of regional reserve bank credits amounted to the huge sum of $1,411,000,000 and coincidentally to $14,561,000,000—the total loss in deposits for this period being $3,305,000,000. During this period the Federal reserve banks instead of easing the situation by granting accommodations to enable the member banks to meet these unprecedented demands upon them, exerted such pressure in requiring them to pay up or curtail their loans that the contraction or deflation in the credits which had been extended by the 12 Federal reserve banks showed, from the end of May, 1920, to the 1st of September, 1921, the colossal and destructive contraction, as above stated, of more than $1,400,000,000.

Mr. President, from May to October, 1920, cotton declined 20 cents a pound or $100 a bale. That loss figured on a 12,500,000 bale crop constituted a loss in six months' time of $1,250,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask if the Senator from Alabama is now making a speech that Mr. Williams wrote for him, or is he making his own speech?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am now using indisputable data and facts furnished me by John Skelton Williams, of Virginia. I said in the outset that I had requested him to give me certain facts. He has furnished them to me, and with them I am literally annihilating the confusing and misleading statements given to the Senate by the Senator from Virginia.

He says in his statement to me:

Now, as to Senator GLASS's denial that there was "deflation" of reserve bank credits for this period, which official figures show was exactly the "period of the appalling drop in prices": the record shows that of the standard commodities listed, nearly every one reached the bottom of monthly averages in either July or August last, mostly in August, although some have continued to drop as credit granted by reserve banks declined.

I do not therefore believe that the Senator, with these facts before him—facts which were drawn from official reports by the Reserve Board itself in their monthly bulletin—will deny that the period from May, 1920, to August, 1921, was "the period of the appalling drop in prices of agricultural products."

During such period the Senator says that he "pointedly denies that there was deflation of either regional reserve bank credits or any diminution of Federal reserve currency."

That is a very plain categorical statement, but it is squarely contradicted by hard facts, both as to "deflation of regional reserve bank credits" and the "diminution of Federal reserve currency."

Mr. Williams was the United States Comptroller of the Currency, and he knows whereof he speaks.

Continuing, he says:

The official figures prove that the total amount of loans or credits extended by the 12 Federal reserve banks amounted, in May, 1920, to $2,938,000,000, and by August, 1921, the total had been "deflated" to the tune of $1,411,000,000. Although there were slight variations up and down in the few months between May, 1920, and October, 1921, there was from October on a wicked contraction or deflation practically every month—a steady, cruel, grinding, calling in of loans and credits, accompanied by unparalleled losses, failures, suicides, and ruin.

The heaviest general decline in commodity values took place in precisely that period of greatest credit contraction from September, 1920, to August, 1921. In those few fateful months, according to the admissions of the Federal Reserve Board itself, as set forth in its monthly bulletins, corn at Chicago dropped from $1.29 in September, 1920, to $0.55 in August, 1921. Middling cotton at New Orleans declined from $0.33 in August and $0.27 in September to $0.11 in July and $0.12 in August. Sugar at New York fell from $0.142 in September to $0.058 in August. Winter wheat at Chicago declined from $2.49 in September to $1.23 in August. Steers at Chicago fell from $15.21 in September to $8.77 in August. Hides shrank from $0.28 in September to $0.14 in August. The price of hogs fell from $17.06 in September to $10.39 in August.

Wool shrank from $0.83 in September to $0.47 in August, and yellow-pine flooring at New York from $157 in September to $92 in August. In cotton yarns the shrinkage was from $0.54 in September to $0.25 in August, while sole leather at Chicago dropped from $0.51 in September to $0.34 in August. The decline in steel billets was from $55.25 in September to $29.60 in August. Copper from $18.06 in September declined to $11.07 in August, and lead declined from $0.081 in September to $0.044 in August. Pig iron tumbled from $48.50 in September to $18.20 in August, and petroleum quoted in September, 1920, at $6.10 averaged for August, 1921, $2.25.

Again Mr. Williams said:

Senator HEFLIN, Senator GLASS would never have made such statements as those which he has made so "pointedly," if he had not been deceived by some one. He "pointedly denied" that there was any deflation, but he is pointedly told in reply, and it is proved by official records, that the "deflation" in "Federal reserve credits" was over $1,400,000,000, or approximately 50 per cent for "the period of appalling drop in prices," following the peak which the Senator tells us correctly was reached in the early summer of 1920. He denies also that there was any "diminution" of Federal reserve currency in the period, but the official figures of the Reserve Board itself show that between the end of May, 1920, and the end of August, 1921, the amount of Federal reserve notes in actual circulation shrank $635,000,000 despite the large amount of Federal reserve notes which were issued during this period, not to enable these reserve banks to make loans or extend credit to those needing it, but in exchange for gold turned into the Federal reserve banks and withdrawn from circulation.

That goes to the root of the whole question as to whether our Federal reserve system has, during the past two years, been handled intelligently, impartially, and faithfully.

In a letter which John Skelton Williams addressed to Senator OVERMAN, under date of December 2, and which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with the unanimous consent of the Senate, I find the following brief paragraph:

Economy and efficiency in the operation of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York are, of course, highly important; but the question of salaries paid, however grossly excessive they may be, or the expenditure of $25,000,000 for a palatial bank building, are small in comparison with other faults and evils to which I have directed public attention in connection with the management of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and the administration of the whole Federal reserve system by the Reserve Board.

When we survey the country and realize the ruin which has come to our agricultural and other interests coincidently with the carrying out of the board policies, it is clear that is not a small matter. A business man declared the other day with terrible earnestness: "I had rather have 10 panics than 1 'deflation.'"

The national banks in New York City were given in proportion to their total loans and discounts a year ago three times as great an amount of reserve bank funds as our 7,699 "country" banks were allowed to get in their hour of need.

It is not a small matter to discover that if our "country" banks had been given by the reserve banks a year ago the same proportion of accommodations that was furnished to New York banks, sometimes in blocks of "forty or fifty million dollars" at a time, as Gov. Harding expresses it, and to use his language again, "instantly," that those "country" banks would have received for the use of the farmers, cattle raisers, industries, and business of the country, a thousand million dollars more than was accorded them. What this meant to the country we now realize.

The official figures tell the tale. They show that the "deflation" in their holdings of "bills discounted and purchased" by the 12 Federal reserve banks between October 22, 1920, when farmers and business men were pleading piteously for help or consideration, to November 16, 1921, was $1,784,000,000, an actual contraction from $3,050,000,000 in October, 1920, to $1,266,000,000 as shown in the official statement two weeks ago.

The peace of the world is of transcendent importance to our own country and to every other country. The value of disarmament, which it is believed will aid in securing universal peace, is of proportionate concern. But the amount of material wealth which this country would save by a reduction of 50 per cent, or even 75 per cent in the cost of its Army and Navy, is small in comparison with the colossal losses which our industrial, agricultural, and commercial interests—in fact, the people of every class, from one end of the country to the other—have sustained, and the suffering they have endured in the past year or 18 months in the debacles of "deflation." These misfortunes and hardships, many of our wisest leaders and best thinkers claim, were accentuated, if not brought about, by the mismanagement or folly of men in charge of a banking and financial system, which, so long as it is able, intelligently, and faithfully administered, should ever be a blessing not only to this country but to the world.

I agree, as do many of you Senators, with that statement of Mr. Williams. Mr. President, what a wonderful help to the farmers of the country and to the merchants and bankers in the agricultural sections would have been that one thousand million dollars. The Federal Reserve Board could have accommodated us with that money and saved hundreds of thousands of people from sore distress and financial disaster.

Mr. Williams, in discussing this matter with me, said:

The lavish waste of seventy-two millions or one hundred millions of money, squandered with riotous recklessness in the construction of gorgeous banking palaces or in the payment of excessive salaries to men either competent or incompetent, is a small matter in comparison with the gigantic losses amounting to thousands of millions of dollars and the sacrifice of human lives for which this debacle of deflation is responsible.

Now, Senators, as to the loss of human lives. I ask your attention to the following press dispatch appearing in the newspapers of August 15, 1921:

SUICIDES IN THE WHOLE COUNTRY.

Here are the figures for the six months of 1921, and they are sufficient to cause unusual anxiety.

Suicides.	First 6 months, 1920.	First 6 months, 1921.
Men.....	1,810	4,527
Women.....	961	1,952
Boys.....	88	214
Girls.....	137	293
Total.....	2,996	7,016

Mr. President, a good many whose names are in this list died because of the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. Quite a number of bankers committed suicide. Many people were driven insane. Thousands of people were driven from their homes, and hundreds of thousands lost all they had.

And yet I am bitterly assailed because I have dared to cry out against a deflation monster, who has demanded and drawn from our people an offering bloody enough for a Moloch.

Speaking to me about the suicide cases, Mr. Williams said:

These figures tell us that for the first six months of last year there was an increase of 4,120 in the number of suicides, nearly two and a half times as many as in the previous year. There is no telling how many of these men, women, and children were driven to desperation from cold and hunger and the collapse and ruin of cherished plans and enterprises for which for many long years they had dedicated their lives and energies; farmers surrendering to their creditors their plow horses, milch cows, and farm implements and becoming with their wives and children wanderers on the face of the earth.

LIABILITIES OF FAILED FIRMS THREE TIMES GREATER THAN PANIC YEAR 1907.

And here are the figures furnished by Dun's Mercantile Agency, which tell us that for the year 1921 there were 19,625 business failures as compared with 6,451 in 1919, an increase of 13,174; more than three times as many business failures in 1921 as in 1919.

And the liabilities of the failed business houses reached the appalling total of $627,401,000, an increase over 1919 of $514,000,000, more than five times as great as the liabilities of failed firms in the year 1919.

Again, Mr. Williams says:

The figures now tell us that the liabilities of the failed business houses in 1921 were more than three times as great as the total liabilities of all failed business houses in the panic year 1907, when total liabilities of failed houses was $197,000,000 against $627,000,000 last year. And the sad thing is that these crushing losses were to a large extent wholly unnecessary and should have been avoided.

And he is right again.

Mr. President, I repeat, a banking system that could finance the World War could certainly have prevented this disastrous situation at home in time of peace. The Federal reserve banking system was equal to the emergency, but the Federal Reserve Board would not let it function.

Mr. Williams in his statement to me said:

It is currently reported that President Harding hesitates to remove from the Federal Reserve Board a man or men responsible for such mismanagement and ruin on the ground that these men—some so-called Democrats and some Republicans—were appointed by his predecessor and not by himself and that he is therefore not responsible for their appointment. But the President is responsible, as you have said, for keeping them in office, now that their unfitness is plain and proven to everyone. The President and the members of his Cabinet have not hesitated in calling for the resignation in various departments of the public service of many faithful and capable men against whom no charges had been preferred but whose places were wanted for political purposes.

Mr. President, if this board was not performing exactly like President Harding wanted it to perform, every intelligent man and woman in the country knows that he would remove it. They know that he would not permit it to stay in power 24 hours. But the fact that he does permit it to stay in power, that he does not ask for the resignation of these men, shows beyond all doubt that the President is pleased with the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board, which rendered his party so much assistance in the campaign of 1920, when it lost Tennessee, Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona to the Democratic Party.

Mr. President, on the first day of his two-day speech on the Federal reserve system Senator GLASS announced with emphasis and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in italics the following statement:

Thus it will be noted that, so far from the truth is the accusation that the Federal Reserve Board "tumbled" the prices of farm products by a cruel policy of deflation, it is shown that during the whole period of falling prices the Federal reserve banks were supplying largely increased credit facilities and issuing a constantly increasing volume of Federal reserve notes.

Mr. Williams, the former Comptroller of the Currency, said in his statement to me:

Such a claim is preposterous. The official records squarely contradict the distinguished Senator's statement and prove that for "the period of falling prices" to which he refers the Federal reserve banks instead of "supplying largely increased credit facilities" and instead of "issuing constantly increasing volume of Federal reserve notes" actually contracted their credits by more than a billion and a quarter dollars and contracted the Federal reserve notes by more than $600,000,000.

Again, he said:

With such facts as these standing in his way, how could Senator GLASS possibly justify himself in making the following astounding statement (p. 1240, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 20, 1922):

It is significant, Mr. President—and I call the attention of my distinguished friend from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the fact—that these increased facilities were applied for and granted at the increased rate of rediscount put into effect by the regional reserve banks and approved by the Federal Reserve Board. This tremendous expansion of Federal reserve credits, aggregating nearly $1,000,000,000 within the 12-month period of falling prices, was not managed except by an alarming encroachment upon the gold reserves of the regional banks, one of them, as I recall, barely escaping the humiliating, if not disastrous, experience of having its gold reserve wiped out of existence; it had to resort to the expedient of largely rediscounting with another Federal reserve bank at the North.

To call such a claim fanfare—

Mr. Williams said, if I may borrow a word used by the Senator from Virginia—

It would be giving it a dignity of which it is not worthy.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia can not escape or justify his statement by antedating the time when the collapse in prices began and figure from January, 1920, for the record shows that even if we assume that the "appalling drop in prices" began in January instead of May or June, 1920, and then compare the amount of credits which the Federal reserve system was making in January, 1920, with the amount of such credits which were outstanding in August, 1921, until which date the "appalling drop in prices" was mostly continuous, we find that the terrific shrinkage in credits even for that extended period amounts to more than $1,250,000,000—more than a billion and a quarter.

A further analysis of the table which I have given you—shows that between the end of January, 1920, and the end of May, 1920, the amount of Federal reserve credits outstanding increased from $2,735,000,000 to $2,938,000,000, an increase for those four months of $203,000,000, and I ask you, Senators, to note that during those four months the prices of nearly all of the leading commodities shown in the table to which I have directed your attention were either stable or showed a slight advance.

Said Mr. Williams—

Mr. President, these facts and figures can not be refuted.

They prove the correctness of my position. I said when they could obtain money the prices of farm products were stabilized and yielded a little profit, but when they commenced withdrawing money that is when the prices went down, and the farmers of the South and West were sacrificed.

But Mr. Williams tells us that in the one month between the end of May, 1920, and the end of June, 1920, "credits" granted by the Federal reserve banks were contracted over $100,000,000 and the downward movement in prices got underway. The farmers, merchants, and bankers of the country know that that is true.

The record of what transpired proves his statement to be correct. I have never yet seen one of his statements disproven. He was, I repeat, Comptroller of the Currency at that time, and he knows all about this thing. He says:

Large amounts of existing loans in the Federal reserve banks were called in, but a limited amount of new loans were granted during crop-moving time, so that in October the aggregate amount of credits outstanding was about 5 per cent more than in May. The money supplied for the movement of the new crop was largely offset by calling in other loans, and this tended to facilitate rather than check the downward movement of prices.

In July, 1920, I, as Comptroller of the Currency, saw the growing demoralization and tried to ease the situation by issuing a statement which showed that the reserve banks at that very time had an unused lending power of $750,000,000, and was quickly criticized by the New York Reserve Bank, through its chairman, and by the Reserve Board for interfering with their cherished "deflation" plans for which the triggers had been carefully set.

He tells what occurred. Listen:

In September and October, 1920, many Senators and Congressmen joined with farm organizations from the cotton section and the wool section and the wheat country, in fact, from all the great producing sections, and besought the Federal Reserve Board to relax the pressure which was being exerted and which was manifesting itself on all sides.

On October 18, 1920, I, as Comptroller of the Currency, in a letter to the Reserve Board, in urging a letting up of the pressure, used the following language:

"The plans and policies which have aided in bringing about deflation in the great staple commodities should be at once taken up for consideration and revised as far as may be necessary to meet present and changed conditions. If this is not done speedily, I am fearful as to the consequences which may ensue."

There he was, Mr. President, telling this same Federal Reserve Board just what its deflation policy was doing and pleading for its abandonment.

He told them in advance what was going to happen; and what he said would happen actually did happen.

Again, he says:

Three days later, October 31, 1920, in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, who was also chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, I said:

"The strain upon the business fabric of the country is, in some respects, unparalleled, and I feel that the time has come for the exercise of such salutary and constructive powers as may be at our command."

"The situation . . . has become more aggravated of late, and unless relief can be found an increase in bank failures, I believe, will be inevitable."

He told the truth; they did increase.

John Skelton Williams favored reviving the War Finance Corporation. He said at that time:

The revival of the War Finance Corporation would provide, in my judgment, a much-needed steadying influence at this time.

There he was, favoring the revival of this mighty agency. It has helped considerably, but the Federal Reserve Board favored putting it out of commission, and they wanted it kept out of commission. That was a part of the program.

Speaking of how the Federal Reserve Board acted when we pleaded for assistance, Mr. Williams said:

But to the pleading Senators, Congressmen, and farm organizations and public officials a majority of the Reserve Board remained obdurate, and the car of Suggernaut rolled gloomily on.

And that is literally true.

From October, 1920, to August, 1921, the deflation, contraction, and pressure by the Federal reserve banks was kept up. I will read to you the figures furnished to me by Mr. Williams, which show the actual contraction or deflation which took place each month in Federal reserve credits from October, 1920, to the end of August, 1921.

The figures represent in each instance the reduction in the amount of Federal reserve credits outstanding at the end of the last week in each month as printed in the Reserve Board's official monthly bulletin:

HEAVY REDUCTIONS MONTH BY MONTH.
The shrinkage from October, 1920, to November, 1920, was.....	$116,569,000
From November to December the contraction was.....	8,267,000
From the end of December to the end of January, 1921, credits were called in of.....	352,062,000
From January to February the reduction was.....	62,161,000
From February to March the shrinkage in Federal reserve credits was.....	263,853,000
From March to April the contraction was.....	175,982,000
From April to May.....	185,127,000
From May to June.....	212,160,000
From June to July.....	121,915,000
And from the end of July to the end of August the contraction was.....	133,781,000 making the aggregate contraction from the end of October, 1920, to the end of August, 1921, $1,572,000,000, and from the end of May, 1920, to the end of August, 1921, the total shrinkage was $1,411,000,000.

And yet the Senator from Virginia has declared "that during the whole period of falling prices the Federal reserve banks were supplying largely increased credit facilities and issuing a constantly increasing volume of Federal reserve notes."

Is there anyone in the Senate who does not believe that the distinguished Senator from Virginia has been grossly misled by some one? I can not believe that he would have made such a mistake advisedly.

The Senator read from his prepared speech a number of figures purporting to show that between January, 1920, and January, 1921, there was a material increase in loans made on "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper by certain reserve banks, but he fails to show that the maximum amount of "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper ever held by all of the 12 reserve banks at any time never amounted to as much as one-tenth of the total credits which the Federal reserve banks were extending for all purposes in October, 1920, although from 40 to 50 per cent of the entire population are engaged in agricultural or allied pursuits.

As I said before, quoting Mr. Williams, the Senator from Virginia is silent about the fact—which is shown by the official records and with which he is doubtless conversant—that in November, 1920, over $250,000,000 had been dishd out to two banking institutions in New York City, both conspicuous for their speculative activities, while about that same time the total loans on "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper held by six Federal reserve banks covering 18 States amounted to only $15,642,000.

The Senator from Virginia inserted in his speech a statement purporting to show the loans of Federal reserve banks on "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper for the year 1920 by months.

I ask the privilege of inserting a table furnished to me by Mr. Williams, which has been prepared from the official figures contained in a letter addressed to the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry by John Skelton Williams, which gives a comparison between the increase in "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper which took place in the several reserve districts between May or June, 1920, and May or June, 1921, as compared with the shrinkage which took place in the loans secured by Liberty and other United States bonds in the various reserve districts between May or June, 1920, and May or June, 1921.

(The periods for which the above figures are given are mostly about the 1st of June in each year; sometimes a few days before and sometimes a few days later, being the report for the week end. In a few instances the figures are those for about the middle of the last week in the months stated.)

Mr. HEFLIN. The figures show that there was a general reduction all down the line.

The above table shows that although there was an increase in the aggregate amount of agricultural and live-stock paper held by all 12 Federal reserve banks between May or June, 1920, and May or June, 1921, of about $84,000,000, yet the shrinkage or contraction in loans secured by Liberty and other United States bonds for substantially the same periods amounted to more than $760,000,000. In other words, the contraction in loans on Liberty and other United States bonds was more than nine times as great as the increase in "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper held. The hardship of this contraction is better realized when we consider that the loans called in on Liberty bonds were very largely held by the "country banks."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, right there I will state for the information of the Senator that there was a citizen of Georgia who took $10,000 in Liberty bonds to Atlanta not long ago in the hope of borrowing money on them. He could not borrow one dollar. At that very time, however, such bonds were being bought in New York as rapidly as they could be put upon the market. I suggest to the Senator that the very policy which forced the remote banks to refuse to lend on Liberty bonds but which allowed money to be loaned for their purchase in New York naturally tended to depreciate their value in the agricultural States and force them to sale in New York.

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely. Mr. President, it reminds me of the fable of the donkey and the lion. The lion said to the donkey, "If you will put on a lion's skin and run through the forest and bray as you can bray and stare the animals, I will stand here at the gate and slay them as they come out." When the donkey came back, the lion had slain so many animals that the donkey had driven out that it even made the donkey sick to look upon the gruesome sight. Why, Mr. President, I repeat, the Federal reserve sent $250,000,000 to New York in November, 1920, when $15,642,000 was all that we could get at that time for 18 agricultural States. The Federal Reserve Board's deflation policy was the donkey that drove our Liberty bonds upon the market while bond sharks were buying them at $85 on the hundred. That deflation policy was driving those who owned bonds in the South out at the gate and the Wall Street wolves slew them as they came. That is what happened. They literally played into the hands of the Wall Street wolves; and now what has happened? They have these bonds. My heart goes out to the outraged and unfortunate people of the South and West who were pillaged and plundered in that fashion. When their country was in peril, they bought bonds when it was a difficult matter to make the arrangements. They stinted themselves; they made sacrifices to do that in order to help their country, and when the war was over the discount rate was raised 3 per cent higher than the interest rate of the bonds that they had bought, and, as I said before, they were put in the attitude of having to borrow money at 7 per cent to make payments on paper bearing 4½ per cent. John Skelton Williams shows in commenting on the speech of the Senator from Virginia—and I am using mainly facts given me by him in answering many of the statements made by the Senator from Virginia—

Mr. GLASS. Nobody could mistake that fact.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad the Senator is at last coming to appreciate something that John Skelton Williams has written and said, because the Senator told me that he had never read any speech he had made or anything he had written upon this subject, and I am going to make him hear some of it to-day.

Mr. GLASS. No; I was just admitting that John Skelton Williams wrote the Senator's speech for him; that is all.

Mr. HEFLIN. He furnished me facts and figures that I could get from no other reliable source. I said that at the beginning, but it does not make any difference who wrote out these facts or furnished them. They fairly bristle with the truth and they are literally cutting the entrails out of the speech of the Senator from Virginia.

SENATOR GLASS MAGNIFIES ACTUAL FIGURES SIXFOLD.

The Senator from Virginia said—

That even after commodity prices began to topple the Federal reserve banks made a desperate effort to impede the velocity of the fall. From January 1, 1920, to January 1, 1921, these reserve banks expanded loans to member banks in an amount approaching $1,000,000,000. Yet, Mr. President, in the very face of this indisputable evidence, Senators berate the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks with the utterly false charge of ordering and executing a policy of "murderous deflation." Such talk is wicked mummery.

Now, let us see whose talk is shown to be pitiful nonsense and wicked mummery. In square contradiction to this part of the Senator's speech, says Mr. Williams, the official records show that on January 1, 1920, the total amount of all loans, discounts, and bought paper held by all 12 reserve banks amounted to $2,805,818,000. On January 1, 1921, or December 30, 1920, the amount of such accommodations aggregated $2,974,836,000. Instead of the reserve banks "expanding" their loans to member banks in an amount approaching "one thousand millions" for the particular period selected by the Senator from Virginia the total amount of expanded loans was $169,018,000. That lacks a heap of being a billion, Mr. President. In other words, the Senator magnifies by sixfold the actual figures. He says that the increase was $830,982,000 more than it was. May I ask again whose talk is "wicked mummery"?

During the first six or eight months of last year, 1921, commodity prices continued to "topple," as the Senator from Virginia expresses it; but during those months of vanishing values the reserve banks kept up their pressure. I will now give you the figures which show the total amount of "loans, discounts, and bought paper" held by all 12 regional reserve banks, as officially reported January 25, 1922. The figures are $932,882,000.

This is an actual shrinkage, contraction, or deflation, whatever you have a mind to call it, of $1,872,936,000. While the prices of commodities were still fading away between January 1, 1921, and, say, September 21 last, the official reports show that the actual contraction of credits by the 12 Federal reserve banks for that period was $1,554,085,000, and Mr. Williams is right again. I want anybody who can to tackle his figures and disprove his statements.

Again, he said:

The appalling drop in prices being coincident with the appalling contraction and deflation in reserve-bank loans.

Although the cold, unvarnished facts also tell us that between October, 1920, and August, 1921, the reserve system cut its credits over 50 per cent, actually contracting its credits to the extent of over $1,570,000,000, the Senator from Virginia says, to quote his language again:

Why, Mr. President, I am amazed at the broad liberality of this regional reserve banking system in that distressing time. Had I any criticism to make of its administration it would be that it too far transgressed the requirements of safe banking.

Why, Mr. President, the Senator is excusing and defending that deadly deflation policy. He says, in effect, that if he had any criticism to offer at all it would be because the board went too far in aiding the farmers of the South and the farmers of the West, making up a population of practically sixty millions of people.

I have been condemning the reprehensible conduct of this board. I have condemned its deflation policy. I have shown, time and again upon this floor, that it played into the hands of Wall Street; that Wall Street got all the money it wanted and that the South and West did not get the money they needed; but the Senator from Virginia says, "If I had any criticism to make, it would be that they were too liberal."

Mr. President, were such colossal blunders as I have pointed out to you ever made before by any Senator of this honorable body?

Let us now turn for a while to discuss the mad extravagance with which the reserve banks have been administered.

The distinguished Senator from Virginia declared with much fervor:

When the junior Senator from Alabama assumes that the contemplated expenditure of a certain sum of money for a regional reserve bank building in the North operates to restrict banking credits of cotton planters in the South he is talking pitiful nonsense. What have agricultural credits in the South got to do directly or indirectly with a bank building in New York or Chicago or Cleveland or San Francisco?

Mr. President, upon this point Mr. Williams says, "I am truly surprised at the view expressed by the Senator from Virginia." This same New York bank, which has planned the investment of over $25,000,000 in a gorgeous banking temple in the Wall Street district of New York, a few hundred feet from Wall Street, has no moral right to squander such a sum in luxury and extravagance. The supervising authorities show a wanton waste and amazing imprudence and recklessness in authorizing such an expenditure, and by a bank which only a few months ago—listen, Senators—had its resources so completely tied up, largely in advances to speculative institutions, that it found it necessary to borrow money from time to time from seven or more of the other reserve banks in the East, West, North, and South; and, mark you, in order to relieve and help the New York Reserve Bank the Federal Reserve Board as late as January, 1920, I believe, passed a resolution authorizing the suspension of that bank's reserve requirements; and that, Senators, is the bank which, forgetful of the past and heedless of the future, has planned to invest in gorgeous banking quarters, for land and building, scarcely 12 months after the board had suspended the reserve requirements for its relief, the huge sum of $25,646,409.

Was it prudent or justifiable for the New York Reserve Bank, which just four months before had loaned so heavily, largely to big speculative borrowers, that it found it necessary to borrow $60,000,000 and 12 months before was borrowing about $100,000,000 from other reserve banks, to authorize the locking up in this banking temple of over $25,000,000, which is several times as much as was paid for the Capitol of the Nation. As I said before, will any sane Senator except my good friend from Virginia defend such amazing imprudence and such riotous waste?

Senator GLASS's speech was so saturated with glaring inaccuracies—

Says John Skelton Williams—and grave mistakes, some of them obvious—

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator has not left John Skelton Williams for the last hour and 10 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I remind the Senator again that I am fortified with facts furnished to me by the former Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams, himself a distinguished Virginian, who knows and will substantiate the truthfulness of every statement that he makes about this deadly deflation.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia: I will insert there a fact which may be illuminating to the country in regard to the expense of buildings. The entire expense of the Houses of Parliament, which lodge the House of Lords and the House of Commons, was $2,000,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. Why, Mr. President, the more you go into this thing the more it smacks of rottenness and of graft. That is why they are mad with me up there—because I have been fighting this thing and probably will succeed in having it stopped. It ought to be stopped. Why, they built a municipal building in the city of Philadelphia a few years ago that cost $25,000,000, and they said it was surrounded with graft and scandal; and here is this banking concern in New York putting up a building that will cost a little over $25,000,000, and am I not justified in suggesting that there is graft connected with it? Why, they paid more for the lot, I repeat, than the 26 Corn Exchange Banks paid for all their buildings and land. Let me see if I have not that statement here. Here it is. The Corn Exchange Bank, with 26 banking houses, all located in New York City, paid for its building and land $4,012,685.66.

This Federal reserve bank in New York paid, so it says, a little more than $4,000,000 for the lot. I wonder if any of the directors of the Federal reserve bank were interested in that real estate deal? I wonder if any of them got any rake-off out of that $1,100,000 they paid to an architect, one man, in New York? Senators, does not that suggest graft? If that bunch would carry on the murderous deflation policy which it has carried on, and would lend $5,000,000 through a member bank, three millions of which was on a dummy note in campaign times, to a director, would you think it would frown and step away from a little matter of graft?

There is, I repeat, the Corn Exchange proposition, a bank with 26 banking buildings, which it owns, which cost a little over $4,000,000. The Senator from Virginia can not deny that this Federal reserve bank lot itself cost $4,000,000—the real estate alone.

Mr. President, do you wonder that they hate and criticize me? If I were carrying on a crooked game, I suppose I would object to anybody getting after me. That is quite natural.

Senator GLASS's speech was so saturated with glaring inaccuracies and grave mistakes, many of them obvious, that I am not willing to take up the time of the Senate in exposing them all, but I will now ask your attention to the following. Shortly after giving a table and other figures as to "agricultural" and "live stock" paper held by the reserve banks for each month of the calendar year 1920, on page 1241 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senator says:

These figures prove beyond all controversy that instead of deflating credits and currency the Federal reserve banks during the period of falling prices enormously expanded bank credits and increased the volume of circulating notes. This is especially true with respect to credits in the agricultural sections of the United States, for it appears from the official figures that while agricultural credits were expanding commercial credits were contracting.

Senators, that is the most ridiculous statement any Senator ever put into public print, that while they were expanding credits and currency to the farmers of the United States commercial expansion was practically dead. What do you call this speculating business in New York? You have to put it under the head of commercial expansion or acknowledge that it was for speculative purposes.

The official figures show that it was during the calendar year 1920 that the loans on "agricultural" and "cattle paper" reached their maximum. They increased from $56,905,000 in January, 1920, to $266,940,000 in December of the same year.

Think of that, Mr. President, the agriculture and cattle industry of the United States increased from $56,000,000 to $266,000,000, when they were loaning $250,000,000 at one time to two banks which were speculating in Wall Street, just $16,000,000 less than they were lending to all the cattle and agricultural industries of the United States. Was there ever such an indictment made against a speech or against a policy? I would not have known that, but for my friend John Skelton Williams. The position that he held enabled him to know it.

During 1921 "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper fluctuated within narrow limits, and starting with $249,949,000 in January, 1921, declined in October last to $199,027,000.

The following Table No. 1, copied from Senator GLASS's speech—page 1240, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 20, 1922—shows definitely the amount of "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper outstanding each month for the calendar year 1920; and alongside of it is another Table No. 2 of figures drawn from the Federal Reserve Bulletin, which shows whether it is true that "while agricultural credits were expanding commercial credits were contracting," as asserted by the Senator. An "expansion" of agricultural and live-stock credits took place in 1920. In 1921 there was more contraction in that class of paper than expansion. The second table shows the amount of so-called "commercial paper, n. e. s.," outstanding each month, and does not include loans secured on war obligations, many of which were held by the "country" banks, and which class of loans shrank heavily during 1920; nor does it include "acceptances" or "bought paper."

Total increase in "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper January to December, 1920..... $190,035,000
Total increase in "Commercial paper, n. e. s." January to December, 1920..... 686,000,000

Which certainly indicates that no preference was given to "agricultural" and "live-stock" paper in the period in which it showed the greatest increase, as compared with "commercial credits," despite the declaration of the Virginia Senator that "while agricultural credits were expanding commercial credits were contracting," even though it may be true, as the Senator added, that from some date, not given us, to "last summer" there was a large contraction in "bankers' acceptances." During this same period there was a heavy contraction in loans secured by war obligations, of which so many were held by "country" banks.

In a letter to a Member of this body, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a few weeks ago, John Skelton Williams told how the money fed out by the New York Reserve Bank is sometimes used. I quote:

* * * The official records will show, for example, that the banks borrowing the most heavily from the Federal reserve bank were sometimes loaning their funds largely for use * * *

In loans to directors of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York—to one director over $5,000,000 on highly speculative securities; to another for the purpose of relending on Wall Street loans at fancy rates of interest. * * *

Who was the director of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York who was borrowing so heavily from a debtor bank to which the New York Reserve Bank was lending at that time about $75,000,000 or $100,000,000? There are nine directors in the New York Reserve Bank, and as Mark Antony said of the conspirators who murdered Caesar:

They are all wise and honorable men and will no doubt with reason answer you.

Is it possible that that thrifty director could have been the distinguished gentleman who acted as treasurer for the collection of Republican campaign funds in New York during the last presidential election, although at the time of which I speak he was one of those nine trustees having in custody the funds of the great reserve bank at New York? Another director of the Federal reserve bank in a letter under date of October 19, 1921, which was published in the press, had assured Mr. Williams that—the record of the directorate of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York will be found to be very exceptional in the fact that its entire membership, without reference to the sources of their election, have never failed to consider their action from the point of view that public office is a public trust.

It looks as if this director, who was accumulating $5,000,000, and who was the treasurer of the Republican campaign committee, thought that his position was a private snap, not a public trust, at that time.

That New York reserve bank director also added in his letter that those directors—all realized the peculiar charge upon them of considering the welfare of the public in the conduct of the bank.

It is one of these same men who, Mr. Williams tells us, borrowed over $5,000,000, of which over $3,000,000 was on a dummy loan, from one of the banks to which the New York reserve bank was extending huge accommodations; that another one of those directors in 1920 was borrowing money from a member bank which was being accommodated by the reserve bank at 6 per cent and was lending that money in Wall Street at fancy rates of interest. But, of course, those directors are, as I have said, all "wise and honorable men."

Among the other uses to which banks were applying the funds advanced by the New York reserve bank were, to continue the quotation from Mr. Williams's letter to the Senator from North Carolina:

(1) In speculative deals and operations, in sugar and sugar stocks, in oil and oil stocks, and other speculations in commodities and industrial stocks.

(2) In promoting the speculations of the executive officers of the borrowing banks, who borrowed heavily, both directly and indirectly, from their own banks and from other member banks.

(3) Funds were also loaned most generously by banks borrowing heavily from the reserve bank for operations in "copra" and coconut oil in the Philippines or the Straits Settlements and other remote regions, when farmers at home and dealers in cotton and cottonseed oil and raisers of wheat and corn were being ruined for lack of funds.

Think of that, Senators. This reserve board could vote to excuse the reserve of gold for the bank in New York in order that it might not be embarrassed, in order that it might have funds sufficient to satisfy its desires. It could approve a policy which permitted loans to men to speculate in stuff in the Philippine Islands while destruction reigned all over the South and the West under that deadly deflation policy. My good friend from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] reminds me of the fact that they loaned $500,000 to a fishery off Alaska, and when John Skelton Williams asked them what their security was, they said, "Fish." He said, "Where are the fish?" They answered, "We haven't caught them yet."

That has not been disputed. They can not disprove anything that John Skelton Williams says. The speculation in copra in the Philippine Islands and the lending of money on fish, uncaught in the ocean, was all right, but you can not get money to keep cotton off the market until he who produces it can get the cost of production and enable him to provide for those whom God has given him to love, cherish, and support with the strength of his arm and the power of his brain.

But what are you going to do when the farmer who makes 6 bales of cotton is told to get up earlier in the morning and work later at night and be more industrious, and produces 10 bales, and when he produces them gets less for them than he used to get for 6? When a man applies himself as a student he grows in knowledge, his brain power develops more and more as the years come and go, but here is the farmer putting forth more effort, working longer hours, putting forth more energy, and producing more, but when he comes into the market place, instead of being rewarded, he is clubbed and robbed. That is what you did to him.

Mr. President, the records show that a bank to which the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was loaning at one time about $100,000,000 was furnishing funds with which to engineer a notorious "corner" on the New York Stock Exchange, in which corner the president and two vice presidents of the bank which was enjoying these huge accommodations from the New York reserve bank were largely interested financially.

Such evils as these—

Said Mr. Williams—

can best be cured or their recurrence prevented by the sunlight of publicity rather than by the Lethean ointment of secrecy and oblivion.

And I heartily agree with him.

As I said, for months they were sending money over there to be used in gambling deals for speculative purposes, and John Skelton Williams confirms what I have said.

Such evils as these, said Mr. Williams, can best be cured or their recurrence prevented by the sunlight of publicity rather than by keeping the thing covered up.

The hearings before the Agricultural Joint Commission show that in January, 1920, the Comptroller of the Currency had become alarmed at the recklessness with which the funds of the reserve system were being used by certain speculative institutions in New York City. In a letter addressed February 19, 1921, to the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and printed in those hearings, among other things, he said very plainly:

In the letter which I wrote you on January 28, 1920, more than a year ago, I called your attention to the fact that the funds of the reserve bank of New York were being largely used, or misused, in lending enormous sums to a certain banking institution in New York City which had become conspicuous for its speculative operations and which was already being much criticized by conservative bankers. I pointed out to you that the New York reserve bank was, at that time, lending an amount nearly six times its own capital—that is to say, six times the capital of the reserve bank of New York to that one member institution—and I showed you that the money which the New York reserve bank had loaned to that one borrower on December 31, 1919, amounted to nearly twice as much as the aggregate amount of loans and discounts which the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas was lending at that time to all of its member banks in that great district, embracing the entire State of Texas and parts of the States of Louisiana, Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona.

It appears that in order to make these huge loans to those institutions the New York Federal Reserve Bank had found it desirable to rediscount or borrow, about the time of my letter to you of January 28, 1920, over $118,000,000 from seven other Federal reserve banks, including, among others, the reserve banks of Dallas, Chicago, and Atlanta, whose resources available for their own member banks were to that extent lessened.

I said to you in my letter of January 28, 1920, to which I have referred: "This is a concentration of the funds of the system with one debtor bank conspicuous for its speculative operations and promotions which, in my judgment, is not only not justified, but distinctly dangerous, and I feel it my duty to register my strong dissent from a continuance of such conditions as these, by writing you as I am doing, as an ex-officio member of the board."

I also said in that same letter: "With such facts before us . . . as I have here undertaken to bring to your attention our responsibility becomes serious and very real," and I asked you to bring the matter to the attention of the board.

I have additional reasons now for believing that the funds advanced during the past year by the reserve bank of New York to that particular institution and also to other banks in that district have been used to a wholly unjustifiable extent for the promotion of stock deals and syndicate operations upon which extortionate interest and commissions have been exacted and in many of which syndicate deals and operations the officers of this heavy debtor institution have been directly and indirectly interested.

The Federal Reserve Board and the reserve bank of New York are empowered by law to make examinations of all member banks and I have several times urged upon you the desirability of having such an examination made of this leading debtor of the Federal reserve system, either by the examiners of the board or by the examiners of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, in order that the New York Reserve Bank, at least, might have an intelligent understanding of the condition and operations of that institution and of the purposes for which the huge sums of money which it was lending to that member bank were being used. The importance of having such data is too obvious for discussion here.

Thus far, however, as far as I am informed, no such examination has ever been undertaken by the board or the New York Reserve Bank, although I learn, indirectly, that one or two of the board's examiners or the reserve bank's examiners have accompanied the State examiners on certain occasions in their examinations.

Meanwhile, I hear indirect reports which indicate that the member institution above referred to during the past year has been making large loans on time for speculative or other ventures for which it has charged, in certain instances, as high as 50 per cent per annum interest for money at the same time it was obtaining funds from the reserve bank at 5½ to 7 per cent per annum. You can ascertain whether these reports are correct or whether they are exaggerated.

A New York man, usually well-informed, recently referred to an instance where it was reported the head of a large manufacturing concern which employed thousands of men, found himself in need during the past year of $5,000,000, for which he offered abundant collateral; but upon applying to the New York banks was forced, in order to get funds, to pay cash commissions of about $1,000,000, in addition to 6 per cent per annum interest for the loan, which was repaid in less than six months, the money being obtained, I understand, largely from member banks which were borrowing from the reserve system at 6 per cent. I do not think such rapacity should be tolerated.

I again repeat the recommendations which I have made on several previous occasions that the examiners of the board or the bank of — be authorized and directed to make such an examination of the affairs of a certain leading debtor of the reserve bank of — as may be necessary for a proper understanding of its methods and practices and operations, and also to develop to what extent the funds for this institution are being used or have been used for the promotion of the speculative undertakings and syndicate operations of its own officers and directors and of the officers of other member banks which are also borrowing heavily from the reserve bank of —.

The manner in which certain New York banking institutions have borrowed enormous sums from the Federal reserve bank of New York at rates of from 5 to 7 per cent and have taken advantage of the necessities of needy borrowers in trying times by accommodating them with time money at rates, in some instances as high as 50 per cent per annum, and in at least one instance about 200 per cent per annum, is, in my opinion, uneconomic, unconscionable, and barbarous, and I am not willing, as far as I am concerned, to have such operations pass unnoticed or without protest.

Our reserve board will not hereafter be able to escape heavy public censure on the excuse that it was not advised of the details of such transactions. Such examinations as I urged the board to undertake more than a year ago would, I believe, have brought to light methods and practices calling for drastic action and remedy, and in my judgment it would have been the duty of the board if it had possessed a knowledge of the facts which it can now obtain if it desires them, to have refrained from granting enormous loans to institutions continuing or proposing to continue such operations as some of those to which our attention has more than once been directed.

As I have pointed out on other occasions, the records of this office show that the artificially fixed money rates in New York City have had the effect of drawing to New York City from all parts of the country many hundreds of millions of dollars which, from the standpoint of the public welfare, could be better employed if they had been permitted to remain in their own respective communities to be loaned there for legitimate business, and within the legal rates of interest permissible in the several States.

The reports of this office show that on December 29, 1920, the national banks alone in New York City held for account of correspondent banks in all parts of the country an aggregate of approximately $800,000,000, while the total amount of money which all the national banks in New York City were lending to their correspondent banks in all parts of the country, directly and indirectly, amounted to less than $280,000,000.

Official records also show that in addition to the deposit balances carried in New York national banks for outside banks the local New York banks were lending in Wall Street for outside customers and correspondents hundreds of millions of dollars drawn thither from all parts of the country to take advantage of the high interest rates maintained there partly, it has been alleged, for the express purpose of enticing money from other sections. My annual report for 1920 (p. 144) shows that the loans made by New York City national banks for account of all correspondent banks on May 4, 1920, amounted to more than $600,000,000.

The official reports indicate that the total amount of money which the national banks in New York City have to the credit of their correspondent banks in all parts of the country plus the funds which the New York national banks have loaned in Wall Street for account of their correspondent banks in all sections of the country exceeds in the aggregate the total amount of money advanced to all member banks either on bills payable or on rediscounts by all of the Federal reserve banks, excepting only the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, but including the 11 reserve banks of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Richmond, Atlanta, Dallas, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, and San Francisco, with more than 8,800 member banks. These figures impress me as being significant and worthy of the study of the board.

I understand that the records also show that very recently four banking institutions in New York City were found to be borrowing from the New York reserve bank about three times as much money as all the national banks of the country, more than 7,500, had ever borrowed at any one time on their bills payable or on rediscounts prior to the inauguration of the Federal reserve system.

I wish to call attention here, before it escapes my mind, to another part of the speech of the Senator from Virginia. He reminded us that during the pinch in 1920—I believe it was—the Federal reserve banks of the North loaned money to help the South, but he forgot to tell the Senate that prior to that time, in 1919, when the South was prosperous, when cotton was bringing a good price, and when we did not need money to help us hold it off the market because the price was a profitable one, that the Bank of Atlanta and the Bank of Dallas and the Bank of St. Louis and the Bank of Richmond loaned to the Philadelphia and Boston banks, I believe, in the neighborhood of seventy-five or eighty million dollars.

I was glad the Senator reminded us that the northern banks had helped the South, showing how liberal they were in coming to our rescue. Mr. President, that is the purpose of the system, for one reserve bank to aid another. If one bank gets down, it is the duty of the other 11 banks to go to its rescue. The system was intended to meet every emergency in business in America, and if it can not do it it is a failure. It can do it. It used to do it. I do not believe that the Government, with its great resources, with its genius, is impotent to establish a banking system that will meet every need of all the people all the time. Do not tell me that we have to have a panic every 5 or 10 years.

RESERVE BOARD NEEDS MEN WHO WILL NOT TRUCKLE TO WALL STREET.

I do not know what the theorizing theorists may think of this; but, Senators, the day is coming, and it is not far distant, when the American people are going to demand that a board sit at the head of this system that can not be influenced, that can not be made to truckle and crawl before the powers of Wall Street. The fact that the board is performing exactly like Wall Street wants it to perform is well known. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who opposed the Federal reserve system, came to the rescue of the Senator from Virginia the other day in defending this deflation policy.

Congressman Platt, of New York, who fought the bill in the House, has become one of those who administer the law that he tried to kill when it was being born, and Mr. Platt, a Republican, seems to have converted Gov. Harding to his way of thinking. A newspaper in the Capital of the Nation charged him editorially with having supported the Republican ticket in 1920, and he has never denied it. That little evasive letter he wrote to the Senator from Virginia was read while he was sitting up in the gallery. I do not know by what arrangement they fixed that up to let him know when the Senator from Virginia was going to speak. Mr. Platt was also in the gallery, the Gold Dust Twins, both sitting up there smiling down on the Senator, the gladiator from Virginia, as he defended the most murderous deflation policy ever devised by men.

Gov. Harding sat up there with that cold, icy grin upon his face, looking down with approval upon the Senator from Virginia, and as soon as the Senator from Virginia got through and I rose and said, "Mr. President," he absented himself in a hurry. He knew he was going to hear some very plain talk. I condemn the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board, but I praise the Federal reserve banking system. I did not have as much to do with preparing it as my good friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and my friend from Virginia. The Senator from Virginia did have a good deal to do with it. They say that he drafted the first measure in the House, and when they got it over here they perfected it. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] said that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is really the father of the Federal reserve system. If my friend from Virginia will write a history of this legislation I will wager the authorship of it will be fixed according to his liking.

I told my friend from Virginia yesterday that I had praised the system and had given him credit a number of times for writing it, but I was reminded of my experience with old man Morris. Old man Morris had written a grammar, and when I was a little fellow one day he appeared in the community and I looked at him with astonishment. The teacher said: "He is the author of the grammar that you are studying." I got the little grammar and went over to him and said: "Prof. Morris, you wrote this book?" "Yes." "I want you to tell me something about it." He said: "You have been studying it. You know more about it than I do. It has been so long since I wrote it; it has all passed out of my mind." I told that to my friend from Virginia yesterday. It has been a long time since the Federal reserve system was put into effect, and he said he had not read anything John Skelton Williams has written or spoken on the subject, so he is just about out of information with reference to it. He knows less about its operation than those of us know who have been watching it and studying it.

Mr. President, another word about the New York bank. The comptroller urged that an independent examination be made of the New York institution which was then borrowing so recklessly from the reserve bank, and advised that that debtor institution be required to adopt more conservative policies, but for some reason or other, best known to themselves, the comptroller's colleagues on the board—Gov. Harding and the others—refused to make the examination urged by him. Whether it was because they were afraid of offending the potential magnates and speculators who were running the member bank or for some other reason, I know not. But I do know that the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve Bank of New York continued to dish out money to that institution in blocks of tens of millions of dollars at a time, and, as Gov. Harding expressed it in his testimony before the Agricultural Commission, "instantly," and that during the past year the bankers of New York City were called together suddenly to avert a grave financial catastrophe.

That banking institution of whose methods and policies Mr. Williams had warned the Reserve Board two years ago is understood to have been required to charge off anywhere from twenty-five to fifty million dollars of losses. A decent and conservative management and proper supervision and action by the Reserve Board and reserve bank—both of which had been duly warned and put on notice by the comptroller's office—might have averted the crisis and the contingent losses.

As an illustration of the gross inequality and injustice in the distribution of the funds of the Federal reserve system it has heretofore been pointed out and proven from official documents that on September, 1920, the national banks in the three big cities of New York, Chicago, and St. Louis were borrowing, mainly from the Federal reserve banks, about two and a half times as much money, in proportion to their total loans and discounts, as the "country" national banks—that is to say, the national banks outside of the central reserve and reserve cities—were borrowing at that same time. The national banks in the three big cities were borrowing about 24 per cent of all their loans while the "country" national banks were receiving accommodations for about 10 per cent of their total loans. It is well known that the so-called "country" national banks embrace all of the national banks outside of some 60 or 65 reserve and central reserve cities, and they include about 7,600 national banks, mostly smaller banks, and do not include the four or five hundred larger national banks in the 60 or 65 reserve and central reserve cities.

The Senator from Virginia, either through a confusion of thought or because of misrepresentations made to him by his advisers, unfairly and incorrectly states that the evident purpose in making a comparison between "country" banks and banks in the big cities was to produce the wrong impression that the "country" banks necessarily engage in financing "agricultural products."

The fact is that the great bulk of the agricultural products are financed by the so-called "country" banks, although it never has been charged that the "country" banks devoted their resources exclusively to the financing of country products. They also, of course, deal with the merchants and industries in their respective communities. Yet the Senator from Virginia would have us charge to the account of agriculture every dollar used in the agricultural sections. Even, however, if that be done, the amount falls by hundreds of millions of dollars behind the amount supplied to other sections and industries. This point is not important, but it shows the eagerness with which the defenders of the Reserve Board grasp at trifles, magnify them, and misinterpret them to suit themselves. It is also interesting to note that as late as the autumn of 1920 the national banks in New York City were receiving in proportion to their total loans and discounts three times as great an amount of accommodations from the Federal reserve system as was accorded to the "country" national banks at the same time.

There is a further statement by the Senator from Virginia in this connection which should be noticed. He said:

Had they borrowed greater sums from their Federal reserve banks there is no assurance, indeed it is incredible to believe, that such funds would have been devoted to the use of agriculture.

That is a pure assumption on his part. It is a fact that the customers of the "country" banks were beseeching the reserve banks to extend them credit and further aid; and it is also a fact that the member banks were unable to give this aid because their reserve banks refused them the accommodations and demanded that they should pay or curtail the loans they already had rather than obtain others. Letters from all parts of the country will prove this.

Do you get that, Senators? Why did not the member banks respond? Because the reserve banks refused them the accommodations necessary.

The Senator further says in this connection:

Senators who use this insinuating argument fail to state that because of their larger reserve requirements member banks in these great central reserve cities are obliged to borrow about twice as much to keep up their 13 per cent reserve as a country bank has to borrow to keep up its less than 7 per cent reserve.

The Senator's argument is, itself, sophistical and delusive, and I think we can guess who put such an argument "over" on him. It is true that the banks in the central reserve cities are required to keep a reserve of 13 per cent on demand deposits, and it is also true that in the "country" banks a reserve of only 7 per cent is required; but it is wholly misleading to say that a bank in a central reserve city has to borrow "about twice as much to keep up their reserve as a country bank has to borrow to keep up its reserve." That argument is untrue and disingenuous.

To illustrate: Let us compare two banks—one in a central reserve city and one a "country" bank, each with $200,000 capital and $200,000 surplus, and each with a million dollars of deposits. These two banks desire to increase their accommodations to their customers and to bring the total amount of their loans and discounts up to $2,200,000 each. The central reserve city bank has available funds as follows:

Capital	-----	$200,000
Surplus	-----	200,000
			$400,000
87 per cent of its deposits available for loans (13 per cent being kept as reserve)	-----		870,000
The amount to be borrowed	-----		930,000
Total loans as increased	-----		2,200,000

Now, listen to the figures as to the country bank:

The country bank has a capital of	-----	$200,000
Surplus	-----	200,000
			$400,000
93 per cent of deposits available for loans (7 per cent being kept as reserve)	-----		930,000
Amount to be borrowed	-----		870,000
Total loans as increased	-----		2,200,000

Therefore, in order to maintain its reserve and loan to its customers to the amount needed, an aggregate of $2,200,000, a central reserve city bank only has to borrow less than 7 per cent more than the "country" bank has to borrow—$60,000 being less than 7 per cent of $930,000, borrowed by the central reserve city bank—and not about "twice as much," as the Senator charges. The fact is that some central reserve city banks do not find it necessary to borrow anything in order to maintain their reserve; some of them borrow 1 per cent or 2 per cent more, and others varying amounts.

But the idea which the Senator from Virginia conveys—that as a general proposition a bank in a central reserve city is obliged to borrow "about twice as much" to keep up its reserve of 13 per cent as a country bank has to borrow to keep up its reserve of 7 per cent—is a fiction.

That is the statement of John Skelton Williams, and it can not be denied.

And, again, he says it is to be regretted that he—speaking of Senator GLASS—has permitted himself to be misled by any such specious arguments, imposed upon him by untrustworthy informants.

I now wish to commend the Senator from Virginia for one expression which he used. He said:

I think had I been a member of the Federal Reserve Board, except in the direst necessity, I would not have agreed to expend one dollar in building operations at this time, because of the enormous profiteering of the building trades, both by the people who supply material and those who furnish labor. Investigations of the Lockwood committee in New York show appalling graft. They indicate a state of affairs which ought to land in jail many persons who now are going at large.

And yet when I talk about graft in connection with the $25,000,000 transaction, it is said that I am reflecting upon honorable men.

And then, in response to a question from Senator NORRIS as to whether the Senator from Virginia was in favor of permitting a salary of $50,000 a year to be paid by a reserve bank, the Senator from Virginia replied:

I will say to the Senator that, in this particular time of stress, I would think it bad policy to pay the president of even so great an institution as the Federal Reserve Bank of New York as much as $50,000. Furthermore, when it was first suggested to me, while I was chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the other branch of Congress, to fix the salary at that figure, I protested that the time was inopportune to pay a salary that large. I thought it should be deferred; I believed the bank would incur the very sort of criticism it has incurred.

Then, why did the Senator criticize me for doing the thing that he says that he thought would be done? Why should the Senator from Virginia fall out with me when he said in the Senate it would be criticized? I was the first man to bring it to the attention of the Senate and of the country. After John Skelton Williams first broke the news to the public I brought it to this floor and started a resolution of investigation on its way, which resulted in a resolution offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]; and we are still on the trail. In that New York Federal Reserve Bank Building there is to be a swimming pool, a cafeteria, a gymnasium, ponderous, pompous, palatial arrangements, which are being constructed out of the raised rediscount rate which they have sucked out of the country. They have been rolling in this money. If they had let it alone, a certain per cent of it would have gone into the Federal Treasury.

The Senator from Virginia asks what has that got to do with loans in the South—it is their money? Well, all of it is not their money. The Government is entitled to a certain per cent of it; and unless they squander it in graft and in the erection of buildings the Government will get some of it, which will help relieve the burden of the overburdened taxpaying public of to-day.

The Senator from Virginia, as I have previously said, stated that the Federal reserve bank in New York have about 5,000 employees. I understand that that number is just 2,000 too much. He said they would have 5,000; and the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], in whose State this palatial building is being erected, said "already have." He came quickly to the rescue of the Senator from Virginia. It turns out now, however, that the number of employees is about 3,000. I will refer to another bank in New York that has more loans outstanding than the Federal reserve bank in New York which has but 100 employees. I ask the Senate and I ask the country what right have the Federal reserve bank officials in New York, what right has the Federal Reserve Board, to permit the employment of 3,000 people when its loans have shrunk to less than those of the First National Bank of New York City? They will criticize me more now than they have been criticizing me.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I remind my friend, the Senator from Alabama, Mr. President, that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in his very able defense of the Federal reserve system, stated that they were violating the health laws of New York. That seems to me to be a very serious accusation against these law-abiding citizens, who, apparently, deserve such a eulogy at the hands of my friend, the Senator from Virginia. The inference is natural that a set of men who would deliberately violate one code of laws in New York would violate some other laws.

Mr. HEFLIN. Ah, Mr. President, that goes to the heart of the situation. If they will do that, will they not violate the rules of right and the laws of justice in taking a little graft? The idea of paying an architect a million dollars for his services while the farmers in my State are leaving the farms, walking out from under foreclosed mortgages, leading their wives and children to the cotton factories to work because they can not make proper arrangements to make a crop this year. Then talk to me about attacking the Federal Reserve Board's murderous deflation policy.

I think they thought when they got the Senator from Virginia started on this matter that they would make us use a soft pedal; that we would go away back and sit down and sing a low tune. I can imagine them saying, "He is one of the reputed authors of the measure, and if we can ever get him to defend our course we will go back into our States and over the country and say, 'We did not do anything wrong; CARTER GLASS defended our policy.'" I should dislike to think that they induced my friend to take that course. I am with him on preserving the system, but I am against him in his defense of the board's deflation policy. I do not intend that the system shall be perverted from the end of its institution and made the handy instrument of heartless interests that want to control the currency and credit of the country.

The Senator from Virginia compared the expenses of the New York Reserve Bank with the expenses of the Bank of France for 1920, and says the latter were approximately 150,000,000 francs or the equivalent, at the old rates of exchange, of about "$30,000,000." For the year 1920 the expenses of administration of the Federal reserve system the Senator from Virginia says were reported in the annual report of the Federal Reserve Board as having been approximately $30,000,000.

Will some Senator please inform me why the Senator from Virginia wished to make the comparison on the basis of the "old rates of exchange of gold equivalent"? Does he not know that during the year 1920 the gold equivalent of the franc was scarcely one-third of its gold value, so that on that basis the expenses of the Bank of France instead of being $30,000,000, as the Senator states, would only be about $10,000,000? In other words, if his figures as to the amount of francs are correct—which I do not admit without knowing more about the source of his information—the expenses of our reserve system were about three times as much as those of the great Bank of France.

Let us turn to the question of the exorbitant salaries of the Federal reserve banking officials.

Mr. President, in 1917 the total salaries and wages of all employees of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York—get these figures, Senators—including the Buffalo branch, aggregated $970,580. The total amount of bills discounted and held by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York December 31, 1917, was $399,078,000. The total wages and salaries of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York as of July 1, 1921—see board's report in reply to Overman resolution, page 53—amounted to $4,988,703. The total bills discounted by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York January 25, 1922—listen, Senators—including bills bought, amounted to $146,526,938. Get that? Nineteen hundred and seventeen, $399,000,000; 1922, $146,000,000. The principal business of the Federal reserve bank is, first, the custody of the member banks' reserves; second, the granting of discounts and loans; third, the clearing of checks for member banks; fourth, its business as fiscal agent for the Government, including the placing of Government loans, and so forth.

The most important function and department of the reserve banks relates to the extension of credit and the granting of loans. In this most important department we find, from the figures which I have just given you—listen—that the total of loans and discounts held at the present time by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York amount to less than 37 per cent of the bills discounted and bought paper held by that bank on December 31, 1917; and yet the cost for wages and salaries was, on July 1 last, and is probably now, more than five times as great as the salaries and wages at the end of 1917.

Senators, will you permit this thing to go on with these staggering facts confronting you?

In 1917 there were 12 officers, and that number has now been swelled to 40 officers, although the loans and discounts and bought paper are now but little more than a third of what they were in 1917. One of the largest and most important banks in New York, with assets of several hundred million dollars, employs less than 100 men—that is what I referred to—including officers and all other employees. By increasing the number of its officers to 40, the reserve bank of New York, with a greatly superfluous official staff, reduces the average salary paid all 40 officers to about $13,000—listen, Senators—but 20 officers would be more than sufficient to perform the work to be done; so that if the amount paid for officers is divided by 20, the average salary would be about $25,000, or double the salaries of members of the Cabinet. If the number of officers should be reduced to the number that ran the bank in December, 1917, when its loans and discounts were nearly three times as great as they are now, the average salary would be found to be over $40,000 a year for each officer.

It seems inconceivable, but it is true, that this one bank is paying 40 officers an amount exceeding the combined salaries of the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and one-half of the Members of the Senate, with the salaries of the governors of 12 States thrown in for good measure, including, among others, the governors of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Texas, and California; yet they criticize me for assailing this nest of crookedness and graft.

The Reserve Board compares the average salaries paid by reserve banks to the average salaries paid to officers of large city banks, but that comparison will not hold. In the first place, the officials who have built up the business of the big individual banks are valued largely on account of their capacity as "business getters" as well as bankers and financiers and judges and dispensers of credit. They are supposed to have initiative and certain special qualifications which are not exercised in a reserve bank, where the deposits of money of member banks is compulsory, and where the character of the loans made is rather different from those made by member banks. Each rediscount made for a member bank has already been scrutinized and passed upon by the bank seeking the rediscount; but the records show, unfortunately, that despite that fact, in many instances not only indiscretion but a lack of plain common sense has been shown by the New York Reserve Bank in the granting of loans and the extension of credit. The charges of discrimination and favoritism have been completely sustained. "If wisdom and prudence were paid for in employing the officials of the New York Reserve Bank, the goods have not been delivered," says John Skelton Williams.

Another reason why the high salaries paid by the reserve banks can not be fairly justified by the comparison of high salaries paid by the member banks is found in the fact that many member banks pay huge salaries to their executive and other officers without the knowledge or approval of the stockholders. Get that, Senators. Many big banks are run by a ring of officers who fix their own salaries, and the stockholders are kept in blissful ignorance as to what the officers receive from the stockholders' funds.

I know they will criticize me now for giving that to the public and putting it into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where the country can read and where people who are interested in bank stock will inquire about what is happening to the dividends when they can raise these salaries and pay these big sums and the stockholders never know what they are getting.

John Skelton Williams says he knows of one case where the national-bank examiner was instructed to investigate a certain member bank in the New York district which was paying to its chief executive officer—the sum of $75,000 per year. Having reason to suspect that this salary had not been approved by all of the directors or by the stockholders, the comptroller directed that the matter should be brought to the attention of the board of directors at a formal meeting. When this was done the $75,000 officer reduced his own salary to $37,500, and later on his salary was reduced to zero, but the officer still hung on to his job, not being paid one cent. They picked up this individual pet and paid him a salary of $75,000, and John Skelton Williams discovered it and called this meeting and they took all the salary away from him. John Skelton Williams has rendered the country an invaluable service. But for him, I repeat, we never would have known of any of this crooked work, and the scandal connected with this Federal Reserve Board's policy, with this graft scheme in New York.

We know that the deflation policy worked ruin to all kinds of business, but we could never have gotten the facts from a board that was trying to deceive the people into believing that they had nothing to do with it.

Just a year ago the Comptroller of the Currency called upon the national banks to show in their regular reports of condition and to print in their statements published in the newspapers a statement showing the aggregate amount of salaries paid to the officers and the aggregate amount paid to other employees. Although compliance with this request from the comptroller would not have made public the individual salaries of officials, the request raised a storm of protest among the banks which were paying extortionate salaries, and many of them refused to publish the data.

Mr. President, we have come to the time that Andrew Jackson found, when the big banks of the country are undertaking to control everything—politics, business, credits, currency—and here they are refusing to respond to the Comptroller of the Currency to send to him and publish a statement of the aggregate salaries they pay, and they decline to do it. Here they were unwilling for either the stockholders or the public to know how their funds were being used.

The Federal Reserve Board, in its report to the Senate, makes comparison with the salaries paid to member banks, but it is always very careful to cover up the names of the member bank officers receiving the big salaries. Why is this? says John Skelton Williams. How can the Reserve Board pretend to justify a salary for reserve bank officers compared with anonymous salaries paid by anonymous banks to anonymous officers?

I must quote another statement by the Senator from Virginia, illustrating still further the errors and inaccuracies of his facts.

He said, on the second day of his speech, page 1246 of the RECORD in which his speech was first printed, the RECORD of January 20:

I think when we consider that the president of the New York Reserve Bank and the board of directors thereof are directly responsible for $5,000,000,000 in cash and securities, the greatest gold reserve that ever was mobilized since the world began to revolve on its axis, we must admit that the responsibility of those officers is infinitely greater than that of the officers of a dozen individual banks combined.

The Senator from Virginia tells you that the New York bank directors are directly responsible for "$5,000,000,000 in cash and securities." I have before me the statement of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York of January 25, 1922, which shows that the grand total of its resources on the date named was only $1,505,783,000. Where does the other $3,500,000,000 in cash and securities come from? They do not belong to the bank. The total amount of its cash and securities aggregate less than one-third of the amount claimed by the Senator from Virginia. Even if the bank should happen to hold in its vaults several hundred million dollars of securities for member banks, this would not justify the Senator's claim that the directors of those institutions are "directly responsible for $5,000,000,000 in cash and securities." I should like to ask how the other three and a half billion dollars are accounted for? For whom does the reserve bank hold this vast sum?

So far as the Senator's claim that "the responsibility of these officers is infinitely greater than that of the officers of a dozen individual banks combined" is concerned, this is, of course, true as to many small banks; but there are two individual banks whose combined resources largely exceed those of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and there are a considerable number of banks in this country whose loans, discounts, and investments largely exceed those of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, as official figures will prove.

The Senator from Virginia undertakes to deny certain statements made by me, and says:

- (a) The Federal Reserve Board did not accumulate $100,000,000 or any other amount.
- (b) The Federal Reserve Board did not appropriate $26,000,000 or any other amount.
- (c) The Federal Reserve Board can not under the law or the operation of the system appropriate one dime for any purpose.
- (d) No Federal reserve bank to cost $26,000,000 is to be built anywhere.

I want you to get this, Senators.

(e) The proposed new Federal reserve bank building in New York is not to be erected in Wall Street.

Now, listen, Senators. John Skelton Williams, in his statement to me, says "I have read your statement and each one of the distinguished Senator's criticisms is either misleading or entirely untrue, as the official records will prove." He denies that the Federal Reserve Board appropriated $26,000,000 or any other amount to the bank at New York, but he does not deny that the Federal Reserve Board connived with the directors of the New York bank and approved the construction of buildings estimated to cost, including the land, over $25,000,000 by the very latest estimate, as stated by the Reserve Board in its report to the Senate dated October 31, 1921.

In fact, the original estimates for that building were about $30,000,000, and subsequently reduced by about $4,000,000, as will be shown from the board's report to the Senate in response to the Overman resolution.

The Senator claims that the bank is not being built in "Wall Street," but, Senators, it is being built in the heart of the Wall Street district, within about 200 or 300 yards of Wall Street itself, although land could have been gotten a few hundred yards farther from Wall Street that would have been equally convenient to 97 per cent of the members of the New York Reserve Bank, and saved millions of dollars.

The Senator from Virginia said that the bank building in New York is designed and planned to accommodate 5,000 employees. But in 1917, when the total loans and discounts of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York were nearly three times as great as they are to-day, 829 employees were sufficient to transact its business, and I want to say here that was the time when we were selling Liberty bonds. That was the time when there was more work to be done than at any other time, and these 829 employees were sufficient then. Now they have multiplied them to about 3,000.

When the Senator made the statement that he did about the 5,000 employees the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] inquired:

Mr. President, does the Senator from Virginia mean that that number of people are employed in the Federal Reserve Bank of New York?

To which the Senator from Virginia replied:

Will be.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] added:

They are.

What justification has the Senator from New York for making such a statement as that? It is not true that 5,000 people are now employed by the New York Reserve Bank, as alleged on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from New York. The board's report says that in July last the number of officers and employees was 3,087, and I believe this has already been reduced since I brought this matter to the attention of Congress. Who misled the Senator from New York? I am sure that he would not willingly mislead the Senate, but some one has evidently deceived him.

Now, as to that monument of Federal Reserve Board extravagance, the Federal reserve bank building at New York, which has been aptly referred to as a "financial monstrosity," the Senator from Virginia said:

I have here an official statement which shows that Senators have been misled by estimates prepared a year ago, in March, 1921. It was an outside estimate of cost. Some Senators absurdly think that the estimated cost of a bank building in New York curtails rural credits in the State of Alabama.

Senators can imagine who the Senator was driving at then.

The estimated cost in March, 1921, of the building at New York was $17,990,000, from which must be subtracted the price the bank will receive for its annex building, now being temporarily occupied and which will be abandoned and sold when the bank goes into the completed building.

What do Senators think of that? They are going to subtract money that has been sunk in another building which has already been erected. They are going to take that out of this.

Why should the cost of the "annex" be deducted from $17,990,000? Instead of deducting it, there should be added to that $17,990,000 estimated actual cost, the amount thus far expended on that annex, namely, $2,210,000. To this also must be added the estimated cost of the "vault equipment," $650,000; then add cost of land, $4,791,000, making a grand total of land and building $25,646,000, to which, I understand, should be added heavy taxes during construction. If any Senator has been misled as to these figures it is because he was misled by the Reserve Board itself. These are the estimates which were sent to the Senate by the board under date of October 31, 1921, in response to Senator OVERMAN's resolution. In fact, in submitting these figures the board called attention to the fact that the original estimates were, as has been stated, about $4,000,000 more, or, say, $30,000,000.

John Skelton Williams furnished me these indisputable facts from the record. When John Skelton Williams first brought this matter to the attention of the country, and we raised the question here, they wisely decided that they had better trim off about $4,000,000 of the superfluity. So I helped to save the Government $4,000,000 by the fight I have been making on this. That is doing pretty well for one Senator who does not know what he is talking about, according to the Senator from Virginia.

The taxes alone on the banking palace now proposed, at the present rate of taxation in New York, would amount, if taxed at estimated cost, to about $700,000 a year, while the interest of 4 per cent per annum on the amount thus locked up would amount to another million dollars, and the cost of operating this huge building is yet to be added. The expenses as proposed bring the total up to more than $26,000,000.

The claim that the new building was needed in order to provide space for the storage of gold is nothing but a pretense. The land upon which the annex building alone stands furnishes space enough in which could have been built vaults sufficient to store not only the $1,000,000,000 of gold carried by the New York Reserve Bank, but all the gold carried by all the other 11 reserve banks, and after that had been tucked away there would have been space enough left to take care of the entire gold supply of the whole world without crowding.

John Skelton Williams vouches for that, and I take it that he knows as much about it as does the Senator from Virginia.

The board admits that it set aside 23,600 square feet for a gymnasium, separate clubs for men and women, a large auditorium or moving-picture show large enough to seat 1,000 people, and a large restaurant. Senators, was there ever anything like it under the sun, with distress and disaster among the masses of millions in this country, 7,000,000 men out of employment, times hard, and the President still hugging to his bosom this Federal Reserve Board, which has carried on this deadly deflation policy for months and months?

The space thus superfluously set aside at the present basis of rentals in New York, according to the Reserve Board's own report to the Senate, will amount to more than the total rentals paid for the year 1917 for banking quarters by all 12 of the Federal reserve banks, only the Dallas bank at that time owning its own banking house.

The Senator says that the Illinois Merchants Trust Co. in Chicago has contracted for a building to cost about $10,000,000, exclusive of real estate, and he adds that this bank does not do "one tithe of the business of this great reserve bank in New York." The Senator is again mistaken. I think he will find, says Mr. Williams, that the investments of the Chicago bank to which he refers, in loans and discounts, amount to about as much or more than those of the New York Reserve Bank, and why did he refrain from telling us that that structure is planned as a great general office building?

We have seen no evidence that the New York Reserve Bank planned originally to rent any portion of its building until this scandal was exposed. The Reserve Board tells us that the fees to architects and engineers alone will amount to $1,106,000, exclusive of the huge commissions, fees, and so forth, to be paid to contractors; but what those fees to contractors are remains a profound secret, although it is rumored that the bank agreed to give one of the "contractors" a fee equal to about the total cost of the St. Louis Reserve Bank and the ground on which it stands.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to a statement which appears in the New York papers this morning, to the effect that Dr. Guthrie says there is more unemployment in New York City right now than there has ever been, and that one of their charitable houses feeds 1,500 men every day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, that is but a verification of the very statement I made. The Senator from Georgia is absolutely right.

Out on the firing line our boys were engaged in battle with the enemy, and the word went back to the ammunition base of supplies, "Send us ammunition; send us more ammunition. Send us men." They fed those men into the gaps as they were thinned out, and they held the line. They broke the power of the enemy, struck the decisive blow, and saved the day.

Mr. President, if you could have shown that we had ample supplies and an ample supply of man power, and the officer responsible for it had refused to send ammunition to the men fighting and offering their lives to hold back the enemy and win the war, they would have court-martialed the officer and shot him to death against a wall.

What did the Federal Reserve Board do here in this country? Our farmers, merchants, and bankers were down there fighting this battle against the organized forces of greed and graft, and the gamblers in Wall Street and Chicago. They cried out for help. John Skelton Williams said, "You can send $2,000,000,000 to the banks in those districts. You can go to their rescue, help save the agricultural industry, and millions of homes of farmers, by feeding the ammunition to them with which to fight, and it is your duty to do it."

The general in control of this material refused to send that aid and to furnish that supply, and our farmers lost the fight, and many a farm is broken up, farm homes are deserted, and our people are driven away, many of them to towns and industrial centers. It is as bad as if an invading army had gone into that section. But the board that refused to send aid to the struggling farmers, merchants, and bankers in the South and West was not court-martialed. It was rewarded by the Republican President. The President, so I am told, said to John Skelton Williams, "We have a good gold reserve." Mr. Williams answered, "Yes, Mr. President; but what would you think of your fire department if your city was on fire, and block after block should be consumed by the flames, and you gave the signal, and no firemen with their engines responded? Another block would be swept away, and the fire spread, and your city was demolished, gone up in a blaze and reduced to ashes, and you should then ask your fire department, 'Where were you when the conflagration raged and destruction swept the city? It is your business to furnish water to put out the fire and protect this other property from destruction.'" He said, "If your firemen should answer, 'We did not extinguish the flames, we did not try to put out the fire, but we have the greatest water supply we ever had in the history of the city,' what would you think of your fire department? What do you think of your Reserve Board's policy? Why did they not go to the rescue of these farmers in the South, these farmers in the West, and save them from utter ruin?"

They said, "We did not do that, but we have the greatest gold reserve we have ever had." What do the honest financiers tell us now? I am not talking about the blood-sucking leeches of Wall Street. The honest financiers tell us that this hoarding of gold is a detriment and a curse to the country, and that the Federal reserve banking system could have saved the day, but the board would not let it do it.

That is what you did. You hoarded gold, gold, accumulating more than two thousand millions, hugging it to your hearts, when agriculture, commerce, and industry were all pining and dying around you and the army of unemployed, hungry and half clad, was crying out for bread. I thought of the Scripture, the saying of the lowly Nazarene, who preached the gospel of democracy. He said:

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat; I was naked, and ye clothed me.

Reverse that doctrine and you have the deadly and infamous policy of deflation of this board. The people had plenty, and deflation took it away. They were well clothed, and it made them naked. They were contented, and it spread discontent where contentment reigned. They were happy in their homes, and it took their homes.

That is the board whose deadly deflation policy I condemn. That is the board I indict. That is the board that I charge with high crimes and misdemeanors. I call upon the President to remove it. There is nothing he can do as President that would give more hope to the bankers of the country and honest business everywhere than to clean out that board. Let him start with the head of it. I understand that he has been offered a salary of $100,000 a year in Wall Street.

Senator SIMMONS went up to the White House pleading in the fall of 1920, when this deadly work was being done. The President was stricken at that time. The Secretary asked, "What suggestion would you make, Senator SIMMONS? What would you do if you were President?" He replied, "I would remove Harding, the governor of the board, before night." Senator SIMMONS is not from Alabama. He is a big, bold, brave, patriotic Senator from the old North State of North Carolina, and dares to speak his conviction and to fight for the right and defend the rights of the masses of the people.

Mr. President, we have been keeping this fight up. It is a hard fight for some of us. I have not any Federal Reserve Board to furnish data to me; no Federal Reserve Board publicly fund to boost my speeches. The speech of my good friend from Virginia, or at least many points in it, were points I have read before, that have been suggested by the Federal Reserve Board itself. Some of the things suggested by Mr. Platt in his letter to Congressman BRAND of Georgia were repeated here by the Senator from Virginia. My opinion is that the things the Senator from Virginia stated here as information about the New York bank were furnished by the bank officials up there, in all probability. But I myself have worked, I have read the bulletins for months and months, issued through 1920 and into 1921 by the Federal Reserve Board, and I can convict that board with its own bulletins.

They started this deflation policy without cause, because if they had read those reports they would have known better. The reports from the various districts as to business and the general situation were like this: "Business is good; outlook is fine; orders are coming in; people are employed; agricultural prospects good." They have all these bulletins which they issued during February, 1920, March, 1920, and along during that time. If the country was prosperous, why bring this blight down upon it? I will insert in my speech, when I get a chance to revise it, statements that I have referred to before about Mr. Harding's position and what he said in New York, and what has been said in statements in the New York Commercial, like this:

Gov. Harding refuses to change his policy with regard to holding cotton for a better price.

This knocks the bottom out of the holding movement. The farmers can not hold unless they can get help, and the governor of the board refuses to give it. This means cotton is going lower and lower. That is the substance of what market reports said at that time.

Charlie Verner, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., a banker in my State and a splendid gentleman, wrote me a letter that Gov. Harding made a speech in Atlanta which broke the price of cotton $10 a bale, or 2 cents a pound, on that day. Gov. Harding's statement was to the effect that they were not going to help cotton. So I think, instead of trying to help, he was spreading the gospel of depression and was on the bear side of the market.

Let me remind you that Gov. Harding said that we must judge his deflation policy by what it did to business. Let me read:

[From the New York Commercial, Sept. 16, 1920.]

WASHINGTON, September 15.

Among other things said:

"Gov. Harding frowned upon the proposal that additional credits be provided as a means of holding cotton in warehouses beyond the usual marketing period in order to insure better prices."

This is the blow that sent terror into the hearts of our cotton producers and turned them over to the wolves of Wall Street. Let us see how New York cotton speculators and market manipulators construed this position of Gov. Harding.

[From the New York Commercial, Sept. 16, 1920.]

COTTON OFF FROM 12 TO 31 POINTS—FEDERAL RESERVE REFUSES SPECIAL AID TO SOUTH.

The conference held in Washington yesterday between representatives of the Cotton States and officials of the Federal reserve was disappointing to cotton holders, as the Federal reserve governor made it plain that the South could expect no special help. This decision will influence sentiment here regarding the ability of the planters to finance any sort of a holding movement now.

[From the New York Commercial, Sept. 17, 1920.]

Under the head of "Cotton-market opinions," W. J. Wallman & Co. said:

"The action of the Federal board in refusing special assistance to the cotton growers is certain to act against the growth of the hold-the-crop movement."

The New York Commercial cotton article on the same date said:

"Many traders were inclined to sell the market after overnight consideration of the refusal of the Federal Reserve Board to help the cotton planters, as it is believed that this decision will effectually kill most of the holding movement because of the difficulty of financing the proposition."

I will now read some interesting statements to show you how the cattlemen and cotton producers were deliberately deceived.

[From the New York Commercial, Sept. 21, 1920.]

(Washington bureau, New York Commercial.)

WASHINGTON, September 20.

RESERVE BOARD WILL NOT CURTAIL LIVE-STOCK CREDITS.

That the live-stock industry is confronting an acute situation as a result of the disposition on the part of the bankers to refuse to renew loans was asserted before the Federal Reserve Board to-day by a committee representing a conference of live-stock producers and bankers recently held in Chicago.

[From the New York Commercial, Sept. 21, 1920.]

The board was urged to promulgate instructions to Federal Reserve banks and member banks of the system to use a greater degree of liberality in handling loans of this character.

W. P. G. Harding, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, assured the delegation that the live-stock industry should have every consideration at the hands of the bankers of the country and that there was no intention to curtail its credit.

[From the New York Commercial, Sept. 15, 1920.]

WASHINGTON, September 14, 1920.

Advisory council to confer with reserve board next Monday. Frozen loans said to have been liquidated to sufficient extent to aid materially in financing crop movement. Board to meet with reserve governors and agents October 13.

J. S. Wannamaker, president American Cotton Association, said:

In September, 1920, after insistent demands for a more liberal policy, Mr. Harding invited leaders in the cotton industry to Washington to discuss the situation, and at that time issued an ambiguous statement which many of the leaders took at its face value and went home full of hope and expressing the highest appreciation of the attitude of Gov. Harding and the Federal Reserve Board. They wrote articles and made speeches and lulled their people into a sense of security. It was believed that every facility would be given the farmer to market his cotton in an orderly manner; in other words, that he could borrow money on his cotton for his immediate needs and hold the cotton until demand made a satisfactory market. But that fool's paradise was shattered on October 8, when, after another conference, held this time in Birmingham, Gov. Harding ripped the mask from his policies and the cotton producer realized at last that he could expect no help from that quarter. Not only did he realize that he could expect no help, but he found out that what was supposed to be an agency of support to him in a crisis had been transformed into an instrument being used to beat him to his knees. With studied misunderstanding and with studied misrepresentation of the demands and needs of the cotton producer, Gov. Harding thus brutally blasted his hopes.

The action of the Federal Reserve Board promptly produced a buyer's panic, first in this country and later on in Europe. The United States being the creditor nation of the world, was certain to adversely affect financial conditions in foreign countries through the policies of drastic artificial deflation inaugurated in this country.

In this connection I will read a statement from "The Crime of 1920"—The Unpardonable Sin of Frenzied Finance, by George W. Armstrong, pages 160 and 161:

THE EXAMPLE OF TALAAAT BEY.

This is truly an amazing official record. It is suggestive of the official directions of the late lamented Talaaat Bey, brought out in the trial of the young Armenian who assassinated him, recently published in the daily press. Talaaat Bey openly pretended to the Allies that he was moving the Armenian women and children to places where there was food and safety. He secretly instructed the officers in charge to treat them with great kindness in public but to take them to a certain unfrequented place and there kill and bury them. When accused of the crimes he denied them with much bravado and injured innocence; so much so that the Government did not really know the truth until revealed by his written orders. Talaaat Bey admitted in his secret orders that his directions were inhuman and cruel, but justified them on the grounds of necessity and for reasons of state. We have here the same "safety" pretense, the same ulterior purpose of destruction, and the same injured innocence.

Although these sapient bankers, the Federal Reserve Board, knew that the inevitable and "logical result would be lower prices," with consequent disruption of industry, unemployment, bankruptcy, misery, despair, death, and suicide, they adopted their deflation program for reasons of State as coldly and as cruelly as did Talaaat, and they have pursued it and do now pursue it as relentlessly and as ruthlessly as did Talaaat, and they have lied about it as brazenly as did Talaaat, and they no doubt "kid" themselves into believing that they were acting for their country instead of their own ambitious designs as did Talaaat. But Talaaat was a "piker" in destructiveness as compared to them.

Gov. Harding said deflation must be judged by what it does to business, and I agree with him. I read:

[From Federal Reserve Bulletin, issued by Federal Reserve Board at Washington, July, 1920.]

Report from Boston district, No. 1. Cancellation of orders by retailers has been reported for some weeks, but this factor had no appreciable reaction in the form of reduced prices to the consumer. The cancellation movement has struck the New England cotton mills, and where actual cancellation of orders has not accrued there have been, in some cases, requests for delay in making shipments, all this being occasioned principally by curtailed bank credits.

In the same bulletin, under the headlines, "Working of credit control," we find this:

The general conclusion to be drawn is unmistakably to the effect that the operation of credit control through higher discount rates has had a marked success.

In the Federal Reserve Bulletin of August, 1920, we find the following:

In the South there has been some success in eliminating loans on United States obligations.

Federal Reserve Board Bulletin of February, 1920, quoting from Gov. Harding's speech to the bankers of the Federal reserve system on January 6, 1920, printed the following excerpts:

"There is no question that the credit structure of this country is expanded. We can not expect this year, nor next, nor in the immediate future, to regain a banking position which would be regarded as normal. The process is one that will require time and patience."

This is what he said, but the ruin wrought tells what he did.

In the same month in the same Federal Reserve Board Bulletin the Richmond (Va.) bank reported:

A material cut in the amount of credit available.

HARDING'S FORTY-FIVE-DEGREE BOGIE EXPLODED.

Let me read another short statement from John Skelton Williams:

An amusing feature of the distinguished Virginia Senator's speech was the ease with which he fell into Gov. Harding's "45-degree" trap. The reserve board governor has been prancing over the country shocking his audiences by pointing out to them how narrowly we averted disaster because of the fact that a chart showed that "loans and rediscounts" at reserve banks had been advancing at the rate of "45 degrees," and he depicted vividly what would have happened if that 45-degree advance had kept up.

The average schoolboy, however, knows that whether "45 degrees" is a safe ratio for loans to advance or not depends upon the horizontal and perpendicular scales used in making the chart. If the chart, for example, has 1-inch squares, and these 1-inch squares represent on the horizontal the months of the year, and if the 1-inch squares on the perpendicular scale should start, say, with one hundred millions of loans and each upright inch represent an additional one hundred thousand loan expansion, the chart line might show 80 or 85 degree advance in one month, and yet the total increase in loans would only be about 1 per cent, or, say, $1,000,000.

If the 1-inch square on the upright scale, starting at one hundred million, should represent one hundred million increase in loans, the angle of advance might be only about "22½ degrees," and yet represent an expansion of about fifty times as great as the chart on the other scale showed, or an 85-degree advance.

It is to be regretted that Senator GLASS should have fallen into Gov. Harding's stupid sophistries.

Mr. President, the people of the country ought to know the truth about these things. It takes mighty plain talk to get it to them. We can at least get it to them through the Congress-

SIONAL RECORD. I am satisfied that the boys in the press gallery sent out the statement which I made the other day, but it was not printed. I do not quite understand that. I do not believe there is one of those young men who would be a party to helping throttle the press and suppress the truth and refrain from giving information that went out from this Chamber from a Senator.

If we have come to that, then you are going to see a revolution in this country in a political way. The people will not stand for the Democratic Party or the Republican Party—and ought not to do so—throttling the press and keeping information from the people. If the Republicans are doing anything that is good, give it to the country; if they are doing wrong, give that news to the country. If the Democrats are right, give its position to the country; if they are wrong, condemn that conduct and give it to the country. But do not let us have a press that can be manipulated, facts suppressed, and information kept out of the columns of the newspapers of the country.

I do not know how that statement from the Senator from Virginia ever got into the Democratic Bulletin. It was not done at the instance of the committee. I never said a word to any of them about my speech. I was not trying to get anything before the country from a Democratic standpoint. I never paid any attention to it, so when I got one of those circulars I was surprised. A Senator said to me, "They ought not to put that in there; they ought not to have said anything at all about what occurred between you and GLASS." But they did that, and a newspaper friend of Gov. Harding's has circulated that statement through some papers down in my country referring to my statements as misrepresentations about the Federal Reserve Board. Yes, they may be able to get out statements like that, but I do not intend that the people shall be deceived by them.

I state again that the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board does not have the sanction of the Democratic Party. Every leading Democrat of any consequence denounces it except by friend the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. This fact may be of interest to the Senator from Alabama, and it is only a minor thought. A few moments ago my secretary informed me that the editor of the Manufacturers' Record had called up my office in an effort to get that bulletin of May, 1920, in which Gov. Harding foreshadowed his purpose to contract the currency and to bring down prices, and that the editor could not get a copy of the bulletin. I have promised to have my copy of the bulletin typewritten in order that he may have a copy of it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator for that information. He will put that information in the hands of a brave warrior when he sends it to the editor of the Manufacturers' Record. In fact, practically all of those on this side that I know anything about and a few on the other side agree with my position.

Let me read in this connection an editorial from the New York Commercial, which throws light on the situation. This was in 1920 when deflation was on:

[Editorial.]

COMPTROLLER WILLIAMS ON EXCESSIVE INTEREST.

Comptroller of the Currency John Skelton Williams has created a disturbance in financial circles by his charges that the New York banks have been exacting excessive interest, which, of course, the bankers here promptly denied. The merits of the controversy, however, are rather overshadowed by the larger controversy between the two groups of Washington officials who have been at odds for some time as to the better method of restoring the financial equilibrium. Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, and his colleagues thereon, have adopted the policy of a curtailment of credit for nonessentials for the purpose of causing a liquidation of commodities and bring prices down to something like a normal basis. The other group, as represented by John Skelton Williams, takes the ground that interest rates should be reduced, capital made easily obtainable, and production stimulated to meet the demand.

Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia defends the payment of $1,106,000 to architects and engineers, saying that—nearly all, if not all, the eminent professional architects of this country belong to the American Institute of Architects. They have a standard charge and any man who goes below that charge will be turned out of the institution. The New York bank paid the standard charge. It could not have gotten a competent architect for any less money.

Now, listen, Senators:

Again the Senator is wrong. The huge toll of $1,106,000 exacted was unnecessary. Architects and engineers just as competent as those employed could have been found to do quite as satisfactory or more satisfactory work for much less money, and architects working for less would not have been "turned out" of the American Institute of Architects. In fact, I have reason to believe and now affirm that in some of the reserve districts capable and efficient architects and engineers have been found who were willing to make special terms which have resulted, or will result, in material savings in the matters of architects' and engineers' fees, and I would ask that the reserve board furnish the Senate, in proof of this assertion, a statement showing precisely what fees and what percentages were paid or agreed to be paid in each where Federal reserve banks have erected buildings or made contracts for their construction. Let that statement show the amount and percentage of fees to contractors and percentage and amount of fees on estimated cost of buildings allowed to architects and engineers. If this information is furnished, it will show that the distinguished Senator from Virginia has also been deceived in this respect by his advisers.

The Senator from Virginia asserts in so many words that the estimated cost of the building, having certain savings in view, will be "$12,836,000," not $26,000,000. Why did the Senator fail to add that the new estimate of cost fails to include over $7,000,000 already expended in cash for land and the annex and the $650,000 for vault equipment and other important items? Does he consider such a comparison as he has made fair or square under the circumstances?

These facts from John Skelton Williams speak the truth.

The Senator declares with much emphasis that the cost of this extravagant building does not take one dollar from the Federal Treasury. It would have been more fair if the Senator should have said that while they may not take money out of the Federal Treasury they prevent many millions of dollars from going into the Treasury which, but for these extravagant buildings, would have been available to help pay expenses of Government.

Why is he so silent on the big charge-off of about $7,000,000 for "depreciation" on account of buildings not yet finished, and does he not know that under the Federal reserve act 90 per cent of that $7,000,000 of depreciation, or more than $6,000,000, would have gone into the Treasury but for those bookkeeping charges of the reserve banks?

So it does look as if they were affecting Alabama and the other States, too. If they had not appropriated that $7,000,000 to their use we would have gotten $6,000,000 in the Treasury.

How is it that the distinguished Senator from Virginia failed to make any allusion to the $12,000,000 collected from the Federal Government by the Reserve Bank of New York for alleged expenses in connection with the placing of Liberty bonds and fiscal agency matters? I should like to have a little more information on that point. That little item, says John Skelton Williams, was tucked away in a small corner in one of the annual reports of the Reserve Board; but it is important and needs a little ventilation. I think the Senate should be furnished with a statement of what, if anything, has been paid to other reserve banks on the same account.

Gov. Harding, in one of his recent speeches, says that the Federal Reserve Bank Building is not so high as some other buildings in New York, but he fails to tell how many stories it is. The Reserve Board's report to the Senate mentions, incidentally, that the officers are to have their offices on the tenth story. Is that the top story? Even if it were true that the building is to cost only about $13,000,000, exclusive of land and annex, that is largely in excess of the cost of the huge Equitable Building in New York, which is built on a larger area than the proposed main building of the New York Reserve Bank and is 40 stories high.

Do you get that, Senators? That was $12,000,000 collected from the Federal Government; there is $12,000,000 collected for that, and $6,000,000 that would have gone into the Treasury, making $18,000,000.

I want to say in this connection that the Senator from Virginia said "the Senator from Alabama thinks printing presses were made to print money." Well, if they were not made to print money why do we use them for that purpose? We print the money of the Government on the printing presses. The Government prints this money.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Why should there be any more prejudice against a printer than there is against a minister of the gospel?

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I should like to know. The Senator from Virginia is himself a printer. Since the Senator from Virginia has suggested the question, I will say that is why these printing presses were made—to print money. I want to say to the Senator that the Federal Reserve Board has the power—and it has exercised that power time and time again—to issue Federal reserve notes. It prints those notes itself and sends them to the New York banks free of charge to them. There are some few of us learning something about this banking system. I never intend to entrust all knowledge on that subject to any one person any more. I am going to learn something about it myself, so that I shall know. We used to listen to some fellow tell us, "This will not do, and that will not do"; but I have learned something about it myself, and I have learned it mostly from John Skelton Williams. I have been reading what he says; and I will suggest to my friend from Virginia that it would be a good thing for him to peruse some of his pages.

Now, Mr. President, here is what happens: The Federal Reserve Bank in New York can come here to the Treasury and put up 40 per cent of collateral in gold and 60 per cent in other kinds of securities which are O. K'd by responsible parties in New York, and which the board will accept, and then the Federal reserve system starts its printing presses to work and prints $100,000,000 or whatever is necessary. The securities never get out of the community. Of course, they are subject to the call of the Government, but the owner keeps them and he gets $100,000,000 without interest; he does not pay a penny of interest; and yet he gets that $100,000,000 of Federal reserve money and he loaned it out at 7 per cent, the rediscount rate, or whatever he could get—it may be 10 per cent or 20 per cent or 30 per cent or 50 per cent. Then, when the time is out and he has run his course and has made millions out of the use of the Government's money, without paying a cent of interest, the notes are canceled and the printing presses print again for another concern, and so the Federal Reserve Board may go on using the printing presses of which my friend from Virginia has spoken.

We are learning a little something about this system. If the Government will grant the banks $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 and will not charge them any interest for six months, why, under heaven, does not the Reserve Board make those banks come to the rescue of the banks in my section and in other sections?

It has the power to do it. The Senator from Virginia intimated the other day that it had not, but it has. The Federal Reserve Board has the power to make one Federal reserve bank discount the paper of another. We know that. I guess some of them did not think we knew it, but it has that power; it can make them do it.

The Senator from Virginia left the impression by a considerable portion of his speech that the board had hardly any power at all. On the contrary, they have a great deal of power.

Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia tells us as an evidence of the amazing liberality of the reserve banks toward the agricultural districts that during the period of falling prices all of the member banks combined in South Carolina borrowed an aggregate of $21,105,000, which, he says, was about $13,000,000 more than their basic line. What has the Senator to say about the one bank in New York City which during the period of falling prices enjoyed accommodations from the Federal reserve system of $150,000,000? Here is what the Comptroller of the Currency at that time says about that:

Now, Senator, I will give you some other comparisons drawn from official figures, showing what total amount of accommodations were received by the different reserve banks in the agricultural districts at the beginning of January, 1920. At that time the Federal reserve bank was lending to all the member banks in the States of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and parts of Louisiana, Tennessee, and Mississippi on loans and accounts a total of $88,000,000. In addition to that, it was carrying bought paper to the extent of $16,000,000, and this amount included about $10,000,000 with which they were accommodating other Federal reserve banks, principally in the North.

At the same time the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis was lending to all the member banks in that important district, including the greater part of Missouri, Arkansas, and parts of Illinois, Indiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Mississippi, a total of $80,000,000, and in addition to that they held about $31,000,000 of bought paper. These figures included over $20,000,000 of paper which the St. Louis bank had taken from other reserve banks to accommodate them.

At the same time the total amount of loans and discounts which the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City held from all of the member banks in that great agricultural and live-stock district, including Kansas, Nebraska, parts of Missouri, Oklahoma, Wyoming, and Colorado, an aggregate of only $88,000,000, and the additional bought paper which they held was about $17,000,000.

At the same time, Senator, the total amount of accommodations which the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas was extending to all of its member banks in the whole State of Texas and in parts of Oklahoma, Louisiana, New Mexico, and Arizona was $57,000,000, to which is to be added about $6,000,000 of bought paper. But, mind you, this amount included $30,000,000 which the Dallas bank at that time was lending to the big banks of the North and East, which had invoked their assistance, as we find now, largely for the purpose of enabling them to lend principally to big speculators and for promotion schemes.

At this same time, the beginning of January, 1920, we find that one of the big banking institutions in New York City, which had become notorious for its speculative deals and operations and some of the executive officers of which were heavy borrowers, directly and indirectly, not only from their own banks but from other banks in the Federal reserve banking system which were being aided by the New York Federal Reserve Bank—that this big institution was borrowing about $130,000,000 of funds from the Federal reserve bank in New York.

This means that that one big speculative institution at that time was being accommodated with about two and one-half times as much money as all of the member banks in the Dallas Federal reserve district.

Furthermore, that one bank had gotten from the New York Reserve Bank about 25 per cent more money than either the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City or the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta were lending at that time to all of the banks in either of those great and important districts.

And what is perhaps worse, we find that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, in order to be able to lend that $130,000,000 to that one bank and to enable it to make loans to other big speculative institutions, was borrowing in the middle of January, 1920, $100,000,000 from other reserve banks, whose funds they were sucking up for such purposes as these.

At that time the total amount of money which all 12 Federal reserve banks were lending on agricultural and live-stock paper, or to all of the 9,000 member banks in all of the 48 States of the Union, was only $51,068,000. Those were the figures for January 1, 1920, or, to be exact, December 30, 1919.

He continues:

The riotous prodigality with which funds were dispensed by the New York Reserve Bank, regardless of all considerations of prudence, is indicated when I tell you that it was in that same month, namely, January, 1920, I believe, that the Federal Reserve Board passed a resolution authorizing the waiving of the reserve requirements as to this same Federal reserve bank in New York.

And it was just 12 months later that this same Federal Reserve Bank of New York authorized the expenditure of $25,646,000 for extravagant and wasteful banking quarters in New York City. The man at the head of that institution is the gentleman who is now drawing a salary equal to the salaries of six United States Senators and four times the salary of the Vice President of the United States and more than three times the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States, and at the time of which I speak he had not left for his vacation trip around the world, but was still on deck supposed to be looking after the management of the New York Reserve Bank, which, at that time, as I have shown you, was lending to one big speculative institution more than two and one-half times as much money as all 12 Federal reserve banks were lending on agricultural and live-stock paper at the beginning of January, 1920, to all of their member banks in the 48 States of the Union.

Mr. President, I was elected to represent in part the whole people of Alabama, and I am doing my best to do that. It is my duty as a United States Senator to safeguard to the best of my ability the rights and interests of the whole people of the country. In the discharge of my duty as a public servant I have incurred the displeasure of the Federal Reserve Board governor and those of the board with him who were guilty of maladministering the great Federal reserve banking system to the hurt and injury of millions of people. I have brought down upon my head the wrath of Wall Street newspaper yelpers, who always growl and bark at any public man who dares to attack the financial marauders who feed and fatten upon the substance of the people of the South and West.

I have made enemies of all those who greatly increased their fortunes out of the misfortunes of people stricken down and rendered helpless by the processes of drastic deflation. I have made enemies of those who did not want the truth told and their crooked conduct exposed.

Mr. President, the Senator who will shrink from the faithful discharge of his duty because of the fear of making enemies is himself a contemptible wretch and cringing coward. So every enemy made in the discharge of duty is an additional testimonial to faithful service rendered.

He hath no enemies, you say.

My friend, your boast is poor.

He who hath mingled in the fray of duty that the brave endure must have made foes:

If he has none, small is the work that he has done.

He has hit no traitor on the hip.

He has removed no cup from perjured lip.

He has never turned the wrong to right.

He has been a coward in the fight.

What would you have thought of one of our soldiers on the firing line in France if he had gone back and sought some safe and easy place? What would have been your opinion of him if he had considered his own personal comfort and ease above the cause of his country? When our boys were fighting on the battle fields of France they were battling against military despotism and the deadliest war machine that ever appeared upon the earth. If they had sought the lines of least resistance and failed us, then they would have had the contempt and scorn of every patriotic man and woman in America.

What are you to do and what am I to do when we see the Nation's great banking system changed by those in charge of it from the purpose of its creation? Are we to remain silent when we see this great banking system so mismanaged that it brings business distress and disaster to millions of people that it was intended to serve and to save from business ruin? Power to control the volume of currency and credits in this country is the most vital power in the economic life of the Nation. Prior to the late spring of 1920 that power, lodged in the Federal Reserve Board, was never abused. On the contrary, it was used so as to meet and supply the business needs of every section of the country. But under the deflation policy in 1920 I saw that power employed, not to uphold and sustain legitimate business but to strike it down and destroy it. I saw it hoarding the Nation's money supply and withholding credits from business when the Government's Comptroller of the Currency, John Skelton Williams, declared that the Federal Reserve Board could issue and put into circulation $2,000,000,000 of currency and prevent distress among millions of people and the loss of many hundreds of millions of dollars. If condemning that cruel and wicked usurpation of power and exposing that infamous crime against the people brings me enemies, I welcome them. They are the enemies of my country, and I neither fear nor seek the favor of the enemies of my country.

CAROLYN UPSHAW.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read an editorial from the Washington Star of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

CAROLYN UPSHAW.

Peace hath her victories no less than war. The city has its heroines no less than the battle field. Perhaps no field of war ever held a pluckier person than the little high-school girl, victim of the Knickerbocker tragedy, who died after a week of suffering, and who, shortly before her death, turned to her sister and said, with a smile, "I haven't cried yet."

Scores, reading, felt their eyes moisten; scores, remembering, will be braver through life as the result of that simple sentence from the lips of the dying girl, little more than a child, yet possessed of the brave soul of an American woman at her best. This was the spirit of those brave women who went to the West and Middle West and made the wilderness and forest smile; this was the spirit of those women, earlier yet, who came across the fearsome width of ocean to battle with unknown conditions.

The name of Carolyn Upshaw will live in Washington as that of a heroine, a woman who suffered bravely and went to meet her Maker with a smile on her lips. If this child, under such stress, could smile through pain and suffering, and take pride in her ability to refrain from weeping, surely in the ordinary affairs of life there is little excuse for such demonstrations. Men and women alike may learn from the example of this brave girl how to endure.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, there was an old saying that "those whom the gods love die young." The most beautiful short poem in the literature of England commemorates a girl whom the gods loved and who died young; the most beautiful short poem in American literature hands down the name of a girl whom the gods loved and who died young.

This little Georgia girl, who was one of the victims of the tragedy which occurred here a few days ago, must have been beloved by the gods and by our God. Death never plucked a whiter, sweeter flower than when it plucked her; death never stilled a braver heart than when it halted hers.

Mr. President, she said, "I have not cried yet"; but I venture to say that the editor who wrote that beautiful tribute wept when he wrote it; I venture to say that every Senator who read it cried when he did so; I venture to say that countless thousands of people here in Washington and in regions round about cried when they read it; and I know in my heart that, as she was carried back to be given to the soil of Georgia, there could have hardly been a dry eye from our mountains to our seaboard.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR PEPPER—MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that motion for a few moments to enable me to propound an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withhold his motion?

Mr. LODGE. I withhold it for a moment, but it is getting pretty late.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to provoke discussion of any length, but wish to be fair regarding a discussion I precipitated this morning.

The Senate will remember that the morning papers carried the report of a speech alleged to have been made by the able junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and the alleged speech reflected so severely upon the Democratic Members of the Senate and, as I construe it, upon the eight Republicans who voted to deny a seat to Mr. NEWBERRY that I should like, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will not consider it offensive or presumptuous on my part, to ask him if the report in the various papers regarding his remarks on the Newberry case is correct?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Of course, I do not regard the question as in the least offensive. I have not seen the reports in the newspapers to which the Senator refers, but I have every reason to believe that they are accurate, because what I said was said advisedly, and a copy of my remarks was given to the newspapers; so I assume that they have correctly quoted me.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, during the absence of the Senator I took the liberty of saying that I believed he would avow or disavow that speech when he came into the Chamber. I see that I was not mistaken. I have been handed from the press gallery a copy of the purported speech alleged to have been made by the Senator before the Albany County Republican Club last evening; that I realize that one Senator has no right to catechise another—and if he feels that I am improperly doing so he can object and I will sit down; that is his privilege—but the Senator is alleged to have said, amongst other things, the following:

I now mention an example of individual courage. I refer to the action of those Republican Senators who steadfastly refused to be terrorized into voting to expel from the Senate the man who had been sent there by a clear majority of the voters of his State. When you realize the success attained by Senator NEWBERRY's implacable enemy in misstating the issue to the public—when you realize how millions of good people in this country had been fooled by Ford's insidious publicity into believing that not they themselves but the Michigan electorate had been duped—you will understand that it took no small degree of courage to face public moral condemnation which was as vehement as it was unjust. And in this test of moral courage every single Democrat in the Senate was found wanting.

Not one soul was man enough to vote in accordance with his convictions. They mouthed about the honor of the Senate and the integrity of the individual, and then they proceeded to tarnish that honor and impair that integrity by voting like a flock of sheep. Every single Democrat voted slavishly to dishonor his own colleague for what an unimpeachable majority of the people of Michigan had done when, with full knowledge of all the facts, they freely registered their preference for Senator NEWBERRY.

Will the Senator advise us whether or not that is a reasonably correct report of his speech?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I believe it to be a reasonably correct report, and in answering that question perhaps the Senator will permit me to include this observation as a part of it:

When I, as a Member of this body, approached the consideration of the Newberry case, I assumed that the question would be considered as a judicial question upon which individual Senators would make up their minds upon the merits, as disclosed by the record and as elucidated by arguments on the floor. As far as I have observed, Mr. President, that was the spirit in which Republican Senators approached the question, because I observed that a number of them voted on one side and a number on the other; and I wish it understood that I have made no comment or criticism upon what seemed to me a perfectly permissible difference of opinion; but from what occurred on the floor I inferred, rightly or wrongly, that the Senators on the Democratic side thought the case one suitable for treatment as a party question.

That gave rise merely to a question of taste; and I should like it understood, Mr. President, that I made no comment or criticism upon that. But Senators on the Democratic side went further, Mr. President. They saw fit, through responsible spokesmen on the floor, to make the vote in the Newberry case a question of personal honor. There are pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to which I can refer in which it is stated by responsible spokesmen of the Democratic Party that Senators who voted against the resolution of expulsion dishonored themselves and wrote dishonor across their political records.

Mr. President, I assumed that the Senators were within their rights in making the vote a question of honor; and, assuming that the question of honor was properly raised by them and being conscious of undimmed honor myself and of unimpaired personal integrity, I chose to accept the issue, only I reversed the sides, sir, and put my friends upon the defensive; because I, sir, in the language which has been properly attributed to me, deliberately chose to stake my honor and my integrity against that of the Senators on the other side, and that issue can not be decided by the Senators in question. I am content to leave it to the decision of all who know us both.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, after a brilliant eulogy upon his own "undimmed" honor, the Senator from Pennsylvania does not see fit to retract anything that he has said reflecting upon the honor of the men with whom he will be associated here for some time. Being a man of such punctilious "honor," as the Senator says of himself, and seeing in it a matter of honor where possibly dull and obtuse men might not, I will now advert to the record in the case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will permit me to proceed briefly. I am going to conclude soon.

Mr. LODGE. If we are going to take up the whole Newberry case and discuss it, we shall probably run pretty late.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not going to take it up. I hope the Senator will not press his interruption.

Mr. LODGE. I shall not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I knew the Senator would not; but let me call attention to this:

On the 12th day of January last the case was up, and the case is over as far as I am concerned. I have not brought it up. If the Senator from Pennsylvania had not seen fit to make this speech, I never would have mentioned the Newberry case; but a resolution regarding the Newberry case was voted on, an amendment was adopted, and the resolution then read as follows:

*Resolved, etc., * *  (3) That whether the amount expended in this primary was $195,000, as was fully reported and openly acknowledged, or whether there were some few thousand dollars in excess, the amount expended was in either case too large, much larger than ought to have been expended.

The expenditure of such excessive sums in behalf of a candidate, either with or without his knowledge and consent, being contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the honor and dignity of the Senate, and dangerous to the perpetuity of a free Government, such excessive expenditures are hereby severely condemned and disapproved.

So this knight of the common people, the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has lifted many a lance, who has shot out many whizzing javelins in behalf of the cause of truth, entered the Senate on the 10th of January, with a record of 2,000 pages of testimony in the Newberry case before him—I would not be so offensive as to presume that he voted without reading those 2,000 pages, although he had but two days in which to do it—voted for that resolution, and then voted to seat the beneficiary. The Senator from Pennsylvania saw no moral question involved and he saw no difficulty, he found no obstacle, in voting to condemn the vast expenditures in the Newberry case, which the resolution said were contrary to public morals and derogatory to the best interests of the country, and were undermining the foundations of the Republic; he put his blessing, his seal of approval upon the seating of Mr. NEWBERRY, although he condemned the methods used, and then he charges all of the Democrats with having violated their consciences and stained their own honor in voting to deny a seat to a man who procured it by methods which he says undermine the Republic.

So, Mr. President, I will now, again disclaiming any desire to be contentious or offensive, ask the Senator into what category he puts WILLIAM E. BORAH, WILLIAM S. KENYON, ARTHUR CAPPER, EDWIN F. LADD, HOWARD SUTHERLAND, WESLEY L. JONES, ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, and one other Republican? I can not remember them all. Did those eight men who happened to vote and view the matter as the minority side viewed it, violate their honor, or are they absolved from all blame because they happen to be Republicans, or did they give this question a judicial investigation? Is the Senator excusing them, or is he condemning them? What is his answer to that?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, without specifying individual Senators, I think I can fairly answer the question addressed to me by saying that my remarks had no application to any Senator who dissents from the following statement, on page 2020 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but were directed at any Senator who reaffirmed those remarks. The remarks to which I refer are these, and I quote from the speech of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]:

Mr. President, there is not a Senator who voted for this resolution who did not brand in red letters above and over and across his political record the word "dishonor."

I answer the Senator by saying that my remarks have no reference to any Senator who dissented from that view, and they are applicable to any Senator who subscribed to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Then why did not the Senator say that in his speech before the Albany County Republican Club?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently familiar with the procedure in the Senate to be aware to what length a catechism of this sort should be carried. I am quite ready to answer any questions that the Senate will be patient enough to have me answer, but I am not desirous of continuing the matter further.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to pursue the matter any further. The Senator has avowed the speech, and said that every Democrat stained himself with dishonor, but that the eight Republicans who voted with them did not.

When the Senator was appointed to the Senate, a number of men in the Senate Chamber and out of it who are attempting to conduct a campaign to bring the Government back to the people rejoiced; a commendation went up, and the Philadelphia North American had an editorial that I read twice, entitled "Thank God," rejoicing over the appointment of the Senator from Pennsylvania; but he disappointed us to-day—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The point of order is that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. He stated that he withheld it, but I submit the Senator can not have a motion pending, which is not debatable, and then a series of speeches proceed upon the floor indefinitely. If this matter is of serious moment to the Senate, it can be continued to-morrow.

The Senator from Massachusetts must either withdraw his motion, or the Senate must proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Massachusetts has been generous, and I am going to conclude now by asking that the speech of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, which has been furnished me by the press gallery, be printed in the Record, and that opposite the paragraph wherein he says the Democratic Senators acted with dishonor there be printed the resolution, No. 172, upon which Senator Newberry was seated. Having made that request, I am through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator will not designate the place where the printer shall be required to put the resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not blame the Senator for objecting. He does not want to see the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania in juxtaposition to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I renew my point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I am through. I yield the floor.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in accordance with the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 10, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 9, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, our heavenly Father, we come. Thou alone hast a staff for the valley and a song for the plain. We are here with an open hand. From Thy bountiful supply satisfy our need. Impart to us strength to push through the strata of human fault, human strife, and human ignorance until we breathe the air of the upper clime. Be Thou the architect and the builder of our characters. May the temples of our souls grow and expand without noise, under the inspiration of Thy spirit, and rise to the music divine. Let Thy thoughts burn through our lips and speak through our conduct and always direct the counsels of our hearts. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DAMAGES TO PRIVATE PROPERTY FROM NAVAL COLLISIONS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is H. R. 5349, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 5349) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered, and the question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 33, noes 1.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 2373) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. TOWNSEND and Mr. McKELLAR members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post Office Department.

ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL.

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a privileged report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) providing for the printing of 16,800 additional copies of Senate Document No. 114, Sixty-seventh Congress, entitled "Message of the President of the United States transmitting the report of the International Joint Commission concerning the improvement of the St. Lawrence River," having had the same under consideration, report the resolution back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of printing at $3,014.

Senate concurrent resolution 18.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 16,800 additional copies of Senate Document No. 114, Sixty-seventh Congress, entitled "Message of the President of the United States transmitting the report of the International Joint Commission concerning the improvement of the St. Lawrence River," of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, 500 copies for the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, 100 copies for the Senate Committee on Commerce, 10,000 copies for the House document room, 1,000 copies for the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and 200 copies for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, how voluminous a document is this, and does it contain maps, plans, and drawings?

Mr. KIESS. Mr. Speaker, it does contain certain maps and drawings. The cost of the 16,800 copies is estimated by the Public Printer to be $3,014. There has been an unusual demand for this from the Members and Senators of the States directly affected, and for that reason we provided that these copies should go to the document room rather than to the folding room, so that the Members and Senators directly interested could get sufficient copies.

Mr. WALSH. You increase the number by how many?

Mr. KIESS. The resolution provides for the printing of 16,800 additional copies.

Mr. WALSH. I understood there were 10,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. KIESS. No; 5,000 for the Senate and 10,000 for the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are these copies to be distributed proportionately to the Members?

Mr. KIESS. No; these are to go to the document room.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And each Member can go there and get 500 or 1,000 copies if he wants them?

Mr. KIESS. Whatever he requires. Very many Members are not interested in this particular document, and that is the reason we do not want to send it to the folding room.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should think they would all be interested in it. It is an important document and covers a very important measure.

Mr. KIESS. I think this will supply all that anyone will need.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want to arrange for the division of time for general debate?

Mr. CANNON. Now is the proper time to do that. The ranking minority member is the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] and the next minority member is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. The gentleman from Massachusetts is sick, and the gentleman from Kentucky obtained leave of absence because of a death in his family. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] how much time is desired for general debate?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], who is the ranking member of the subcommittee, is ill with the flu at Walter Reed Hospital, and, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the other minority member, obtained leave of absence on account of a death in his family. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] informed me through his secretary that he had agreed to yield some time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] also desires some time. Other gentlemen have just said they desired some time, and if they are to be taken care of I think we will require an hour and a half on this side.

Mr. CANNON. We are very anxious to see the bill passed to-day, and I see no reason why it should not pass to-day. I do not think we shall want an hour and a half on this side. What would the gentleman say to two hours' general debate?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Personally that is entirely agreeable to me, but it will result in depriving one or two gentlemen, who have just spoken to me, of time that they would like to have.

Mr. MANN. There is another appropriation bill to follow this immediately.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; that is true. So far as I am personally concerned an hour on a side is entirely agreeable, and we will try to take care of these other gentlemen in some other way.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be two hours general debate, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and one-half of the time by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this bill providing appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year 1923 carries, in round numbers, twelve and a half million dollars. In the rearrangement of the Budget this bill provides for the Government Printing Office, the Library of Congress, and the Botanic Garden, which are semiexecutive rather than strictly legislative, and leaving out the appropriations for those functions, the appropriations for the legislative work of the Government amount to less than $11,000,000. This is an almost insignificant sum as compared with the total estimated expenditures of about three and a half billion dollars for the whole Government.

This bill therefore appropriates a comparatively small amount to provide for the lawmaking machinery compared with the appropriations for executive functions. The money we propose to appropriate for the legislative branch represents about $1 in $300 of the total estimated expenditure for next year; it will call for a per capita tax of 11 cents on the people in continental United States and about $1 in $24,000 of our national wealth—not a very burdensome tax on our wealth for legislative activities.

The legislative branch has always been the most economical part of the Government, and in proportion to the total cost of the Government it has been growing less ever since the adoption of the Constitution. Twenty-five years ago in the McKinley administration the appropriations for the legislative branch as presented in this bill represented $1 out of $100 of the total appropriations, and now it is proposed to appropriate for the Congress $1 out of $300 in the total expenditures. We have kept down salaries and expenditures for the legislative branch in the past, while circumstances have persuaded us largely to increase salaries, employees, and expenses in the executive departments, and add new departments and bureaus with new executive functions, until as I look back to the time when I first entered the House nearly 50 years ago and compare the executive part of the Government then and now, it is like going from Danville to the great metropolis of New York. [Laughter.] The executive branch of the Government has grown like the fabled bean stalk, while the legislative branch remains much as it was then, with a few more Members, a few more clerks, and better accommodations for Members.

We have continued to be economical in appropriating public money for the upkeep of the legislative branch, and that may be one reason why we receive so little attention other than criticism from the multiplied agencies of publicity. [Laughter.] We have been so careful about appropriating money for the lawmaking machinery that we have come to be regarded as only an agency for appropriating money to carry forward other plans for government, many of them quite different from the ideas of the founders of the Government.

I do not mention these contrasts for the purpose of criticism of the changes that have come with the growth and development of the country and its complicated and complex expansion into the greatest and richest Nation on the face of the earth; but I call attention to these changes simply to show that while Congress has grown in membership, has at long intervals increased our salaries and added to the clerical force and the accommodations, the legislative branch has remained proportionately the least expensive and least changed part of the Government. If we are to be charged with extravagance, it must be for yielding to the propaganda that daily and hourly pours in on Congress for the expansion of the executive branch and the judicial branch of the Government, with many newly created functions that dangerously approach the bureaucratic form of government.

The appropriations here recommended by the committee are nearly $800,000 less than the appropriations for the current fiscal year and six and a quarter hundred thousand dollars less than the estimates submitted, showing that we are still more economical in appropriating for the legislative branch than for any other service.

The report accompanying the bill explains the changes made, and under the 5-minute rule the committee will try to elucidate any apparent discrepancies as to the relation of appropriations and estimates to be found in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time, within the hour, to the gentleman from Minnesota as he may desire.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Illinois. There are very few changes in this bill from existing law. There are one or two, however, which I desire to call to the attention of the committee at this time, with the expectation that they will be discussed somewhat more fully under the 5-minute rule. At the present time the elevator conductors in this building and in the House and Senate Office Buildings are carried in part under the office of the Architect of the Capitol and in part under the appropriation for the office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House. The bill as reported by the committee undertook to put the elevator conductors directly connected with the House and with the House Office Building under the Sergeant at Arms of the House and those elevator conductors employed on the Senate side directly under the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate. This arrangement was not satisfactory to the House Office Building Commission, and as a result of some conferences an agreement was reached whereby all the elevator conductors will be placed under the control of the Architect of the Capitol.

In addition, there were three or four items which contain employees connected with the Capitol power plant, as well as other employees of the Capitol, and it seemed desirable to bring all the employees connected with Capitol power plant into one item, and so these items have been rearranged so as to transfer from the items to which I have referred to other items not connected with the Capitol power plant and employees in these items properly chargeable to the power plant to the Capitol power-plant appropriation.

There is one other change of considerable importance to which I desire to direct the attention of the committee. This relates to the Government Printing Office. Under the present arrangement appropriations for the printing of various Government establishments and departments are made under two methods. The first is called the allotment method. Under that method an appropriation running somewhere between five and six million dollars was made directly to the Government Printing Office.

This appropriation was allotted in specific amounts to specific departments. Against these allotments the charges for printing for the specific department is made. In addition there was usually carried in bills for departments specific appropriations for printing out of which payments were made direct to the Government Printing Office for such printing, and in addition there was scattered all through the bills for the departments items of appropriations a part of which were available for printing work at the Government Printing Office. It has been impossible to tell under this system the amount of money actually available to the departments for printing purposes. As a result it is impossible to keep real control of appropriations for this purpose. In addition there was the added disadvantage to the Government Printing Office that it could never tell in advance how much work, in money, it would be required to do in a fiscal year. This necessitated keeping the employees of the Printing Office at a peak unnecessarily high in order to take care of jobs that might pile up on them.

Another disadvantage of the situation arose from the fact that the appropriations as now made are, so far as they relate to the department, not subject to the deficiency limitation, and it resulted very frequently in a large amount of business for the Government Printing Office at the latter end of the year when the Printing Office was not able to take care of it, and at the beginning of the next fiscal year the Government Printing Office would be confronted with a large carry over. The new arrangement will make the item for the Printing Office subject to the deficiency limitation so that the department will be required to allot the appropriation for printing to the four quarters of the year and consequently spread the expenditures out over the entire year and thus relieve the peak load of employees required to be carried at the Government Printing Office.

The present appropriation bill does away with the allotment method of making these appropriations and puts the entire Government on the basis of repay work. That is to say, it is expected that hereafter the appropriations for the printing of each department will be made in bills carrying the regular items for these departments. It is expected by that arrangement that the Printing Office items will be considered by the same men who consider the other appropriations, and who have a better knowledge of the requirements.

A difficulty arose in connection with putting all of this printing business on the repay basis in this way: These jobs are usually paid for after they are finished. In some cases, however, advances are made. As a result, it would happen that at the beginning of the fiscal year the Government Printing Office would have no funds with which to employ men and to buy material. In order to get around that situation we undertook to provide the Government Printing Office with a working capital, representing the amount which is ordinarily appropriated for congressional printing. That appropriation has averaged about $2,000,000 a year. We have simply made that appropriation as heretofore direct to the Government Printing Office with a provision which makes it a working capital which can be used for any printing until that printing is repaid by the departments as ordered.

Those are the three principal changes that have been made by the subcommittee and the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this bill.

In general, the committee followed the policy of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to increases in salary, and I think no increases in salary have been made, with possibly one or two exceptions which will be indicated in connection with the debate under the 5-minute rule. There have been some 13 additions to the pay roll, most of them in the Library of Congress, where the increases in the appropriation during recent years have been very small, and where the salaries are generally admitted to be below the average of salaries throughout the Government service, and where the work has been very much hampered by both inadequate salaries and lack of sufficient employees. The committee did not feel justified under the general policy of the administration and of the committee in granting increases in salary. We did provide a few additional employees in the Library of Congress to take care of additional work.

I should say, also, that some recommendations in the Budget estimates were made for increases in salary of the employees directly connected with the operations of the House. However, we did not feel that we could adopt a different policy with reference to our own employees than has been adopted with reference to the Government employees generally, and these increases in salary were consequently not allowed or carried in the bill. I think that completes everything that I have to say at this moment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that the estimate for the legislative drafting service was $30,000, and that the committee has carried the sum of $40,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. There was an error in making up the estimates. What happened, as I understand it, is this: The expenditures of the House end of the legislative drafting service last year were less than $10,000, I think, and the Clerk, without consulting the legislative service or anyone else, put the estimate in for the House end of the proposition at $10,000. The Senate estimate came in at $20,000, making a total of $30,000. It so happens that under the law the total sum is divided equally between the House and the Senate. This would give $15,000 to the House and $15,000 to the Senate, and the Senate's pay roll at the present moment is more than $15,000; so that the appropriation, even assuming no additional force on the House side, would not be sufficient to take care of the expenditures.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that during the pendency of revenue legislation or tariff legislation in the Senate the employees in the House end of the drafting service spend practically all of their time at the Senate, often sitting upon the floor of the Senate. Does the gentleman know whether that may account for the expense being a little less in the House end during this last year?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it does. I may say that the reason is substantially this: The number and the salaries of the employees on the House side is under the control of the Speaker of the House. The Speaker has not felt that the requirements of the service were such as to justify the full expenditure of $20,000 on this side.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Speaker is correct in that. I am wondering how it is, if that is so, with the Senate having a drafting service of its own, it is necessary for the House service to spend so much of their time over there, when there are other committees of the House that might need the service.

Mr. ANDERSON. I presume the reason is that in connection with revenue bills on this side the drafting service in the first instance gathered a good deal of information at first hand, which is of very great value to the Senate.

Mr. MANN. And then, besides, the Senate is much more in need of a drafting service than is the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. The figures would indicate that.

Mr. WALSH. The need may exist, but I can not see that any benefit has been derived from the operations of the drafting service at the other end of the Capitol. We still have to contend with what they are doing over there when measures come back here.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think this is a very valuable service. I have had occasion to use it a good many times and have found it a very useful and a very valuable service. I think every chairman of any committee who has ever had anything to do with the legislative drafting service will testify to the same thing.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I most heartily agree with the gentleman from Minnesota. In my judgment, the preparation of these very technical and difficult revenue and tariff bills would have been practically impossible had we not had the benefit of this drafting service.

Mr. WALSH. Before we had the legislative drafting service we used to pass income tax laws which permitted the issuance of blanks that the ordinary individual could understand. Since we have had the drafting service we have passed an income tax law that it takes a lawyer to understand and blanks have been issued that no lawyer can understand.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I regret that the gentleman is unable to make out his income-tax return, but I do not think that that is the fault of the legislative drafting service.

Mr. WALSH. I am citing that. It may be a mere coincidence.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So far as my experience in the House is concerned, the tariff and revenue bills of the past were almost childishly simple as compared with what they have been of late years.

It needs an expert, and the ablest man in the House or the Senate can not sit down and draft in a moment these very complicated and technical paragraphs which takes years of experience in practice.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is an expert opinion from a member of the Ways and Means Committee that is responsible for this.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] is the ranking minority member of the subcommittee which prepared the pending bill and gave it his very close attention, both in the hearings and in the preparation of the bill, and would have control of the time and of the bill on the Democratic side if he were here. The gentleman from Massachusetts is one of the very able and zealous Members of the House, and I am sure we all regret that on account of his illness and confinement at the Walter Reed Hospital he will be unable to be here to-day and participate in its consideration. He had prepared some remarks which he had expected to deliver when this bill was taken up, and I wish to ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the Record in the regular 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the remarks referred to may be inserted in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, as compared to the estimates of other departments of our Federal Government, the appropriations in this bill which we are about to consider are indeed modest. The first establishment of government here was for legislation, for lawmaking; and this House is the oldest part of our Government, which began its functioning before the adoption of the Constitution. Congress is often called extravagant in its expenditures for its own convenience and for better facilities for investigating and preparing laws. Every other month we are accused of being wasteful of the people's money when some new item now and then appears in an appropriation bill for Congress itself. Yet the items in this very bill to pay the salaries of Senators and Representatives, officers and clerks, mileage and countless other expenses which I will not enumerate, total in all but $7,984,756.75. We have cut down the cost of printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and all public documents, and have succeeded in our efforts at economy until, as you will observe, the Government Printing Office is allotted but $2,000,000 in this bill to pay for printing and binding for Congress. The Library of Congress, the greatest library in the world, is to cost but $951,955; and the Botanic Garden will be a thing of beauty for another year of our Lord at an expense of only $90,016. If you add to these sums the amounts allowed to the Architect of the Capitol, who has unusual expenses from time to time, the Capitol police, the Legislative Drafting Service, and the Joint Committee on Printing, you will get a sum total of a little more than $12,000,000, which the House is called upon to appropriate to maintain its legislative establishment for the fiscal year 1923.

I want to make some comparisons this afternoon between the sum total of this appropriation and the sums total of other appropriations already made for other governmental functions, some of which are newborn and, in the minds of many of us, hardly warranted.

For instance, the amount already approved by the Senate and the House for 1923 for enforcement of prohibition is $9,250,000. No other department of the Government receives any specific sum for this purpose, but I want you to remember that an immense amount of work falls upon our Customs Service for border patrol work and prevention of liquor smuggling, and no one has yet been able to estimate that cost annually. The work of the Department of Justice and the United States courts has been greatly augmented by the litigation resulting from this law. The number of cases pending in the courts at the beginning of the present fiscal year was 142,000, compared to 118,000 of the previous year. This was cases of all kinds. Again, I ask you to remember that no estimate can be made of the additional expense incurred on account of the trials of prohibition cases. It is fairly safe to guess, however, that the direct appropriation for prohibition enforcement of $9,250,000, plus the amounts to be expended by the Department of Justice and the Customs Service, will bring the entire cost to a figure not one dollar below that of the amount carried in this bill for the whole legislative establishment.

Why do I select the bureau which alleges that it is enforcing our nation-wide prohibition law? I will be happy to answer that question.

On January 16 last the second anniversary of nation-wide prohibition in the United States of America was celebrated by the present Prohibition Commissioner by the issuance of statements for the daily press in which, among a great many other boasts, he declared that the prohibition amendment was being enforced to a greater extent than had been anticipated and that the predictions of his opponents had not been borne out by actualities. This official unburdened himself in his declaration of so much nonsense that the adventures of Alice in Wonderland is infinitesimal compared to the remarkable career which Mr. Haynes alleges has been his own since he went on the job. Among other things he said that 17,500,000 out of 20,000,000 former drinkers have climbed the water wagon and are riding thereon. How does he know? Most everybody else knows that hard liquor can be had by anyone, anywhere, at any time—provided the price is paid. But if his statement was anywhere near the truth, his figures would certainly indicate that there was no further need of his office; and if the people are going dry in this most remarkable fashion, there wasn't any need to have appropriated $9,250,000 for Mr. Haynes to spend for "enforcement" during the next fiscal year. This Congress has been guilty of a national extravagance wholly unwarranted if the dry chief's assertions were facts.

Mr. Chairman, the prohibition unit is a novelty in our Government machinery, a fifth wheel in the executive department, revolving on its own axis and interfering with all the effective wheels to retard their motion and make uncertain the guidance. It is an expensive organization, with no well-defined functions. It entrenches on the functions of the Department of Justice, which has a Bureau of Investigation that was created to investigate all offenses against the laws of the United States and directs the work of the agents, whose compensation and expenses are paid from the appropriation, "Detection and prosecution of crimes." But we have here a prohibition unit which is a part of the Bureau of Internal Revenue and a part of the Treasury Department, and, instead of helping to collect revenue, it is spending more revenue than the whole Department of Justice in interfering with that department.

The prohibition commissioner demanded $10,000,000 to present to the Department of Justice cases to investigate and determine whether there is cause for prosecution. Like the old woman gossip, his function is to make trouble for the people and work for the Department of Justice. It is a good illustration that it costs more to interfere with other peoples' business than it does to attend to your own business. It is a Paul Pry in the Government, and Paul Pry's have never been popular with the people, either as private meddlers or Government meddlers. The prohibition unit—it might be called prohibition eunuch—having no legitimate functions of its own, has no other way of spending its appropriation than by interfering with the duties and responsibilities of other officers, Federal, State, and municipal, and, as is generally the case with meddling, its activities have no limit and its agents no responsibilities to the law. It is simply a band of mischief makers, and it has been evident from the beginning that it is entirely foreign to our Federal policies.

Last year the pay roll of the prohibition unit amounted to $792,340, and now it is to be swelled to several millions. Commissioner Haynes estimates his force at 3,674—he can only estimate, for he is adding butters-in so fast that he can not keep count of them. He has here in Washington himself at $7,500, an assistant commissioner at $5,000, a counsel at $5,000, assistant counsel at $4,500, and a special counsel at $4,200, making a total of $26,500 for chief administrators and counsel, not to mention their stenographers, clerks, janitors, and so forth. Then he has 51 State directors at from $3,000 to $5,000—and I will bet a red apple that the majority get the limit of $5,000—making a total of $250,000 for directors; 15 assistant directors at from $2,500 to $3,500, or $50,000 for assistant directors; 36 field administrators at from $3,000 to $5,000, amounting to $180,000; and 35 inspectors at from $2,750 to $3,300, amounting to $110,000. Here we have $650,000 for salaries of men who direct the work, and their traveling expenses are probably as much more, so that we have more than a million dollars to be spent on ornamental managers of this fund. That is largely political graft, and we might as well set it down so.

This is for the direction of the snoopers and spies who have to do the real work, the dirty work, for which men always have had to risk their lives, because the American people have no love for spies, whether they are followers of Benedict Arnold, the Anti-Saloon League, or any other order of spying.

What are these commissioners, assistant commissioners, counsel, assistant counsel, and special counsel, directors, assistant directors, administrators, and field directors doing while the real agents of the bureau are out looking for bootleggers and home brew? They are propagandizing if they are doing anything to earn their salaries, and the most ordinary investigator will prove the truth of what I say.

The present prohibition commissioner demonstrates his uncertainty as to his own duties by devoting more time to propaganda than to anything else. His press bulletins are like the dropping of leaves in autumn, and have made the propagandists that flocked to Washington during the armament conference regard themselves as mere pikers in their chosen profession. The only trouble with the prohibition commissioner is to find newspapers willing to print his daily interviews and prepared news. He rails at propagandists and is spending millions of dollars in propaganda. He charges that the brewers have subsidized the press and at the same time shouts that the press is a unit in support of the Volstead law and his agents. It is said that the great mass of the people in China believe that all the world beyond the Middle Kingdom is barbarous, and that the peasants of Russia believe that the Slav is the only human being who can talk. Commissioner Haynes should transfer his activities to China or Russia, for he has the same limitations as to knowledge of human nature and centers all conscience and all public morals in his bureau.

He held a conference with his State directors here in Washington at the same time the Anti-Saloon League held its "national convention." There might be an inquiry as to how many directors of the prohibition unit were also delegates to the Anti-Saloon League convention and had their traveling and per diem expenses paid out of the appropriation to enforce prohibition. The principal orator of the convention was the commissioner and he appears to have economized time and effort by holding a conference with his subordinates in the same hall with the convention where the delegates acted in the dual capacity of representing the Government and also the Anti-Saloon League. Another fifth-wheel demonstration.

This is a big country, and we do things in a big way, but in this enforcement of the Volstead Act we are asked to do something in a big way that we have for 140 years tried to minimize, if not suppress, the development of paternalism and graft. When the Volstead law was proposed it was to enforce itself, because we were told that all the people wanted it and would respect and obey it. Then as an afterthought our colleague from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] thought there should be a small appropriation to put the machinery in running order, but with the assurance that it would be a paying investment, just as good as Liberty bonds, because the prohibition unit would become a revenue producer instead of a revenue absorber, with fines and confiscations filling the Treasury more plentifully than from the old taxes on alcoholic liquors. I understand he has confiscated a lot of old jitneys which even Henry Ford will not buy for junk, and Henry is the biggest junkman in the world.

Congress made an appropriation of $5,000,000, and before the close of the first year the commissioner came back for a deficiency. Again, for this fiscal year we gave him $6,000,000, and he came back for a deficiency and got it, making his total appropriation $7,500,000. You gave him $9,250,000 for the next fiscal year without much protest, and, mark my word, the commissioner will come back for a deficiency before the year is closed.

That amount is called a very modest appropriation for the enforcement of the Volstead law, and I grant it, for the expenditure of $7,000,000 has not enforced the law, but has, through its administration, brought all law more or less in contempt. But we have other Government functions, some of them as old as the Government, which are still functioning in a way to bring credit on the whole country and place the name of the United States at the top of the column.

The State Department is the link between this Government and the world, and at the present time, under the direction of Secretary Hughes, that department is doing more than all other world agencies to heal the wounds of the Great War, limit armament, and assure peace to suffering humanity. Secretary Hughes in directing this great work sends in an estimate for $10,000,000 to pay the salaries and expenses of all our ambassadors, ministers, consuls, foreign trade agents, and conduct our foreign relations so as to keep Uncle Sam in his present place as first citizen of the world.

Commissioner Haynes asked us to give him the same amount—ten millions—to spread the doctrine of discontent, the doctrine of the bolshevist of Russia at home, and interfere with the amicable relations which Secretary Hughes has been trying to seal with all the rest of the world. Maj. Haynes appears to be one of those disturbers in the country who does not know that the war is ended and militarism has taken a holiday, for he wanted ten millions to arm his sleuths and encourage them to exercise war powers and enter our places of business and homes without a search warrant, to hold up on the street any man or woman going home with Saturday shopping or carrying a bottle of grape juice to a church sociable. Commissioner Haynes insisted that his estimate was modest, and so are all estimates for war, and Haynes is at the head of the only army that has not gone on a peace basis but is preparing a military campaign. He will not ask for marines, however, because marines are not grafters and cowards.

Maj. Haynes wanted ten millions to meddle with the private affairs of the people as did the Czar of Russia in the days of the Black Watch, which brought revolution and sovietism to that great empire and starvation to the people whom we are now trying to save.

Some people think our Presidents are extravagant with $75,000 salary, house rent free, and other luxuries, but the whole estimate for the executive department proper was $227,000, while Maj. Haynes demanded nearly forty times as much for misrepresenting the Executive in prying and snooping through the land and holding up innocent men and women and sometimes killing them because of the natural suspicion of the spy of all other people on the face of the earth.

Secretary Mellon sent us an estimate of $11,550,000 to pay for the Customs Service, which manages our foreign imports and collects the revenue, but Haynes demands ten millions to cut off such revenues. The Secretary recommends ten millions to run the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which makes our money and prints our Government bonds and certificates, but Haynes wanted the same amount to find out how every man spends every dollar he earns. The Secretary estimates $11,000,000 for the support of the Coast Guard, to pay the brave men who patrol 10,000 miles of coast, rescue wrecked mariners, and save ships and cargoes, but Haynes demanded almost as much money to pay an army to hunt down the people in their homes and see what they have in their larder and cellar.

The Public Health Service requested $11,500,000 to fight epidemics and protect the health of the people, but Haynes begged for ten millions to interfere with the doctors, hold them up on their errands of mercy until they show that they have no alcoholic stimulant in their saddle bags to minister to dying men without a regular permit from the prohibition unit.

We are accused of extravagance in public buildings, but the estimates for public works is nine millions, and Haynes demands ten millions to take charge of our private homes and treat them as public places if not public works. The soldiers' homes want $5,582,000 to care for the veterans of our past wars, but Haynes wants twice as much to see that the old soldiers do not spend a nickel of their pensions for anything stronger than one-half of 1 per cent. We have established national cemeteries for our soldier dead in this country and in France, where the graves are hallowed by the supreme sacrifice, and the War Department estimates the cost of caring for these soldier cemeteries at $6,673,000, but Haynes wants ten millions to transfer the battle ground to this country and make war on all the people who fall under the suspicion of his spies.

The Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, and the national parks estimate that they will need about eight millions to conduct scientific experiments, investigate the mines, and establish safety devices to protect life, and to protect the great national playgrounds from the marauders and vandals who would destroy the wonderlands of the continent; but Haynes wants ten millions to send his marauders and vandals into the homes and the business places and playgrounds of all the people.

We are asked for $7,848,000 to support the lighthouses of our coast and keep the lights burning for the sailors to find their way to safe harbor, but Haynes wants ten millions to put out the lights in our homes and harbors. Irrigation is to cost $7,000,000, and Haynes wants ten millions to undo irrigation and make the land again a desert.

The whole Department of Labor is to cost $6,301,835 to care for the multiplied activities of that department, but Haynes wants ten millions to irritate and exasperate labor and make more difficult the work of Secretary Davis.

The Attorney General asks for $2,973,645 to prosecute all violators of the Federal laws, and the Federal courts, including the United States Supreme Court, circuit and district courts are to have $12,560,000 to try all offenders, but Haynes wants ten millions to make criminals to be tried in the Federal courts by the Attorney General, to clog the dockets of these courts with police court cases and compel Congress to authorize more Federal judges.

The Prohibition Commissioner is not exactly like Don Quixote, hunting windmills to fight. He builds his own windmills and divides them into separate armies to engage in windjamming. And he is something of a genius in his line. Being a newspaper man, he works both ends of the game. He gives out daily bulletins and interviews to the daily papers telling the people what great advancement prohibition is making and how popular it is. He also comes to Congress with a tale of woe.

In the bulletins and interviews the commissioner assures the country that the Volstead law is popular and enforcing itself without effort; that the State and municipal authorities are working in cooperation with him, and that there are only a very few violators of the law. Then he comes to Congress for more appropriations. The present force of prohibition officers is not able to cope with the desperate conditions and he needs more money to replace the men who have sacrificed their lives in an effort to enforce the Volstead law. To Congress the picture is presented of a whole population turned criminal and courts that refuse to convict, of corrupt attorneys, and juries in sympathy with the lawless bootleggers and moonshiners.

Which of these pictures is true? Neither. The great majority of the people of the country are law-abiding but not in sympathy with the Volstead law, and are violently opposed to some of the activities of the prohibition officers in the name of the law. The American people never were in sympathy with spies or even detectives, and they have treated spies as enemies wherever they discovered such characters. They will continue to regard spies as undesirable persons whether they spy for themselves, for corporations, or for the Government. They threatened to hang spies on Boston Common when they represented England, and they will continue to hate spies even when they claim to spy for Uncle Sam.

Don Quixote armed himself cap-a-pie and sallied forth on his good steed, Rosinante, and followed by his faithful squire, Sancho Panza, to fight windmills and rescue fair maidens from the giants who thus masqueraded. Commissioner Haynes has improved on the methods of Cervantes' hero, and with the same quixotic ideas modernized, he has armed himself with a typewriter to send his windjamming to the public, creating both cruel giants and brave knights-errant of rescue. Commissioner Haynes's windmills blow both hot and cold, wafting good news of great victories over giant evils, and frantic appeals for more legislative power to his good right arm to fight the giants who still defy the law and threaten the Constitution and the very life of the Nation unless we give him more money.

The commissioner's daily bulletins to the press picture the triumphant march of the Volstead law into the hearts of the people, who have learned to revere it as the ark of the covenant, and driving the fear of both God and the Government into the hearts of the bootleggers until they are fleeing to foreign parts or are suing for mercy in repentance; and then the commissioner comes to Congress with a tale of woe, wailing that the Constitution and the law are flouted by the people, the press, the police, the juries, and even the judges. To the press he gives assurance that there are no longer any opponents of the eighteenth amendment, no violators of the Volstead law, no more bootleggers or moonshiners, and that the reports to the contrary are but the seditious propaganda of the brewers, who are plotting to overthrow the Republic. But to Congress he intimates that the whole people have turned criminal and the law is in danger if we do not give him the last dollar in the Treasury and a mortgage on the debt owed us by the foreign Governments. To the press he gives out the happy news that in every part of the country the State and municipal authorities are heartily cooperating with the Federal prohibition agents and there is the utmost harmony in upholding the Volstead law. To Congress he says that his men are opposed and even killed in trying to do their duty, while State officials, city police, prosecuting attorneys, and courts give aid and comfort to the enemy.

Commissioner Haynes's windmill is a double back-action machine which wafts the breezes of heaven whichever way he wills, for weal or woe, as he desires to impress the public with the success of his administration or Congress with his urgent need of more money. Great is the Volstead law, and Haynes is its prophet!

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue reports that at the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1921, there were 42,000,000 gallons of spirits in distilleries and bonded warehouses. Without the tax that liquor could be purchased by the Government for $20,000,000. In other words, the Government could purchase all the whisky in the country for what we have already spent in trying to prohibit its sale to the public, or what Commissioner Haynes asks to run his bureau or unit for the next two years. That would settle this prohibition question, for the Government would own and control all the legitimate liquor and the Internal Revenue Bureau could, as in the past, suppress the moonshiner. But does any prohibitionist, does Commissioner Haynes, or Wayne B. Wheeler recommend such a settlement? If they have, we have not heard of it. On the contrary, the radical prohibitionists are most bitterly opposed to the Government taking over this liquor, and their opposition is logical from their point of view. They have broken into the Treasury with several thousands of them on the pay roll, and they do not propose to let go the Government teat. They want $10,000,000 this year, and next year they will want more, for Commissioner Haynes says that his organization is still only a skeleton of what he expects to make it. If it takes $10,000,000 to support his skeleton organization, what will this prohibition unit absorb when it is clothed with flesh? Why, the doctors tell us that the skeleton is but a slight part of the weight of the body, and its power of consumption of food is nil, and so it will be with this prohibition skeleton; and when it is fat this ten million will be swelled into a hundred million, and still the beast will be yelling for more.

We have long heard the outcry against the Government being in partnership with the distillers and brewers to raise revenue by taxes on liquors which President Garfield said were the only volunteer taxes paid in this country, but the same people who conducted that propaganda are now trying and succeeding in getting into partnership with the Government in taking millions out of the Federal Treasury. They said it was an unpardonable sin for the Government to tax liquors, because the tax made the rum dealers partners with the Government by helping to support it. But they insist that it is legitimate for the Government to take the Anti-Saloon League into partnership in handling the revenues secured from taxation by contributing ten millions of it to members of the league who have secured their transfer to the Government pay roll. It may be, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Nelson] said the other day, an outrage to raise $500,000,000 revenue for a soldiers' bonus by a tax on beer, but I am sure the gentleman is ready to vote with his colleague, Mr. Volstead, for any appropriation that will take care of the Anti-Saloon Leaguers who are still waiting to get on the pay roll of the prohibition unit. This question of partnership with the Government appears to be like many other partnerships, one of personal desire. No group of American people have so persistently sought to get into partnership with Uncle Sam on the income side rather than the outgo side as the men who manage the Anti-Saloon League, and under the patronage of Mr. Volstead they have been mighty successful in getting their hands into Uncle Sam's pocket.

Gentlemen, you have created a Frankenstein which already has you by the throat and wrings appropriations from you at will. You realize that this $10,000,000 is to support a pension roll for the most persistent and presumptuous grafters that ever appeared before Congress, but you are already afraid of the monster and will continue to appropriate whatever it may demand until the American taxpayers rise up and clear the Augean—I beg pardon, the Anti-Saloon League—stable into which this House has been converted. And I believe that the time is not far distant when the American people will go to the polls and demand that Congress shall make good its promise of economy in all branches of the Government, not only reduce appropriations for legitimate functions of government but stop this waste of money in feeding an illegitimate child of Federal power more hateful to the great majority of the American people than any war powers ever used by any of our Presidents when we were engaged in war. You hesitate to pass a bonus bill for the boys who went into the trenches to fight the German autocracy, but you will vote to appropriate millions to pension a lot of men who remained at home during the war to plot against the legislative power of Congress and dictate to you how the taxes are to be distributed and how they may interpret the law for the administrative branch of the Government, regardless of the enactments of this body. Your Frankenstein has in two years taken possession of your votes, if not of your souls, and it will continue to delve its arms into the Treasury until the voters next November show you that they have no fear of the monster and do not propose longer to be represented on this floor by cowardice when it comes to appropriating their tax money to an army of political pap suckers.

The Prohibition Commissioner assures us that he has appointed only good, moral men, recommended by ministers of the Gospel and temperance people, to do this work of enforcing the Volstead law. When we place this assurance against the record of some of the inspectors and agents that the commissioner has in the field it seems like a serious reflection on the judgment or the honesty of the ministers and temperance people who vouched for the character of the inspectors and agents who have searched homes without a warrant, have killed men on mere suspicion, have trafficked with bootleggers, and have acted like very ordinary lawless men in the name of the law.

The activities of the Prohibition Commissioner are not confined to official duties in enforcing the Volstead law, notwithstanding his request for $10,000,000 to pay his official agents. He is said to be organizing vigilance committees of private citizens and giving them semiofficial status as "dollar-a-year men" to act as informers. We had some experience with dollar-a-year men during the war, for many of them used their semiofficial positions to secure Government information to aid them in advancing their own business, and that might be one of the results of this new scheme of the Prohibition Commissioner, with bootleggers informing on other bootleggers to get rid of rivals and punish too successful competitors. But the suggestion that the Government aid and father vigilance committees is something new in this country and entirely outside of Government activities.

Commissioner Kramer invited the clergy to aid in enforcing the Volstead law by acting as informers on the members of their congregation, and Commissioner Haynes invited the public school-teachers to take up the same work, but both the clergy and the school-teachers rejected the invitation of turning informers as one that would bring upon them the suspicion of playing the spy instead of teaching the ways of upright and open manly communications to their pupils. These efforts to organize bands of informers to assist the official informers all contradict the assertions of the friends of the Volstead law that it is being observed by the great majority of the people, for any law that must be enforced by organized and unorganized informers, official and unofficial spies, can not win the respect of the people. These efforts are a confession of failure on the part of the prohibition unit just as its demands for more money is a confession of failure.

We have tried this experiment of forcing prohibition on the people for two years, and the one appreciable development has been in the cost of the enforcement. I know that Mr. VOLSTEAD, the Prohibition Commissioner, and Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler almost daily assure us that the law is being enforced, but we also know that the Doweyites out in Zion City, Ill., continue to assure us that the earth is flat just as did the cave men many thousand years ago; and I have just as much confidence in the statements of facts presented by VOLSTEAD, Haynes, and Wheeler as I have in the Doweyites who still assert that the earth is flat; no more. They are all dwelling in the cave-man consciousness that the saying of it makes it so. The records of the courts, police departments, and the prohibition office all deny that prohibition is or can be enforced upon all the people.

While the arrests for drunkenness never measure its mischief, they tell an important story. Consider these figures:

The licensing board in Boston states that in July, 1919—the first month of Federal prohibition—the arrests for drunkenness numbered 669. Last July the number was 2,700, a trifle more than four times as many. Those 669 arrests in July, 1919, were about 13 per cent of the average July arrests for the last four years of open liquor selling. The arrests in July, 1921, were almost 52 per cent of the same earlier average.

The director of the food and drug division of the Massachusetts State Board of Health reports that during the year ending with last month authorities of 124 cities and towns of the Commonwealth brought in for analysis 3,831 samples of "hooch" as against only 1,429 submitted by 50 municipalities the year preceding. In part, of course, this increase of 268 per cent indicates merely an increased vigilance, yet the number of "hooch" makers is, of course, increasing. Between the thirst for alcoholic drinks and the thirst for profits illicit brewers and distillers will take up every inch of slack that Federal enforcement leaves.

If other data were needed, they could be found in reports from institutions maintained for the reclaiming of inebriates. After a few months of Federal prohibition some of these havens found themselves almost out of business. But not all have been able to shift their operations to less painful duties. The Washingtonian Home on Waltham Street, in Boston, established in 1865, reports that the number of patients it has admitted in 1921 shows such an increase over 1920 month by month that while all admissions for 1920 totaled 410, last year up to October 31, the total number had reached 559.

The number of cases in September last were within two of the highest number ever received in a September.

My contention is that it is not attempted to enforce the Volstead law upon the great majority of the people, those who have influence which the prohibition officers respect or of which they are afraid.

I represent in part a State where we still venerate the Pilgrims for the great venture they made and the development of a great nation from that venture. And in considering our strenuous efforts at reform by law, I have been led to reread a part of the chronicles of Gov. Bradford, which were some years ago discovered in London and presented to the State of Massachusetts and published under the title of "History of the Plymouth Plantations." I wish some of our present-day fanatics could read that book. In that great experiment of colonizing a peculiarly devout and religious people where careful selection was made of the immigrants to insure a harmonious settlement which could live under one code of morals, it was hoped to demonstrate that human nature could be controlled by statute. The Plymouth colony was said to be homogeneous and capable of direction in the paths of virtue and righteousness by its leaders, just as Mr. Volstead feels competent to lead in moral reform to-day.

But after 23 years of the experiment Gov. Bradford became pessimistic and in 1642 he wrote in his chronicles:

Marvelous it may be to see and consider how some kinds of wickedness did grow and break forth here in a land where the same was so much witnessed against and so narrowly looked into and severely punished when it was known; as in no place more or so much that I have known and heard of; insomuch as they have been somewhat censured even by moderate and good men for their severity in punishments. And yet all this could not suppress ye breaking out of sundrie notorious sins (as this year gives us too many sad precedents and instances), especially drunkenness and uncleanness.

And here Gov. Bradford recites a list of crimes which I can not read on this floor or print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD without violating the postal laws as well as the rules of debate here. But the governor proceeds:

I say it may justly be marveled at, and cause us to fear and tremble at the consideration of our corrupt natures which are so hardly bridled, subdued, and mortified; nay, can not by any other means but ye powerful work and grace of God's spirit. But—beside this—one reason may be, that ye devil may carry a greater spite against the churches of Christ and ye Gospel here by how much ye more they endeavor to preserve, witness, and strictly punish the contrary when it ariseth either in church or commonwealth; that he might cast a blemish and stain upon them in ye eyes of ye world who use to be rash in judgment. I would rather think this than that Satan had more power in these heathen lands, as some have thought, here in more Christian nations, especially over God's servants in them.

Then Gov. Bradford becomes philosophical and writes:

Another reason may be that it may be in this case as it is with waters when their streams are stopped or dammed up, when they get passage they flow with violence and make more noise and disturbance than when they are suffered to run quietly in their own channels. So wickedness here more stopped by strict laws and more nearly looked into so as it can not run in a common road of liberty, as it would and is inclined, it searches everywhere and at last breaks out where it gets vent.

Ever since the days Gov. Bradford tried to curb and confine human nature by statute there have periodically risen up fanatics who try the same experiment notwithstanding the growth and development of liberty in the old Commonwealth, which became the model for this greatest of nations. I commend Mr. VOLSTEAD to Gov. Bradford's confessions of 300 years ago, and I am more constrained to follow Bradford, whose real work, not his fanaticism, has stood for 300 years than the modern imitators of his failures who have not learned that the old founders of the Plymouth Colony recognized the error of their ways and builded a Commonwealth which is to-day recognized as the cradle of liberty—or was until Congress cringed before the fanatics of the Anti-Saloon League and enacted the Volstead law and the Willis-Campbell law. I believe that history will repeat itself and the people will as surely compel you to repeal this law as they compelled the repeal of the Blue Laws of New England and other foolish attempts to regulate the natural rights of man as to food and drink and control of the home without interference from the officers of the law.

There have been two years of prohibition. All that time those who wanted the Volstead act have had their own way. They have had an amount of power committed to their hands such as was never before intrusted to the exponents of any moral, social, or economic theory. They have had an amendment incorporated in the Constitution. At their behest, legislation has been enacted which went far beyond the restrictions of the constitutional amendment. Bone-dry prohibition has been backed up by unrestrained police ascendancy, by denial, as in New Jersey, of trial by jury, by colossal sums of money, and by a standing army of spies. Localized rigor and suppression have proved themselves rivals of national rigor and suppression. States and cities, as well as the Federal Union, have been caught in the meshes of Volsteadism.

And in all candor and sadness, I ask every man who means to be square with himself, sincere prohibitionists included, whether the conditions for the last two years have been anything but straight hell? An economic-social orgy such as the planet had never before seen, has swept this country. The debauch is going on, and is getting worse. Isn't it time to make an end of the tragic farce? Honest, now, isn't it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take but a very few moments of the committee's time for the purpose of calling attention to a House resolution which I have just introduced, and in order that the House may know just what is contained in the resolution I ask the Clerk to read it in my time for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution.

Whereas the press of the country has repeatedly carried statements from the Director of the Budget that great economies have been made through the operations of the Bureau of the Budget; and

Whereas the President of the United States has recently been quoted in the newspapers of the country as having declared that through the operations of the bureau a direct saving of $32,000,000 and an indirect saving of $104,000,000 has been effected in the last six months; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Committee on Appropriations requests of the President and the Director of the Budget for a deficiency appropriation of $180,704,281, which it is declared will be needed in addition to the appropriations already made by certain permanent Government activities for the current fiscal year; and

Whereas the Director of the Budget in discussing this deficiency has stated, "Were it possible to spend all of this money during the current fiscal year, the information now at hand indicates that reduction in expenditures under other appropriations will offset any such increase"; and

Whereas if such savings have actually been made, as alleged, an appropriation to cover this deficiency can be avoided by a transfer of such savings for that purpose; and

Whereas both the President and the Director of the Budget have announced such alleged savings only in the most general terms and have not indicated in what way or in what departments or independent establishments of the Government they have been effected: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House in what way these savings have been made and from what particular appropriations heretofore made by Congress, and in what specific amounts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced this resolution in the utmost good faith. There have been deficiency appropriations made for this fiscal year amounting to $156,000,000, in round numbers, and, as the resolution states, there is now pending before the Committee on Appropriations further requisitions for additional appropriations amounting to over $180,000,000. Whether these requests will be increased before the deficiency bill is taken up and finally passed, of course, I do not know, but it has occurred to me, and I am sure it will occur to other Members here, that if there has really been a saving to the amount indicated, and if this deficiency which is now being asked will be offset, as the Director of the Budget has stated, through savings from other appropriations made by the Congress, then it is highly important that we know in advance of the preparation of the deficiency bill where those savings have been effected. Of course if there are such balances in the Treasury which are not needed during the fiscal year, it will be possible to divert those balances and thus avoid the necessity of making another appropriation by way of a deficiency bill. If it is not a mere paper saving, if it is something more than a mere fanciful saving from the extravagances of the departments, which the Bureau of the Budget assumes it has prevented, certainly there ought to be no objection to the furnishing of the information called for by this resolution. We know, of course, that very naturally there have been savings, or at least there should be savings, due to the fact that the appropriations for the present fiscal year were made under estimates which were submitted more than a year ago, and since those appropriations have been made there has been a reduction to a considerable extent of the cost of material and the cost of supplies, and I dare say it has been found possible in many departments and independent establishments to dispense with employees which it was not anticipated more than a year ago could be dispensed with during this fiscal year. If no savings have been made, then the administration is subject to and is deserving of criticism. So I take it that naturally there are considerable savings that have been made, and the object of this resolution is simply to bring detailed information of such savings directly to the House in order that the House may have advantage of it when it comes to consider the deficiency appropriation bill. Unfortunately the numerous statements which have been made heretofore in regard to alleged savings and which have been published broadcast throughout the country have been in the most general terms. The country has not been told where those savings have been effected. The public were not given information just how they have been made and there has been no opportunity on the part of the country to analyze those claims of savings and see whether they are something more than mere paper savings or a mere hope upon the part of the Bureau of the Budget. We should know whether these declarations are founded on real facts or whether they are merely founded on a hope. I repeat, I offer this resolution in the utmost good faith, and I trust the committee to which it will be referred will report it to the House, and that it will be adopted in order that this information may be supplied. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to yield to some one?

Mr. CANNON. I have no requests, but I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have some requests, and I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, we are facing one of the gloomiest periods in the history of this country. The clouds of unemployment are lowering and millions of men and women all over the land are sorely troubled, knowing not what may be their lot on the morrow. The optimistic bravely whisper words of encouragement into the ears of despondent parents with the assurance that beyond yon cloud the sun still is shining; but the tortured breadwinner wants work and not poetic phrases. The situation is poignantly expressed in an article by Arthur Woods, chairman of the committee on civic emergency measures, President's conference on unemployment, former chairman of the National American Commission of the American Legion, which appeared in the American Legion Weekly under date of February 3, and from which I quote:

"There is not one jobless ex-service man in Louisiana, the American Legion employment bureau of that State having found work for every veteran seeking employment."

This is a telegraphic item which has been going the rounds of the newspapers throughout the country for a number of weeks. I hope it is true. Probably it is approximately the healthy condition of affairs as far as the ex-service man in the State of Louisiana is concerned—of this I have no doubt.

But such is not the happy situation of his comrades in arms who dwell in other parts of the Union for which he fought and bled, shivered and starved, taking his life in his hands day after day at $1 per. Let us see.

The plight in which so many ex-service men find themselves to-day is the plight of the country's workers as a class. Our industries are not functioning as they should; therefore the men who feed the fires and turn the wheels and ship the goods and keep the books have no work to which they may go. The United States is in the throes of industrial depression. Times are hard and work is scarce. Winter is with us, and while the prospects for spring are encouraging, the man who has worked this week may find his name dropped from the pay roll next time a cut is made.

These unemployment problems are the surface symptoms of an internal disorder. To a very large extent they are due to the fact that our tremendous industrial organization, expanded and built up to meet extraordinary demands of the outside world during the war, now faces a situation where this outside demand has ceased, largely due to lack of money to buy or credit to open an account and lack of power to consume.

Now, what are we doing about it? What is the Legion doing about it?

There's many a hard-bolled human in this country to whom sentiment and patriotism do not appeal. The fact that to-day's jobless man worked yesterday for him in France means nothing. On the other hand, consider the splendid company of high-minded, large-hearted, appreciative employers who would gladly put the ex-service man to work; but they have no work. There is scant demand for the manufacturers' product. Their mills are working on part time or not at all, and because they are not enjoying a normal production the railroad man is laid off; the bookkeeper has no items to enter in his ledgers; the shipping clerk finds no invoices to make out; the truck driver gets no goods to deliver; the bank clerk's services are not in demand because deposits are falling off; and the butcher, the baker, and the corner grocer consequently find their trade cut in two and no need for helpers. It is a vicious wheel of depression and unemployment.

So, I ask, what is the Legion doing to put a spoke in this wheel? In a general way I think I can answer this question. Questionnaires were sent out to all the 11,000 posts last autumn. Based upon the figures received it was reported to national headquarters of the Legion that the condition is most critical in the large cities rather than in the country or in the smaller communities, and, generally speaking, it seems to be worse in the East than through the Middle West and West. I quote now from the telegram sent by the former national commander of the American Legion, John G. Emery, to President Harding on September 30 last, just before the gathering of the President's conference on unemployment, of which I am a member and chairman of the emergency committee:

WARREN G. HARDING,

President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to report that the American Legion committee on unemployment has to-day committed the Legion to the task of caring for the 900,000 jobless service men. We desire to cooperate with your committee and have placed the responsibility directly upon the 11,000 Legion posts of the country to see that our buddies get employment. The soldier wants work, not charity. Industry is the basis upon which we shall see that he gets food and shelter.

JOHN G. EMERY,
National Commander.

As a matter of fact the unemployment situation is as serious and acute in New Orleans among wage earners generally as it is in the larger cities in the Union. Ponder over this startling and mournful statement. Nine hundred thousand men who were willing to go through hell to serve their country only a few years ago are without employment to-day—and that means, perhaps, without bread in the near future—and millions of their fellow workers, women who have to earn their living by toil and men who could not serve in the Army or Navy on account of advancing years, walk the streets of our big cities agonized and helpless in the face of the most fearful calamity that has ever befallen our agricultural and business interests. What a tragic commentary on a civilization that can boast of the wonders that have been accomplished in the fields of art, architecture, engineering, and science generally—

Man's imagination has conceived all
Numbers and letters, all tools, vessels,
And shelter, every art and trade, all
Philosophy and poetry and politics.

But has not yet given to the world a cure for the most dreadful malady that has ever cursed the human race—poverty, penury, and want. The glory that was of Greece, the grandeur that was of Rome, may be claimed by a country which is powerless to remedy or prevent a situation which threatens the very existence of millions of its devoted sons and daughters. Government and all of the other agencies through which the Nation functions and expresses itself are honestly and sincerely looking and trying to find, if not a remedy, at least a palliative. God grant they may find the relief for those who cry for bread, for when Government and other human agencies fail us we are driven to the hope that lies in religion and instinctively we cry out, "God help us!" But God helps those who help themselves, and help ourselves we shall. American toilers in country and cities may have their backs to the wall, but they are neither down nor out. It is the fearful virulence of the malady at this time, a malady that has been insidiously dragging the people down to prostration through years, that will cause us not only to find a palliative but a remedy also for this disease of unemployment and all it means—anguish at the suffering of loved ones, tortured minds, and that slow physical and mental disintegration called starvation. The rehabilitation of the whole country and the restitution of agriculture and the industry of the Nation must and shall be accomplished, for self-preservation is the first law of nature and governs nations as well as individuals; and both the Nation and the individual desire to live. To conquer the disease we must find its cause and remove that cause. The utterances of three of the foremost men of this country throw a flood of light on the origin of this frightful disease that is making our America look thin and gaunt to-day. Listen to these words, words that should be preserved by Americans who love their country and wish the ship of state to weather every gale and steer safely between the whirlpools and the rocks which threatens every nation, which functions for the rich and the great, the powerful and the strong, and is unmindful of the cry of the masses who desire to live their lives free from the terror and horror, inspired by these hundred-headed, hundred-headed monsters, poverty and famine. Listen to the great Republican orator, ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, who addressed the Senate recently in flaming words inspired by the Biblical warning, "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind."

For 50 years the world has been drifting, and this country especially, into the condition in which it now finds itself. A half century ago there was in the United States an approach to equality of opportunity. Some were richer than others, but there was an unlimited scope for achievement through labor, invention, and enterprise. Business was organized in small units. Competition prevailed in industry.

The credit of the nation was diffused throughout the entire country and was administered locally, so that all those who were of good character and had reasonable security to offer could obtain the relatively small amounts of capital which they needed to carry on their enterprises.

THE COMING OF MONOPOLY.

But, sir, during the last half century a great change has come about. Industry, commerce, and finance have taken on monopoly forms. Monopoly interests have acquired control not only of the major industries but of raw material, of fuel, of transportation, and of credit.

During these years feeble and pitiful attempts to prevent the growth of these monopolies, or to control them after they were established, have been made from time to time, but any critical review of the cases which were started under the so-called Sherman Act will force the unbiased mind to the conviction that there was never downright sincerity behind the prosecutions.

The unorganized people, with their attention constantly distracted by false issues or betrayed by false leaders, have thus far been defeated in their contests with organized wealth.

WHY THE PEOPLE HAVE FAILED.

The secret of this failure, in my opinion, lies chiefly in the fact that the people as a whole have been unable to comprehend what the powers of wealth learned long ago. These monopolies and exploiters early discovered that the road to economic profit and power was through the control of government.

They knew that a man may labor all his life with his hands or his brains and have less at the end of his life of industry and frugality than he had at the beginning. But they learned that by the use of the Government, the use of the State to create special privileges, wealth beyond measure can be amassed within a few years.

For that purpose they have always been zealous to secure and maintain control of the machinery of government—control of the presidency, control of the United States Senate, control of the House of Representatives, control of Cabinet appointments.

While the minds of the people were diverted by sham battles over inconsequential issues the powers of wealth have spared neither trouble nor expense to insure that their servants should be in control of the powers of government.

LEVY TRIBUTE TO EVERYONE.

These privileges enabled those who possessed them to levy tribute on everyone else. They collected pennies, dimes, and dollars from the millions, and by so doing accumulated billions for the few.

This they accomplished in a variety of ways, but chiefly by legislation relating to the great fundamental economic processes, of which the greatest are transportation and credit.

The war completed the enthronement of the profit taking, privileged, imperialist group. They found they possessed a power greater than they had ever fully realized, and they used it during the war and in the years immediately succeeding the war as they had never dared to use it before.

Thus the economic state and the political state have become so merged that to-day they can hardly be distinguished.

Those who are nominally in control of the political Government dare not make a move without first consulting those who rule the economic world; and the exercise of their power has been made manifest on this floor time and time again, and they have been forced time and time again to abandon or reverse their most sacredly pledged policies when their financial masters so directed.

INEQUALITY OF WEALTH.

Through this process of accumulative monopolization and profiteering there has been created in the United States an inequality in the distribution of wealth which is without parallel in the history of the world.

This inequality in the distribution of wealth, produced primarily by special-privilege legislation, is in itself a prime cause for the unending cycle of panics and depression with which this Nation is afflicted.

This is how the process is worked: During the period of high prices and apparent prosperity the small properties which the people have acquired by their industry and thrift are mortgaged on the basis of the inflated value of the dollar in order to provide the working capital which they need to carry on and expand their enterprises. Such mortgages are placed upon the farm, the small factories, and the stores of the tradesmen.

PARALYZING EFFECT OF DEFLATION.

In the meantime prices inevitably advance faster than wages and several times as fast as salaries. The point is thus soon reached where the amount of commodities which can be purchased by the people appreciably declines, and there is no longer a market for the full output of industry. Then comes deflation.

Loans on farms, factories, stores, and homes are foreclosed, and those who control the credit of the Nation come into possession or control of the properties which have been given as security for the loans. Thus financiers become the residuary legatees of the Nation's distress.

Now, give ear to the words of one of the greatest men in public and private life that America has ever produced from the time that Columbus touched our shore to this very hour, one who has never faltered in his affection or allegiance to all of his countrymen, the brave and dauntless champion of the masses, CLAUDE KITCHIN, who in trumpet tones shouted to the people of this land in the celebrated minority view of the revenue bill of 1921:

An analysis of the statistics contained in the detailed report as to corporation incomes and income and excess-profits taxes in the report of the commissioner for the calendar years 1917 and 1918—the 1918 report being the first and only one containing the details of corporate income and income and excess-profits taxes arranged in classes according to the amount of profits each class made—shows that 180 corporations making annually from $5,000,000 up to $300,000,000 and over (the steel corporation made over $500,000,000 net profits in 1918) had a net income of $2,554,000,000, and while paying only $203,000,000 income tax paid $848,000,000 excess-profits taxes, while the over 300,000 corporations making from nothing up to $100,000 net income yearly paid only $285,000,000 excess-profits taxes.

One thousand and twenty-six corporations, with a net income of $4,255,000,000, more than one-half of the total corporate net income of all the 317,559 corporations, while paying only $333,000,000 income tax, paid $1,422,000,000 of excess-profits tax; that is, paid over one-half, or nearly two-thirds, of the entire excess-profits tax, and $344,000,000 excess-profits tax more than the remaining 316,500 other corporations. At a glance one will see that the proposed proposition is one to relieve a few hundred of the biggest profiteering corporations in the United States, and not, as Secretary Mellon says, to unclog business. It also shows the small amount of income tax paid in proportion to the excess-profits tax paid. It further shows the conscienceless and exorbitant profits on invested capital they made, from 20 to over 50 per cent on the capital invested.

Of course, the excess-profits tax will not be as much hereafter as in 1917, 1918, and 1919, but the proportion between these big rapacious profiteering corporations and the balance of the corporations will remain the same, and, in fact, will be more in favor of the big corporations, for the reason that these corporations have a monopoly and can at will fix and keep up their prices. The 9,634 corporations making $250,000 yearly profits and over paid in excess-profits taxes $2,217,000,000, over five times as much as they paid in income taxes and about seven-eighths of the entire excess-profits taxes. The repeal of the excess-profits tax will relieve these few corporations of hundreds of millions of taxes wrung from the people by conscienceless profiteering, but will not relieve the more than 300,000 other smaller and weaker corporations as the Republicans would seem to think.

One will see at once that the more than 300,000 other corporations will derive but little or no benefit from the excess-profits tax repeal and the Government will be deprived of hundreds of millions of dollars, not four hundred and fifty millions, or less, estimated by the guessers at the Treasury Department, but much more than $600,000,000 annually, which the Government will sorely need.

An analysis of the returns as detailed in the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue since January 1, 1916, up to and including the present commissioner's report of July 12, 1921, will show that corporations in the United States made net profits from January 1, 1921, in round numbers, $50,000,000,000—to be more exact, $47,000,000,000. After deducting all the taxes they paid since January 1, 1916, income, excess-profits tax, and other war taxes, they have a clear profit left of $38,000,000,000, more than four-fifths of which was made by less than 10,000 corporations, and more than half of which was made by 1,026 of the big profiteering corporations, which includes the Steel Trust, the Bethlehem Steel Co., the Du Pont companies, the various Standard Oil companies, the coal combine, the Woolen Trust, the meat packers, etc. Let every Democrat and Republican bear in mind always that these same corporations were filling their coffers with these fabulous billions for the profits of their stockholders while our brave boys in France were spilling their blood for the protection and defense of their country.

Remember, too, that not a large stockholder or officer or director of one of the rapacious corporations ever faced a German gun, braved a danger, took a risk, made a sacrifice, or endured a suffering during the entire war, but remained at home in safety 3,000 miles from the danger line, and made the war and its resulting stress of their Government and the people an opportunity to plunder and profiteer upon both to the extent of these inconceivable billions, while our boys in France were being killed and their eyes being shot out and their legs and arms being shot off.

Next but not last, for I am not invoking their utterances in the order of their merit, for they are equally great, informing, inspiring, and patriotic declarations, but am calling them so that I can a tale unfold. Let me now quote from a celebrated address from one of the world's greatest scholars and orators, W. BOURKE COCKRAN, who in discussing the tariff bill said on July 14, 1921:

I can not believe that any system of taxation which allows the Steel Trust to collect revenues on a billion of water, on stock that it is not pretended represented, when issued, any property or thing of value except the right to levy tolls on the American people which the trust enjoys under a protective tariff, is a Democratic measure. If the dividends paid on that billion of water could be drawn from the ocean, from the rains of heaven, from any source except the toil and thrift of the American people, I might not object to it. But since every dollar that goes to pay dividends upon that monstrously fraudulent creation of watered stock is wrung from the labor of honest Americans, I can not recognize as Democratic any measure that sanctions continuance of such spoliation.

* * * This combination took two falls, or rather several falls, out of the American people, if I may use such an expression. First, manufacturers of the various products of steel organized themselves into a trust, or rather into a number of different trusts. One was called the Federal Steel Co., composed of several corporations. There was still outstanding a formidable competitor of this concern in the Carnegie Co. Then there was the American Bridge Co. and the American Tube Co., the American Steel & Wire Co.—a whole series of companies, each one of them itself a trust, formed by an amalgamation of several other corporations. And in each of these trusts water was the most extensive ingredient. Its proportion to actual property was about 2 to 1.

The late Mr. Morgan was active from the beginning, I think, in the Federal Steel Co. I know he was predominant in the American Bridge Co. and in the American Tube Co. Other gentlemen of kindred disposition, though not of equal renown, were active in the Steel & Wire Co. Under Mr. Morgan's persuasion and guidance all these concerns were brought together and joined with the Carnegie Co. in a new corporation owning property which, with the water already mentioned, had a nominal value of about $670,000,000, speaking in round numbers. To that volume of capital, already inflated, they added another $1,000,000,000 of pure water. If such an adjective can be properly employed to describe any feature of that transaction. For that billion of water there was absolutely no property whatever—not even a wheelbarrow—added to the assets of the steel company. But prices to consumers of steel were raised forthwith from about $18 a ton for steel rails to $27 or $28, and prices of all other steel products were raised in like proportion. The American people have been paying dividends on that billion of water ever since. Does my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] deny the accuracy of that statement? Yet this Steel Corporation, Mr. Carnegie stated under oath more than 10 years ago before the Committee on Ways and Means, needed no protection for any reason or purpose except to levy excessive prices on the American people.

* * * It is quite true that Mr. Carnegie had enjoyed the benefit of a protective tariff in former years. Indeed, he had been very urgent in demanding it for his industry. But we were not very much interested—at least I was not—in the necessity for protection several years before. What we were deeply interested in then was whether protection was needed in 1909 for production of steel, and the greatest and soundest authority upon that subject, giving the sources of his conclusions, said that nobody but one willfully blind would say protection was needed at that time. I do not think the gentleman from Michigan is willfully blind, but I do think that he is most unfortunately and perversely blind on every question that affects this most pernicious doctrine. I say this beside: If Mr. Carnegie had never testified, we have but to look at the prices the steel company has been charging ever since its formation to realize that it has exacted tribute from the American people equal to the dividends paid for many years on $1,000,000,000, and for this enormous exaction no return whatever has been made to the community that has been plundered. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And now, for nearly 20 years, that trust has grown and thrived until this water, which Mr. Carnegie thought worthless when it was created, has come to be worth over par, every dollar of its value extorted from the public. If the people contributing it did not suffer from the exaction, there might not be much cause for complaint. But what was the effect of these trusts?

Mr. Chairman, what is true of the Steel Co. is true of all other trusts. But aside from the profits they have yielded their managers—I do not say their stockholders, because the history of these concerns shows that stockholders have been plundered and the people oppressed with cheerful but rigid impartiality—what has been the effect of these trusts on the general welfare? Injurious to a degree that few realize; grievously injurious to our material prosperity. But, worse still, they have seriously corrupted the moral fiber of the country, as I hope to show before I conclude.

Instead of seeking to enlarge their profits by increasing the volume of production, which would have been for the general benefit, lowering the cost of living while at the same time increasing the demand for labor, which necessarily operates to raise the rate of wages, they have almost invariably preferred to obtain higher profits from restricted production, the obvious effect of which has been to diminish the demand for labor and correspondingly to depress the rate of wages.

High tariffs and the trusts, which are their spawn, have prevented the American laborer from reaching the standard of wages which, had he been left free to improve the opportunities extended to him by his Creator, he would most certainly have attained.

Do we, after these illuminating paragraphs in the historical exploitations of our country, have to wonder, do we have to ponder long, do we have to reflect upon the causes that have led to watered capitalization of our industries, gathering in and taking and stealing the lion's share of the wealth produced in our time, leaving to the hapless toilers in the country and in the city a position akin to that of Lazarus of old, who, in his rags and leprosy, begged for the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table? Do we have to marvel at railroad rates, which are the result of the extortionate charges demanded and secured for the steel, which is the largest factor in their equipment? The genesis of the Steel Trust is the genesis of a vast number of the 317,000 corporations doing business in this country. The bar sinister is across the escutcheon of a great majority of these activities. Their birth was tainted and tarnished with illegitimacy and their operations have not improved that status in many, many cases. "Water," to express good will or some synonymous phrase, forms a large part of the capital stock, and it is this water, which represents nothing of real value, nothing on God's green earth, nor aught in the waters below it, which expresses no service to God or man, that exacts toll from the American people in behalf of those few who hold it, while millions struggle for bread. Watered stock drawing the substance of the people, while flesh and blood agonize for the morrow. Millions are out of employment. But the hand of the oppressor is not withdrawn—aye, it is more heavily laid upon us.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Wait until I have finished. I do not know whether I am being purposely interrupted or not. I do not want to be rude to anybody, especially to the gentleman from Texas. I do not mean this for the gentleman from Texas, but if what I am saying does not set well on the stomachs of some Members they should withdraw or make answer on this floor in order that their comments might be of public knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. It is on the question of millions being out of employment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When I finish I will yield.

Listen once more, for ye shall know the truth, and the truth will make you free:

[Legislative Bulletin—People's Legislative Service.]

FEBRUARY 2, 1922.

PROFITEERING STILL RAMPANT—BIGGEST SHOE CORPORATION EARNS 21 PER CENT PROFITS ON WATERED STOCK IN 1921.

That profiteering in some of the main necessities of life is still rampant is indicated by the report of the profits of the Endicott-Johnson Corporation (the largest shoe manufacturers in the world) for the year ended December 31, 1921, made public to-day.

This report shows for the calendar year 1921 net profits, after fixed charges and Federal taxes, of $4,642,889. This is equivalent, after deducting preferred dividends, to $10.79 a share ($50 par value) earned on the $16,856,825 outstanding common stock. As the par value of the stock is only $50 per share, this means profits of 21.58 per cent on the common stock.

This compares with net profits of $3,150,441, or $6.43 a share on the common stock outstanding in the preceding year.

It is a matter of common knowledge in financial circles that the common stock of this corporation is heavily watered.

Furthermore, this greatly increased profit was earned on a smaller volume of sales than in 1920. Gross sales in 1920 were $74,970,000, but dropped in 1921 to $58,892,000, and yet the profits in the latter year were 50 per cent greater.

This will be of interest to farmers who find they have to pay the price of the entire hide for one pair of low-grade shoes.

It ought also to interest Attorney General Daugherty, who is making war on the retailers as the prime cause of high prices.

The above facts are taken from the annual report of the Endicott-Johnson Corporation, published in the Wall Street Journal of February 2, 1922.

BASIL M. MANLY, Director.

Keep in mind that the rapacity of this corporation is the rapacity of a great number of the 317,000 corporations that operate and do business from ocean to ocean. Keep in mind that the giants among them were relieved from their just obligation of supporting the Government which saved their civilization and incidentally preserved and fortified their fortresses and citadels of privilege, even while they were through their intellectual advocates shouting for a reduction of wages of American men and women who had borne the heat and burden of the day, whose children had died like dogs in the mud across the ocean that soulless creations might live and thrive in a land for which heroes died to make and keep free. Keep in mind that while their literary tools were crying for a reduction in the pay of those who had toiled with head and hand, money was demanding an increase in pay and insisting upon the repeal of the law that made them contribute to the country which had saved them and that protected the consuming public from their rapacity and greed. In order to bolster up their cry for a reduction in the pay of wage earners and to head off and confuse the public, the Nemesis which was scenting and taking to their trail, these artful dodgers shouted "Stop thief!"—stop union labor. Backed by a howling propaganda, this ruse has been in a measure successful. But their triumph is only momentary, for the American people may be fooled some of the time, but not all the time. Soon or late they will determine that it is watered stock which is the thief, and not union labor; that the open-shop cry is bunk and guff to throw the inquisitors off the track and to beat down organized labor first and all other labor subsequently, so that the wage earners of America shall be the servants and the hirelings of the rich and opulent, and the masses made vassals to an industrial and commercial autocracy which will control and direct the Republic while still preserving the name and form by which to delude the people.

Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to corporations legitimately and honestly organized and administered. Corporations honestly created and operated are necessary for the development and welfare of our country. Nor have I any envy for the rich man who has lordly estates. On the contrary, I have a lively admiration for the man who by honest labor and toil of head, hand, heart, and brain has accumulated a competence. America needs her rich, her honest rich men and her honest corporations, but she does not need either dishonest men or dishonest corporations, for they are enemies to their country and the general welfare. I will not stand silent while rich men and conscienceless corporations through intellectual minions endeavor to throttle and manacle and enslave labor. I will raise my voice here and on the hustings against any attempt to destroy one of America's greatest assets, the patriotic American Federation of Labor, which stands like a lion in the path of the bolsheviki and the anarchistic movements of which we have been warned time and again by the Department of Justice. Long live men like Judge Alton B. Parker, who recently informed the National Civic Federation that—

Organized labor has done more than any other agency to check the doctrines of Russian reds, I. W. W., and parlor socialists who threaten the stability of the United States Government.

He especially praised Samuel Gompers and his associates for upholding the United States Government, saying:

Search where you will over the world and nowhere will you find as here labor standing foursquare in opposition to every wind that blows against this Government.

Yes, we must protect and defend the American Federation of Labor, which stands heel to heel, and shoulder to shoulder, and heart to heart with the American Legion for this Republic. I am for the Federation as an American who wishes to see his country remain the land of the free and the home of the brave—not an imperial autocracy with a few thousand financial, industrial, and commercial institutions in absolute control of the destiny of the country, while our once bold and militant yeomanry are made retainers and vassals in the land of their birth and our city dwellers reduced to servitude and industrial slavery.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Can the gentleman give me five additional minutes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am for the preservation of the American Federation, because it is the great instrumentality by which American men and women have been able to secure even an approach to their share of the wealth they helped to create as toilers of the land. We must maintain our labor organizations and protect them, if necessary, in a fair wage, as that means a country free in fact as well as in name. Do not beat down labor by assisting its enemies by acts of omission or commission. Organized labor is America's greatest asset. [Applause.]

Now, I am ready to answer the question of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask this question: The gentleman spoke of the millions of men being out of employment, and he spoke of about 900,000 service men being out of employment, and if I understood what the gentleman was driving at he was arraying labor against capital. Would it not be better to bring labor and capital together and make them friends? I want to ask the gentleman what would this country do without capital? I hold no brief for capital, for I am the poorest man in the House, but in justice to the great Steel Corporation the gentleman spoke of, it is to-day employing 264,000 men and paying them an average wage of over $1,900, and those 264,000 satisfied employees last year bought 255,000 shares of stock of these companies.

If the gentleman's union clients, for whom he is speaking here so eloquently, would take the $78,000,000 which they pay every year into the union coffers as dues and initiation fees, and would buy stock with it, such as the employees of the Steel Trust did last year, it would not be long before they owned every railroad in the country and every public utility.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know that the gentleman meant exactly what the word "clients" usually conveys. I have no labor organization as a client, nor have I any other sort of client, as I do not practice law, now that I am a Member of Congress. The gentleman has said repeatedly on the floor of this House that he came from poor people, and at times I wondered why he was not zealous in behalf of those from whom he sprung. The Steel Trust does not need the speech he made here to-day in its behalf, though it is in line with many of his other utterances. I say that flesh and blood in America, that must fight and die, when necessary, for our country is entitled to a fair wage, rather than that these soulless corporations should wring millions and millions from watered stock, which is nothing more nor less than thievery. That is my answer to the gentleman.

Mr. NOLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas how much stock the common laborers in the Steel Trust could buy at 50 cents an hour? That is what they pay them.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman for his interrogatory. I like the gentleman from Texas. His viewpoint at times is exceedingly interesting and instructive. It is exceedingly in contrast, however, with what it ought to be here on the floor. I can understand that the fellow who never knew anything of the suffering and trials of the masses of this country should superciliously and arrogantly believe he possesses every virtue that those who are born less fortunately financially do not possess. I can understand the fellow who lays the flattering unction to his soul that he is to the manner born and obligated to defend and protect predatory wealth. I can understand and pity him. I can understand the attitude assumed here on the floor of this House at times by upstarts who would pose as the champions of big interests. But it is incomprehensible to me that a man should have started from the bottom and attained high position, and then forget and scorn the rungs of the ladder by which he made his ascent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, there is an overwhelming demand and an urgent necessity for the agricultural interests of the country to be represented on the Federal Reserve Board.

As the law stands to-day the board consists of five members, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency being ex officio members; the other five to be a "representation of the different commercial, industrial, and geographical divisions of the country."

The Senate on January 17 passed by a large majority a bill which is now pending before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, amending section 10 of the Federal reserve act, increasing the membership of the board to six and authorizing the appointment of an additional member so that due regard could be given to the agricultural as well as the commercial and industrial interests of the country. In plain language the amendment to the law simply means that the new member to be appointed by the President when the bill becomes a law is to be a farmer. I hope that the new member will not be a theoretical farmer or one who classifies himself as a farmer based solely on his ability to write lurid newspaper or magazine articles advising the farmers how they should farm, but an actual farmer—one who has cultivated or is now cultivating the soil; who is acquainted with the needs and hardships of the farmers of the country, with their trials and tribulations, the problems with which they are constantly confronted, their lack of credit facilities; and one whose every pulsation of his heart beats in harmony and unison with that great body of our citizenship which follows the noblest of all occupations—tilling the soil for a livelihood.

The passage of the bill by the Senate and its presence before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House is a severe accusation and indictment against the present board and its policies, for if fair treatment and wise business policies had been inaugurated and pursued, and agriculture in its varied and numerous branches had been properly cared for in the extension of credit such as the necessity demanded and such as should have been given in accordance with the creating act, the necessity of this legislation probably would not be so urgent.

The farmers of the country, as far as credit accommodations from the Federal reserve banking system were concerned, were willing to leave their cause in the hands of those whom they thought would protect their interests and in whom they had confidence; but, Mr. Chairman, since acts speak louder than words, since they were denied accommodations that were accorded to those in more favored occupations; since they, by the withdrawal of currency from circulation and the refusal to extend credit accommodations at a low discount rate, were forced to sell the products of their labor and that of their wives and children far below the actual cost of production; since deaf ears were turned to their pleadings and entreaties they to-day demand by this legislation that one of their own be made a member of this board that holds and shapes the credit of the Nation, so that in the future, as far as it lies within the power of one member of the board, no discrimination shall be practiced and credit accommodations shall be extended to save agriculture from such a depression as now confronts it. [Applause.]

The Federal reserve act and the board that governs its operation from the very beginning was looked upon as a harbor of safety in times of financial stress and storm; a refuge where business could seek shelter and assistance from depression. Little did the country dream or think that this harbor, with its placid waters, would become more turbulent than the storm-tossed billows on the outside.

In all the annals of this Government, from the very foundation down to this good hour, never before has any governmental agency or board or set of men wrought such havoc, destruction, demoralization, and stagnation to business as have the policies of this board. These policies which they have inaugurated and ruthlessly carried into effect dealt agriculture a cruel and heartless blow. In the West corn has become the fuel of the producer; in the South cotton is being forced upon the market at a price far below the actual cost of production; the hide of the cow will scarcely bring enough to pay for a pair of shoe strings for the herder; with millions starving throughout the world the grower of wheat is unable to make a living from its production, and as an evidence of the results of these policies they have left in their wake poverty and hunger, bankruptcy, suicides, and business chaos such as the country never before witnessed; almost equaling the devastation of war itself, to an extent that it will require 20 years or more for its recovery.

Mr. Chairman, it is well known that by the act creating the Federal reserve banking system every national bank was compelled to become a member. It was not discretionary as to whether or not they desired to join; the very letter of the act made it mandatory and each one had to subscribe to stock in the Federal reserve bank of their respective district in a sum equal to 6 per cent of the paid-up capital stock and surplus.

If any national bank within the district did not join and subscribe to the required amount of stock, it would forfeit all rights, privileges, and franchises granted to it by the national banking law. The act further provided that State banks and trust companies were eligible for membership under such rules and regulations as were to be promulgated by the board. Therefore State banks had the privilege of becoming members, but the act did not make it compulsory or mandatory. It was left to their option. Each State bank could determine for itself whether it desired membership.

In the act creating the system the territory of the United States was divided into districts and the States of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, southern Louisiana, southern Mississippi, and eastern Tennessee were placed in district No. 6. A Federal reserve bank was then located in Atlanta, Ga. The membership up to January 1, 1921, in the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta was 375 national banks and 87 State banks and trust companies, a total membership of 462 banks, yet there were over 800 State banks in the district eligible.

Mr. Chairman, shortly after the organization of the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta a determined and systematic campaign was inaugurated to induce the State banks that were eligible, particularly in Georgia, to become members. However, after much effort, no satisfactory results were obtained, as up to January 1, 1919, only 64 State banks in the entire district had joined.

Being confronted with practically a total failure, a most cowardly and sneaking warfare of the submarine character was declared on them. The governor and board of directors, acting as the agents and carrying out the well-laid and determined plans of the board, instituted a most insidious and dastardly attack on the 300 or more State banks in Georgia, as well as the banks in other States, which had not signified their intention of becoming members.

Their policy was to force State banks to become members or else go down in this ruthless warfare. No longer could a State bank remain independent; it either had to become subservient or else close its doors; it was either submission or destruction. Had this policy been permitted to run its course without the interference of the mandate of the Supreme Court the destruction and impairment of the 300 or more nonmember banks in Georgia would be too tragic to contemplate.

Let me briefly recount to you the method of warfare. The State banks were charging for the service rendered by them in paying checks drawn upon them at a distance and forwarded through the mail. This charge included the expense incident to the paying bank and a small profit. It was an important part of the income of these nonmember State banks.

The board determined to compel the nonmember banks to open a nonmember clearing account with the Federal reserve banks, and under their requirement they would be forced to maintain a much larger reserve than conditions justified, hence lessening the lending power of the State banks and destroying the remuneration for handling the checks drawn upon them. To successfully prosecute this warfare the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta systematically commenced to accumulate vast numbers of checks on the nonmember banks until they reached a large amount and then to cause them to be presented for payment over their counter in cash.

This, as can readily be seen, would have necessitated the nonmember banks carrying large amounts of cash in their vaults which would remain idle, and in turn lessen their lending power or else force a run on the bank. If any of the great corporations of the country had carried on so vicious and illegal a campaign against their competitors, the whole country would demand that they be punished.

There was no relief offered to the nonmember State banks from this destructive policy but the courts of the country to which they appealed, and in the case of the American Bank & Trust Co. et al. against the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion on May 16, 1921, by Mr. Justice Holmes, said:

The defendants say that the holder of a check has a right to present it to the bank upon which it was drawn for payment over the counter, and that however many checks he may hold, he has the same right as to all of them and may present them all at once, whatever his motive or intent. * * * But the word "right" is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most rights are qualified. A man has at least as absolute a right to give his own money as he has to demand money from a party that has made no promise to him; yet if he gives it to induce another to steal or murder, the purpose of the act makes it a crime.

A bank that receives deposits to be drawn upon by check, of course, authorizes its depositors to draw checks against their accounts and holders of such checks to present them for payment. When we think of the ordinary case, the right of the holder is so unimpeded that it seems to us absolute. But looked at from either side it can not be so. The interests of business also are recognized as rights, protected against injury to a greater or less extent, and in case of conflict between the claims of business on the one side and of the third persons on the other, lines have to be drawn that limit both. A man has a right to give advice, but advice given for the sole purpose of injuring another's business and effective on a large scale might create a cause of action. Banks, as we know them, could not exist if they could not rely upon averages and lend a large part of the money that they receive from their depositors on the assumption that not more than a certain fraction of it will be demanded on any one day. If without a word of falsehood, but acting from what we have called disinterested malevolence, a man by persuasion should organize and carry into effect a run upon a bank and ruin it, we can not doubt that an action would lie. A similar result, even if less complete in its effect, is to be expected from the course that the defendants are alleged to intend, and to determine whether they are authorized to follow that course it is not enough to refer to the general right of a holder of checks to present them, but it is necessary to consider whether the collection of checks and presenting them in a body for the purpose of breaking down the petitioner's business as now conducted is justified by the ulterior purpose in view.

If this were a case of competition in private business it would be hard to admit the justification of self-interest considering the now current opinion as to public policy expressed in statutes and decisions. But this is not private business. The policy of the Federal reserve banks is governed by the policy of the United States with regard to them and to these relatively feeble competitors. We do not need aid from the debates upon the statute under which the reserve banks exist to assume that the United States did not intend by that statute to sanction this sort of warfare upon legitimate creations of the States.

The very language of the decision above quoted is an indictment so emphatic and clear that the country marvels that after such a decision the men who sought to accomplish the ruin and destruction of the nonmember State banks are still permitted by the President, who has the power to remove the members for cause, to continue to direct the policies of the Federal reserve system.

What greater cause is required or demanded? The very language of the decision which the august tribunal used in declaring illegal the method of warfare on State banks surely furnishes ample and sufficient grounds, and in this connection let me read to you a part of a communication written by the distinguished editor of the Manufacturers' Record, Richard H. Edmonds, to Thomas J. Hamilton, editor of the Augusta Chronicle, of Augusta, Ga., which appeared in that paper on the 9th of January:

Many months ago I wrote to President Harding and said that so long as these men remained in office there would be no revival of confidence in the Federal Reserve Board and no important revival in business. Moreover, I added that if they were retained in office the Republican Party would be swept out of power, and I have reminded him that the recent defeat of the Republicans in State elections is only indicative of what will happen in the next congressional election, unless there is a radical change made by him in the management of the Federal Reserve Board and all Federal reserve banks, which have been guilty of the immorality of trying to break State banks, which did not agree to their par clearance methods. Under the act which created the Federal reserve system the President has the power to remove members of the board for cause. Surely abundant cause has been shown. It is up to President Harding, therefore, as to whether he will make this change and thus bring about a revival of confidence. President Wilson appointed these men. The mistake in the selection of men was made by him, but President Harding will make a greater mistake if, after seeing their disastrous work, he permits them to continue in office.

The one action which the agricultural conference called by President Harding through Secretary Wallace could take to advantage and really the only one needed would be to pass unanimous resolutions recounting what has been done, and demanding of President Harding the removal of every man on the Federal Reserve Board responsible for the management of that board during the last two years, and the removal of every officer or director of the various reserve banks responsible, directly or indirectly, for the warfare upon State banks.

The efforts of the board having been nullified by the decision of the Supreme Court, thwarted in its warfare of subservience or destruction, is now seeking to convince the country that the failure of the State banks to join the reserve system is the cause of the lack of credit accommodation and for that reason the agricultural interests of the South and West are in a deplorable condition.

In the Atlanta Constitution of Sunday, January 29, appeared an article reading in part as follows:

So much has been said about the agricultural interests not having received ample credit accommodations during the present crisis that the Constitution Saturday made inquiry of Gov. Wellborn as to the basis of such criticism and as to what cause he attributed the lack of greater facilities.

Gov. Wellborn stated that the main reason, in his opinion, was that in the South and West, where the agricultural interests are dominant, a great majority of the country banks are State institutions which have failed to take advantage of their opportunity to join the Federal reserve system.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, this is but a willful and deliberate effort, bold and determined in its character, on the part of the reserve bank to escape responsibility for the part that they have played in the stagnation of business and to lay the responsibility of their sins and unwarranted policies at the doors of the State banks. [Applause.]

The State banks of Georgia need no defense at my hands. These cherished institutions are dear to the hearts of the people of their respective communities. It is to them they turn for assistance in their hour of distress; they have their confidence, and from constant business dealings they are cognizant of the fact that almost superhuman efforts have been exerted to aid them in this crisis and to stem the tide of depression and deflation put in motion by the policies of the Federal Reserve Board.

There can not be produced a scintilla of evidence to justify the contention that the failure of the State banks to join the system has been the cause of lack of credit accommodations for the agricultural interests of the South and West, but, sir, on the contrary, one of the contributing factors has been the unjustifiable, constant, and continued increase and discriminatory discount rates, thereby making it almost impossible for even member banks to borrow. On January 1, 1920, the discount rate of the Reserve Bank of Atlanta on commercial and industrial papers was 4½ per cent; on that very same day and at the same bank the discount rate on agricultural and live-stock papers was 5½ per cent. A deliberate discrimination against agricultural papers of three-fourths per cent.

Within less than 26 days the discount rate on agricultural paper was increased to 6 per cent, and on November 1 was as high as 7 per cent. The legal rate of interest in Georgia is 8 per cent, and no member bank could scarcely afford to pay a discount rate of 7 per cent and the progressive rate put into effect, and in turn lend to their customers with only a margin of 1 per cent, for it would in a great many instances not be sufficient to pay the operating expenses of the institution. It naturally follows, as doth the night the day, that high priced money necessarily means fewer loans. The discount rate had been constantly increased until it had almost reached the point where member banks which were carrying loans for nonmember banks and other customers could not obtain accommodations for their correspondents, necessarily lessening credit accommodations to the people who patronized the State banks.

Why this discrimination against agricultural paper and in favor of commercial industrial paper? In each instance they had to bear the indorsement of the member banks discounting them. One was just as secure as the other for the liability of the member bank was back of each.

It was only by these exorbitant rates of discount and the establishment of the so-called progressive rates that the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, on a paid-up capital of $4,053,050 was able to earn over and above all of its exorbitant expenses a net profit in 1920 of $6,010,324.13, or more than 140 per cent.

I challenge the thought that it was ever the intention of Congress that these banks should become such gigantic money-making institutions. The very language of the act creating the same nullifies any such thought or idea, for by the plain letter of the law the dividend to the stockholders was limited to 6 per cent.

To earn this enormous net profit of $6,010,324.13, the bank had to adopt the methods of the profiteer and the Shylock—deliberate contraction of the circulation of Federal reserve notes, hence creating a greater demand and then raising their discount rates and establishing the progressive rates. This policy by which they enriched themselves and impoverished others has paralyzed agriculture as well as all other business.

Mr. Chairman, another factor in lessening credit and forcing agricultural products on the markets at less than the actual cost of production was the unauthorized withdrawal during the year 1920 of nearly a billion dollars of Federal reserve notes from circulation.

On January 1, 1920, there was in circulation $3,319,415,111 of Federal reserve notes, and during that year the Federal reserve banks carrying out the well-laid plans of the board, withdrew from circulation $924,166,032 of Federal reserve notes, reducing the per capita circulation from $59.14 to $52.19.

When money becomes scarce, credit accommodations are more difficult to obtain. The business expansion and development of this country did not take place during an era of a contraction of the currency. Whenever there is a marked withdrawal of currency from circulation, certain things are inevitable—bread lines in almost every city; closed factories; agriculture at its lowest ebb, and general depression in all lines of business.

No panic has ever been produced in this country by an expansion of the currency. The history of every one shows beyond a doubt that they occur only when large volumes of currency are withdrawn from circulation.

One of the dominant reasons for the very creation of the Federal reserve system was to make impossible in the future such a panic as that of 1907 which was caused by the large banks and moneyed interests of Wall Street deliberately withdrawing from circulation immense amounts of currency. Yet, in spite of the fact that this system was created by Congress to prohibit such a recurrence, we find the Federal Reserve Board following a course similar to that pursued by the moneyed interests, and the result of the depression in the latter instance has been even greater.

There can be no escape, Mr. Chairman, from the conclusion that the willful withdrawal of nearly a billion dollars from circulation, the unjustifiable raising of the discount rates, the establishment of the progressive rates, the inauguration of the deflation policies, the increase of the value of the monetary unit as compared with the value of products, and the general refusal of credit accommodations are the greatest blunders in the financial history of the world, and are responsible in producing the present agricultural crisis and general business depression. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER.

Salaries: Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, $6,500; Assistant Sergeant at Arms, $2,500; Assistant Doorkeeper, $3,600; Acting Assistant Doorkeeper, $3,600; two floor assistants, at $2,500 each; messengers—5 (acting as assistant doorkeepers, including one for minority) at $1,800 each, 37 (including 1 for minority) at $1,440 each, one $1,000, 1 at card door $1,600; clerk on Journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be selected by the official reporters, $2,800; storekeeper, $2,500; stenographer in charge of furniture accounts and records, $1,200; upholsterer and locksmith, $1,440; cabinetmaker, $1,200; 3 carpenters, at $1,080 each; janitor, $1,200; 4 skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; laborer in charge of private passage, $900; 3 female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring rooms, at $720 each; 3 attendants to women's toilet rooms, Senate Office Building, at $720 each; telephone operators—chief, $1,500, 4 at $900 each, night operator $720; telephone page, $720; 24 elevator conductors, including 14 for the Senate Office Building, at $1,200 each; laborer in charge of Senate toilet rooms in old library space, $660; attendant for service in old library portion of the Capitol, $1,500; press gallery—superintendent $2,500, assistant superintendent $1,600; messenger for service to press correspondents $1,000; laborers—3 at $800 each; 34 at $720 each; 16 pages for the Senate Chamber, at the rate of $2.50 per day each during the session, $4,720; in all, $183,080.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 7, lines 5 and 6, strike out the following: "24 elevator conductors, including 14 for the Senate Office Building, at $1,200 each."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is in accordance with the general policy of placing these elevator conductors under the Architect of the Capitol, and in the proper place an amendment will be offered inserting these elevator conductors in the bill under the architect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For packing boxes, $970.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against line 22, which makes an appropriation for packing boxes.

The Chair will probably remember that in the last legislative appropriation bill I made a point of order to such a provision for packing boxes for the House, and the Chair sustained it, there being no law authorizing it, and there is no law authorizing these boxes. They are the cedar, pine, or oak boxes which heretofore have been given to Members every year.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I submit there is nothing in this paragraph which indicates that these are packing boxes for Senators at all. I do not know whether they are or not. It seems to me the purchase of packing boxes for the Senate is a proper item of contingent expense, just as much so as drinking water, and therefore that this item is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair will note the precedents sustaining a similar point of order in the last bill. These are undoubtedly packing boxes for the Members of the Senate. You can not get around it. There is no provision of law for it. It is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill, I submit to the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this comes under the head of contingent expenses of the Senate. There is no specific authority of law providing postage stamps for the Secretary of the Senate or the Sergeant at Arms; no authority of law especially providing for fuel oil or cotton waste or advertising or purchasing of furniture or repair of furniture, and yet it would be ridiculous to say that because there is no specific authority of law for these things that under the time of contingent expenses they could not be allowed. The same is true of packing boxes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will cite the Chair to the precedent. If the Chair will look in the Record of February 10, 1921, he will note where the Chair sustained a similar point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the ruling of the Chair cited by the gentleman from Texas this item has been held out of order. While the present occupant of the chair, aside from that ruling, does not desire to so hold, yet in view of the ruling cited the Chair feels that he should follow the precedent established and sustain the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the Chair, I take it that the Chair will not take it amiss if I respectfully appeal from his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair thinks the ruling ought to be overruled. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I respectfully appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division, if the Chair please.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas calls for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The ruling on the question of order is not sustained. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee why this bill carries an appropriation for packing boxes for Senators, but does not carry an appropriation for boxes for Members of the House?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say to the gentleman that in the face of the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole last year our committee did not feel justified in putting in the bill an item for packing boxes for Members of the House. In view of the recent test perhaps it might be proper to do so.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will ask if it is proposed to offer such an amendment at the proper time?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. During the war the boxes were not provided, because I understand the cost of the boxes was raised so much that the Clerk of the House could not probably furnish the proper number for the amount appropriated, or at least he wisely decided not to do so. Possibly some new Members of the House do not know what these boxes are. Every Member of the House ought to receive them, in my judgment. [Applause.] When Members come here they have to send home many things in the way of documents, and so forth, which can only be sent in a proper box.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. And the boxes as now constructed are so arranged as to enable the files to be taken out of the filing cases and shipped in the boxes without disturbing the files at all.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I notice at the top of page 9 an item "Miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $100,000." Why would not that purchase packing boxes?

Mr. MANN. That is for other purposes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It just says, "For miscellaneous items."

Mr. MANN. It is made for other purposes, not for packing boxes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It could be used for that, could it not?

Mr. MANN. It could not be if the money is used for other purposes.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield if I have the floor.

Mr. ROACH. I am one of the new Members, and I do not know what number would be necessary to supply these packing boxes to the Members. I think they should have them, but not being advised of the amount heretofore appropriated I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he can give us that information?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember the amount of the appropriation heretofore.

Mr. ANDERSON. Four thousand three hundred dollars. That is the recollection of Mr. Page, the Clerk of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a little inaccurate. He is not usually inaccurate, but he is in this instance, because during the war packing boxes were furnished. In December, 1917, during the war, the Clerk furnished to each Member a cedar box, a pine box, and an oak box. In December, 1918, he likewise furnished each Member with a cedar box, a pine box, and an oak box. In December, 1919, the year following the war, the Clerk furnished each Member with a cedar box and a pine box and an oak box. But in December, 1920, after the war, for the first time the Clerk ceased to furnish to Members these packing boxes, because the cost went up to such an extent that he could not buy them for the amount of the appropriation. On the succeeding legislative appropriation bill, as was stated, I made the point of order against the item, and it was stricken out of the bill, and it was not put back, and no appropriation was made for these boxes in that legislative bill. The gentleman from Illinois says these boxes should be furnished, but I called attention to the fact at the time I made a fight on this item that our distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the gentleman in charge of this bill now, during his long legislative career had probably received, if he had gotten all that was coming to him, 44 cedar boxes and 44 pine boxes and 44 oak boxes, and God only knows what he has done with them. Why, he did not have ward heelers enough to take them all in. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CANNON. I am aware that I received many applications throughout the country, especially for cedar boxes, and Texas was in the saddle.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and the gentleman had so many of them that he even had to furnish my State with some of them. Why should this be carried on any longer?

Mr. CANNON. But I did not respond, nor did I receive the cedar boxes.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman usually gets what is coming to him, but maybe did not get all that was credited to him.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has had them credited to him, and by making proper application to the Clerk each year he would have received them. But I say it is wrong. It is one of those little things that we ought to stop.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Did you get yours?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; while they were in the getting I got them. That is the way you answer the question, "Didn't you get yours?" But if you will help me keep this out of the bill I will not get any more, and you will not get any more, and it will stop. All it needs is the votes of ourselves, the recipients of these things, to stop them, and we ought to stop them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman indicate how he gets his files and papers back to his home at the close of the session?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not had to take them home yet from a session of Congress, and I do not anticipate that I shall have to in the near future.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If Congress adjourns early in July, the gentleman may be home five months this year.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think Congress is going to adjourn then. I think the gentleman has doubts about it. We are going to be kept here month after month during the year, every year, to attend to the business of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: Doorkeeper, $5,000; maintenance and repair of folding room motor truck, $500; special employee, $1,800; superintendent of reporters' gallery, $2,000; janitor, $1,500; messengers—17 at $1,180 each, 14 on soldiers' roll at $1,200 each; laborers—17 at $720 each, 2 known as cloakroom men at $840 each, 8 known as cloakroom men, 1 $600 and $120 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent, and 7 at $600 each; 2 female attendants in ladies' retiring rooms at $800 each; superintendent of folding room, $2,500; foreman, $2,100; chief clerk to superintendent of folding room, $1,800; 3 clerks at $1,600 each; janitor, $720; laborer, $720; 31 folders, at $900 each; shipping clerk, $1,200; 2 drivers, at $840 each; 2 chief pages, at $1,500 each; 2 telephone pages, at $1,200 each; 2 messengers in charge of telephones (1 for the minority), at $2,160 each; assistant messenger in charge of telephones, $1,500; 42 pages, during the session, including a press-gallery page and 10 pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2.50 per day each, $12,390; 24 elevator conductors, including 14 for the House Office Building, at $1,200 each; laborer, $800; superintendent of document room, $2,900; assistant superintendent, $2,100; clerk, $1,700; assistant clerk, $1,600; 8 assistants, at $1,280 each; janitor, $920; messenger to press room, $1,000; in all, $185,190.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ANDERSON: On page 14, line 14, after the figures "$2,000," insert the following: "Assistant to the superintendent of the reporters' gallery, $1,200."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is to provide for the employee who was authorized by resolution of the House day before yesterday.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. The resolution which was agreed to the other day authorized the appointment of an assistant to the superintendent of the House press gallery. I think it is ordinarily known as the House press gallery. Does not the gentleman think he ought to modify the language of his amendment to conform to the language of the resolution authorizing this employee?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the gentleman is correct. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment so as to read "assistant to the superintendent of the House press gallery."

Mr. MANN. The press gallery.

Mr. ANDERSON. The language of the resolution is "House press gallery."

Mr. MANN. All these items are under the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the modification will be made as suggested by the gentleman.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. ANDERSON. In lieu of the word "reporters," in line 14, page 14, substitute the words "House press."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 14, line 14, strike out the word "reporters," and in lieu thereof insert the words "House press."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 15, lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out the following: "24 elevator conductors, including 14 for the House Office Building, at $1,200 each."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, these elevator conductors will be provided for in the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department, under the Architect of the Capitol.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ: On page 14, line 16, strike out the figures "$1,200" and insert "$1,440."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. This is a statutory position and the salary is fixed by law. The amendment proposes legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ARENTZ. I know the gentleman from Texas would like to see work of a similar nature paid for at the same rate. If the gentleman will refer to page 6, under the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, he will see 37 doorkeepers at $1,440. Does not the gentleman from Texas believe that the men doing similar work as assistants of the Doorkeeper of the House should receive the same pay?

Mr. BLANTON. If the chairman of the committee has no objection to this amendment, I am not going to insist on my point of order, and I withdraw it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. These salaries are fixed by law, and I think in accordance with the general policy we ought not to permit increases of salaries at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals of the paragraphs to conform to the action of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals of the bill in accordance with the action of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of W. Ray Loomis as assistant in the document room, $2,500.

Mr. BEGG. I make a point of order against lines 16 and 17.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order.

Mr. BEGG. This is a change in the statutory regulations on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the Chair's attention to a resolution passed by the House providing for this particular position. It was discussed at some length. The attention was called to the special work that this man does and of its valuable nature. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio overlooked the resolution.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, the resolution that put this man on the statutory roll reads as follows:

For his services as editor and compiler of the weekly compendium and as assistant in the document room.

Now, two-thirds of the reasons for his being appointed is omitted, because we have ceased to use the compendium. As assistant in the document room is only a partial reason why his appointment was made. It is a change of statutory law which says he has the two duties added to that of assistant in the document room, and I submit that you might as well repeal a part of any statute as a statute of this kind.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any precedent applicable to a situation of this kind. As I understand the matter, Congress has ceased to provide for two of the elements of this man's services for which he was originally employed. However, Congress it seems to me might proceed to appropriate for his employment for the third function which he performed. In other words, it is not this appropriation which repeals that part of the resolution; it is the action of Congress failing to provide for it, and repealing the function does not repeal altogether the resolution under which this man is employed, and it is still in order to appropriate for his salary under one of the functions which he has conducted.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I should like to add one word. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota that there was evidently a reasonable belief that we needed this man at this salary when he was employed on the statutory roll to do this particular work, which work was to issue the compendium both weekly and monthly. Now Congress has decided that we do not need these documents. There is nothing for him to do in that particular, and I submit that a $2,500 assistant is not needed in the document room.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. What is this man doing at the present time?

Mr. BEGG. I understand that he is not here now. My best information is that he is not even in the city. He has been connected with a commercial business down town, but I guess he severed his connection with that some time in the past.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is important for the committee of the House to know whether he is here and whether he is doing any work.

Mr. BEGG. The best information I have is that he is not here. Whether he is away on a leave of absence or not I cannot say. I am sure that we put him on the roll for two reasons. It is certain that he has not compiled a compendium. I am not in favor of putting a man on the statutory roll to be a servant of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have had occasion several times lately to call on this man for information concerning matters of legislation pending before the House, and I have found him each time I called on him in Mr. Grayson's room in the document room, and I do not know of a man connected with the Capitol, unless it is Joel Grayson himself, who knows more about what there is in the Capitol and can put his hand on it.

Mr. BEGG. I think if the gentleman goes there now to call on him he will find that he is not here.

Mr. BLANTON. He may not be here to-day, but every time I have called upon him he has been able to put his hand on what I wanted and he has rendered very valuable assistance. It is that kind of men that we want here at the Capitol on the pay roll.

Mr. BEGG. I can readily understand why the gentleman from Texas wants him kept on the pay roll.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, he will render the same service to anybody else.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is it not a fact that this man still compiles the information, although Congress does not publish it?

Mr. BEGG. What in the name of reason is the use of keeping a man on the pay roll to compile information that Congress does not use?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I think a Member could get it if he wanted it.

Mr. BEGG. I know that it has not been published for nearly a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The resolution authorizing the employment of this man was passed in July, 1919, presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND], chairman of the Committee on Accounts. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $3,000 per annum, payable monthly, to W. Ray Loomis for his services as editor and compiler of the Weekly Compendium and Monthly Compendium and as assistant in the document room.

There was an amendment to the resolution which reduced the amount to $2,500. The appropriation in the bill reads as follows:

For compensation of W. Ray Loomis as assistant in the document room, $2,500.

The question is whether this appropriation is warranted under the authority which I have read which constitutes the law justifying the appropriation. It appears to the Chair that there is no possible question about that. The appropriation was only authorized by existing law for the purpose of providing, as stated, for the services of compiling a compendium and as assistant in the document room. This appropriation is not for such purpose, but for the purpose of paying for an assistant. The identification of the individual would not help, in the judgment of the Chair, in making it possible for the Chair to hold that it was authorized by existing law when the only existing law is distinctly different from the appropriation, and the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of majority floor leader: Clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,500; janitor, $1,000; in all, $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have never been the floor leader of the House, but for some years I was the minority leader of the House. I know something more, probably, than the ordinary Member would know, although we all know fairly well about the duties and the work of the floor leader of the House. I think that the floor leader ought to have an additional employee, I am not going to offer an amendment at this time. I think the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], now the floor leader, and whoever becomes floor leader hereafter, ought to have in addition to the employees now given to the floor leader the services of some man or woman whose salary should be, say, $4,000 a year, who will be able to examine carefully all of the bills reported to the House and all of the reports in order to render assistance to the floor leader, who, by reason of his position, is supposed to know and ought to know with regard to all of the bills reported to the House and many which are not reported, which have been introduced. As I say, I shall not offer the amendment at this time because I think it ought to come from the Committee on Accounts. However, it is my judgment that a provision of that kind should be made. I think it would be to the interest of the Government, the interest of economy, the interest of the House, to make a provision of that sort, whichever side is in the majority in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE.

Salaries: Postmaster, $4,000; Assistant Postmaster, $2,200; registry and money-order clerk, $1,500; 34 messengers (including 1 to superintend transportation of mails), at $1,200 each; for the employment of substitute messengers at the rate of not to exceed $100 per month each, $1,000; laborer, $720; in all, $50,220.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Why the "$5,000" in line 11?

Mr. MANN. That seems to be a total.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is a total. It is evidently in the wrong place.

Mr. WALSH. In line 9 we have the total, "in all, $5,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the figures "$5,000," in line 11, page 16, be stricken out and a period substituted for the comma at the end of line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the figures "$5,000," in line 11, on page 16, be stricken out and that a period be substituted for the comma at the end of line 10. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman should first get unanimous consent to return to that paragraph, because we have passed it.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if unanimous consent be given for the striking of it out, that would be included.

Mr. MANN. This is a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON. The paragraph, of course, is not agreed to until the whole bill is agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK HIRE, MEMBERS AND DELEGATES.

For clerk hire necessarily employed by each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $3,200 per annum, in monthly installments, $1,408,000: Provided, That the joint resolution approved July 11, 1919, shall apply to this appropriation in the same manner as it applied to the appropriation for clerk hire for Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners for the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman in charge of the bill what is to be done with reference to paying the bonus which has heretofore been paid. I understood from the committee that it was going to drop the bonus, but I notice the same provision is carried here that would warrant it.

Mr. ANDERSON. That proviso has no relation whatsoever to the bonus. It relates to the provision for paying the salary to the clerk instead of to the Member.

Mr. BLANTON. But the joint resolution referred to there places these employees on the roll, so that they would draw the bonus.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true. If other employees get the bonus, these employees ought to get it. This bill does not provide for the bonus. The whole question of the bonus, I understand, will be taken up in a deficiency bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that not going to be left off after July 1?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not speak for the House or for the committee on that question. I do not know what the policy will be with respect to it.

Mr. BLANTON. It will be the sixth bonus that Congress will have paid the civilian employees of the Government.

Mr. ANDERSON. My impression is that the bonus will be paid, and I hope it will be.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, and materials for repairs of the same, including not to exceed $12,000 for labor, tools, and machinery for furniture repair shop, $30,000.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. After the period in line 8, page 18, amend by inserting the following:

For packing boxes, $4,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROACH: Page 18, after line 8, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"For packing boxes, $4,500."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the additional point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman is not germane to the paragraph to which it is offered. The paragraph under which it is offered has no reference to packing boxes. It deals with a subject that does not embrace packing boxes. The paragraph which the gentleman offers is in connection with no paragraph either before or succeeding it which relates to packing boxes.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment. The only paragraph in the whole bill that relates to packing boxes is on page 8, 10 pages previous, which has already been passed.

And in making that point of order, that it is not germane to the paragraph, I want to cite the Chair to a decision rendered by the very distinguished parliamentarian, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], that such an amendment must be germane to the paragraph and even though offered as an additional paragraph, as a new paragraph, it nevertheless, for the purpose of germaneness, is to be construed with the paragraph preceding it. In other words, the decision of the gentleman from Connecticut then rendered was based upon this kind of a case. An amendment was offered after the last paragraph of a bill as a new paragraph, and yet the gentleman from Connecticut held, based upon a long line of authorities, that such an amendment, even though offered as a new paragraph, notwithstanding, must be germane to the paragraph immediately preceding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The question of whether or not it must be or must not be relevant to the preceding paragraph is to be governed always by circumstances. In an appropriation bill in most cases that is entirely impossible. However, for purposes of convenience usually the appropriations for similar lines of purposes are grouped together, and as an indication the present group is contingent expenses of the House. This, of course, will be a contingent expense of the House. The Chair will further state that when this appropriation was originally adopted in an appropriation bill it was exactly in the same position that it now occupies and follows the same preceding paragraph. The objection is not sustained.

Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be recognized?

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be recognized except to state this. I am not clear as to the correct amount that will be necessary to be appropriated for this particular item. If the chairman of the committee has any suggestion to make relative to the amount to be appropriated and necessary to furnish these boxes I would be glad to hear it. The necessity for the packing boxes is apparent to every Member about me for the papers and documents accumulating in his office at a rapid rate and for which provision should be made.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will state to the gentleman that the last time we carried that item at $4,500.

Mr. ROACH. And the gentleman thinks that is the correct amount?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, may I have the amendment reported? I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask that it be reported in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 47, noes 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protection of the Capitol: For an additional uniformed police force for the protection of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the Senate and House Office Buildings, and the Capitol power plant, and for emergencies, and each and every item incident thereto, $15,000: Provided, That the appointments to the positions herein provided shall be made by the Sergeants at Arms of the two Houses and the Architect of the Capitol, and shall be made solely on account of efficiency and special qualifications.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I inquire the meaning of this paragraph, "For an additional uniformed police force"? Does that include extra men, who are not on the regular force, or is it the regular force under that name?

Mr. ANDERSON. This is the regular force, but these are not, as I understand it, patronage employees. The employees provided for under the item at the top of page 19, as I understand it, are patronage employees, but the police employed under the item to which the gentleman refers are not such.

Mr. DOWELL. But they are regular employees?

Mr. ANDERSON. They are regular employees on the force.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL.

Salaries: Architect of the Capitol, $6,000; chief clerk and accountant, $3,000; civil engineer, $2,400; construction draftsman, $2,000; 2 clerks, at $1,200 each; compensation to disbursing clerk, $1,000; laborer in charge of toilets in central portion of the Capitol, $660; laborer for cleaning rotunda, corridors, dome, and old library portion of Capitol, $660; 2 laborers in charge of public toilets of the House of Representatives and in the terrace, at $720 each; forewoman of charwomen, $480; 21 charwomen at $240 each; in all, $25,080.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a new paragraph at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ANDERSON: On page 21, after line 8, insert the following new paragraph:

"For 48 elevator conductors, including 14 for the Senate Office Building and 14 for the House Office Building, at $1,200 each, $57,600."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, practically this amendment is to bring all the elevator conductors under the supervision of the Architect of the Capitol and it does not change the present situation so far as the patronage concerning these is concerned.

Mr. DOWELL. Is this going to insure us a better service than we have, or is it for some other purpose?

Mr. ANDERSON. We hope so.

Mr. DOWELL. Is that the purpose of this change?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is the only purpose, except to bring the items together and avoid appropriating for them in several different places under different titles of appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAPITOL BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Capitol Buildings: For work at the Capitol and for general repairs thereof, including cleaning and repairing works of art, flags for the east and west fronts of the center of the Capitol and for Senate and House Office Buildings; flagstaffs, halyards, and tackle; wages of mechanics and laborers; purchase and maintenance, and driving of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying office vehicles; and not exceeding $100 for the purchase of technical and necessary reference books and city directory, $129,500.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of making an observation in reference to the display of the flag on the east and west porticos of this building. There has been in this country a good deal of agitation with reference to the public display of the national ensign. During the war the Superintendent of the Capitol issued an order that night and day the flag should fly over the east and west porticos of this Capitol, and that was accepted, I think, as a standard throughout the country. As one who has been somewhat interested in the American flag, I have had numerous requests for information whether or not that order was still being maintained. I found that shortly after the war the order was rescinded and that the flag was flown only in the daytime. I have a feeling—it may be only a matter of sentiment, but sentiment is very potent in all human affairs, and it may not be of great national importance—that there should be one place in America where the American flag should fly by day and by night, and that place, it seems to me, is over the Capitol of this Republic. I do not like to offer an amendment—maybe it would not be proper to put it in as an amendment—but I should like to see consideration given to the matter in some way on the part of this House in order that our people would know that there was one place where the American flag was flying at all times, in all weather, and under all conditions. I merely bring this forward so that the Superintendent of the Capitol may know one Member at least favors the flying of our national emblem by night and by day over the seat of the Federal authority. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For constructing conduits and installing all mains, cables, apparatus, etc., including personal services, necessary to provide the Botanic Garden with heat and light from the Capitol power plant, the work to be done under the supervision of the Architect of the Capitol, $20,000.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee how the appropriation for the Botanic Garden comes to be placed in an appropriation bill for the legislative branch of the Government?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is a part of the legislative establishment and always has been under the control and jurisdiction of Congress.

Mr. LONDON. It is not in any way a part of the legislative work. How does the Botanic Garden happen to come under the jurisdiction of Congress?

Mr. MANN. It was in the first instance under the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. ANDERSON. It was first under the Joint Committee on the Library, and it is a historical development of many years ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.
SALARIES.

General administration: Librarian, $7,500; chief assistant librarian, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500; librarian's secretary, $1,800; assistant chief clerk, $1,600; assistant in charge of supplies, $1,400; clerks—one $1,200, two at $1,000 each; stenographers and typewriters—one to chief assistant librarian $1,200, one $1,200, one $900; messenger, $840; messenger to chief assistant librarian, $600; junior messenger, $420; operator of photographic copying machine, $600; in all, $28,260.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few moments ago when the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] was speaking, he referred to the fact that there were low salaries paid in the Library. And the report on this bill says:

The committee recognizes the fact that a low standard of pay obtains in the Library, but does not feel that an exception should be made to the policy adopted respecting increases in salary generally pending legislative action on the general subject.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, the time will come, and come soon, when the legislative committee will bring forth a bill increasing the pay of many of these employees in the Library. To me it is a wonder how some of these employees live on the salaries the Government pays them. We witness in responsible positions as chiefs of the bureaus and others who are performing valuable services, men of experience, men of skill, men of knowledge, whose pay is below probably what would be paid for the same kind of work by outside libraries. I know by acquaintanceship with Dr. Putnam, the Librarian, a man of culture and ability, that at times he has had to use his personal friendship and appeal to the sentiment of service in order to retain many of these faithful employees, whose places he could not fill without loss to the Government. The pay for the work they are doing is entirely too small for the magnificent monument they are erecting for the public benefit. We want to pay Dr. Putnam and the men under him a proper compensation for the work they are doing and I regret that this pay is not now adequate.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why does not the gentleman offer an amendment increasing the salaries?

Mr. HICKS. I would do that but for the statement in the report, and I assume that the chairman of the legislative committee will soon bring in a bill providing for the increases.

Mr. ANDERSON. I assume that the Library of Congress, like other departments, will be taken care of under the reclassification bill.

Mr. HICKS. I hope so, and I hope that my friend from Texas agrees that these salaries are low. I desire to pay my tribute to Dr. Putnam and his coworkers in the Library for their unselfish service, for their achievements, and for their constant efforts for the public good.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have not investigated them, but it occurs to me that if the gentleman is of the opinion they should be increased it would be more tangible to offer an amendment.

Mr. HICKS. I do not do it because of the report, not because I do not feel it is deserved.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Manuscript: Chief of division, $3,000; assistants—chief $1,500, one $960; junior messenger, $420; in all, $5,880.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the "$3,000" in line 13 of page 27, and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD of Indiana: On page 27, line 13, strike out the "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to call the attention of the committee to a set of facts existing, about which there can be no dispute, with reference to the present chief of this division. I am willing to agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] that in the main the salaries paid to the employees of the Library of Congress are very, very small in comparison with the ability and accomplishments that should be, and are, for the most part, required of them; but the present chief of the division of manuscripts devotes little, if any, of his time to the work to which he is supposed to be giving his full time to the Government. The law requires that this gentleman should give all of his time to the Government as chief of the manuscript division. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who had his attention called to the fact that this gentleman was not devoting his time to the duties to which he is assigned and for which he is being paid, was informed by Mr. Putnam himself that he was absent and out of the city, not on any work connected with the Library at all, 112 days last year. And that is but a drop in the bucket. During the time that this gentleman is in Washington but a very small portion of his time is devoted to this manuscript division.

I wish to say to this committee that I have taken some pains to inquire, and it is a fact that will not be disputed that, so far as the routine work of the manuscript division is concerned, it is absolutely performed by Mr. Fitzpatrick, the assistant. He used to do all the work before Mr. Moore came there, and when Mr. Moore came he announced in the presence of three or four people that he knew nothing about manuscript or historical work, and that things would go on as before in this division.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Who appointed him?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why not fire him and let the assistant do the work?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That ought to be done. But the fact is, gentlemen, if you would go over there to-day in this manuscript division, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred you would not find Mr. Moore there at all, and even if you found him there and made any inquiry concerning any business with reference to the manuscript division he would turn you over to Mr. Fitzpatrick; and that has been done in the last 10 days by a number of people for the purpose of ascertaining the fact. I bring it to you.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman does not desire to employ this man a part of his time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not desire to employ him at all. But he does not employ himself at all. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. DOWELL. Why does not the gentleman move to strike out all of his salary?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that should be done.

Mr. DOWELL. But under the gentleman's amendment he would be employed part of the time, and the rest of the time he would not be expected to be there. I think you ought to have him discharged if he is inefficient.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would be glad if the gentleman would modify my amendment by moving to strike out the entire salary. But the fact is that this gentleman is compelled under the law to devote his entire time to this work, and he is devoting but little of his time to it, and he admits that this routine work, at least, is performed by Mr. Fitzpatrick, the assistant chief of this division.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. When the law provides that a man shall devote his entire time to his work it means he shall devote to his work the entire time allotted for the performance of his work. It does not mean his entire time after he has performed this service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. The work is not performed by the chief of this division, but is performed by the assistant chief.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not the duty of the chief to get a man under him to work? [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Even then it requires supervision, and this gentleman is not there for the purpose of supervision.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Is this the same man who is connected with the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. And he devotes most of his time, if not all of it, to the affairs of that commission.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman made a reference to the officiousness of some one on Maryland Avenue, and spoke of this gentleman having had charge of the location of a comfort station at the end of the avenue. I have investigated that question since that time, and I find that the Fine Arts Commission had nothing to do with it. It was done through the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If this man is employed as a specialist in this division and required to give but little of his time to the performance of duty the language in this item should be changed to fit the case. But it is a fraud on the Government to provide a salary for full time when we know that the occupant of the position does not give full time to the discharge of the duties of his office and when we know that most of his time is occupied in doing things in no wise connected with his office.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, of course it is impossible for a member of the committee to know about every employment in every bill with which he has to do, but it so happens that this matter has come up before, and there is some information existing with respect to it. The item which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] proposes to strike out is the salary of the chief of the manuscript division of the Library of Congress.

Now, the important thing about the manuscript proposition is to get the manuscripts. They do not normally come in very largely through voluntary donations. They have to be sought for. They have to be obtained from the people who have them or who have collected them. This requires a very wide acquaintance among people of letters, among university men, and among people who have wide acquaintance with public men. The work of the chief of the manuscript division consists very largely in forming the contacts with the people who have these manuscripts and visiting them and inducing them to place those manuscripts in the Library.

It is true that the chief of this division has been absent from Washington more or less. I have here a list of the times during the past year when he was absent, and the purposes for which he was absent, which list I shall be very glad to put into the RECORD. I also have a letter from the librarian, which I shall ask to have inserted in the RECORD. The librarian says that during the incumbency of this man, Mr. Moore, more important manuscripts have been brought into the Library than at any similar period during its history. He is regarded as a most valuable man in this particular work, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will not be agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does not the gentleman think that under the law if a man is paid for his entire time he ought to give his entire time to the Government?

Mr. ANDERSON. There are a great many ways of giving your entire time. We are paid for our entire time, but we do not stay here in the Hall of the House or in the committee room the entire day every day. We occasionally think we have sense enough to see how we can properly be away from here, and if our duties properly take us away from here we go.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman think he would be justified, or that his constituents might justify him in going away from his duties here and staying away 112 days in one year?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it might depend altogether upon the circumstances and character of the conditions at the time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If you were doing something entirely disconnected from your congressional duties?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think there is anything that indicates that this man has been away entirely disconnected from his duties for 112 days.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Why, the very letter you have there from Mr. Putnam says Mr. Moore was absent 112 days last year.

Mr. ANDERSON. I presume the gentleman refers in part to the trip which he made abroad, which was a trip for the War Department in connection with the landscape work on the American cemeteries in France, in which case the War Department paid the expenses of the trip and the Library continued the payment of his salary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. His salary went on just the same?

Mr. ANDERSON. It did; and I think he earned it several times over.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few days ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] showed me a letter from Dr. Putnam, the Librarian of Congress, in regard to Mr. Charles Moore, following the discussion of that subject when the appropriation bill was before the House which carried the appropriation for the Fine Arts Commission. This letter from Dr. Putnam stated, as I recall, that Mr. Moore is the most useful man in acquiring manuscripts that the Government has ever had. The manuscript division of the Library endeavors to secure possession of historical manuscripts for the Library. A Member of the House now on the floor told me within a day that he had received a letter from Mr. Moore desiring to obtain some manuscript in relation to a peace treaty which was proclaimed a few years ago. Dr. Putnam says that Mr. Moore, with his wide acquaintance, is able to go to many people who have valuable historical manuscripts and to secure these manuscripts from them without cost to the Government, and these manuscripts are of great value in the possession of the Government. Dr. Putnam further says that Mr. Moore's connection with the Fine Arts Commission is a valuable asset to the Government in securing these manuscripts. Now, if we are to retain Mr. Moore in this position, I think it would be a very invidious distinction to say that the chiefs of all the other divisions in the Library should receive $3,000 a year and that the chief of this division should receive only $1,500 a year.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Does the gentleman know any other chief of division in the Library who does not give his time to the Government?

Mr. MANN. This man does give his time to the Government.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How much?

Mr. MANN. He gives all of his time to the Government, and most of his time to the work of securing these manuscripts. These trips which Mr. Moore makes as chairman of the Fine Arts Commission generally have in connection with them the opportunity to see somebody who has some valuable manuscript. And by the way, referring to these trips, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] the other day severely criticized the fact that these vouchers of the Fine Arts Commission were not required to be certified or verified under oath. There was a great deal of criticism of that. An order to that effect was made by the President, or I think by the Secretary of the Treasury, a number of years ago, at the request of the then secretary of the Fine Arts Commission, who I think at that time was Col. Hart, and it was done without the solicitation of the Fine Arts Commission at all, and is immaterial to the Fine Arts Commission. Certainly no criticism of them or of Mr. Moore is justified because of that order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert with my remarks upon this item the letter from Mr. Putnam to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter to which he refers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
OFFICE OF THE LIBRARIAN,
Washington, January 24, 1922.

To the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have, and welcome, your inquiry with reference to Charles Moore—his relation with our service.

It has been in a sense special, as acting chief of our division of manuscripts. To this he came on August 17, 1918, to take temporary charge of the division during a protracted absence of its then chief, Dr. Gaillard Hunt, whom the State Department had borrowed for emergency war service. A few months ago Dr. Hunt was assigned duties at the department, which imply his permanent retention there. Mr. Moore has accordingly been continued, with great profit to the Library, for our manuscript collections consist largely of family papers deposited with us through gift or bequest. Only occasionally are they proffered. For the most part they have to be sought. In many cases the mere fact of their existence is unsuspected until disclosed through some casual remark or contact.

Mr. Moore's fortunate qualities for this quest and solicitation include the facts:

- (1) That he has a wide personal acquaintance scattered over the country, and an especially wide one among men in public life.
- (2) That he is himself an historian, an officer of the American Historical Association, and intimate with the entire group of men whose search for historical sources puts them in touch with the owners of such original material.
- (3) That to a professional standing, he adds the personal breeding which facilitates the approach to them, and the skill which makes it effective.
- (4) His acquaintance is wide also among university men and men of letters, whose interest is important to the Library in both the enrichment and use of its collections. As a member of the Institute of Architects and of the American Federation of Arts, he could aid in the enrichment and use of our collection of prints and literature of the fine arts.
- (5) His chairmanship of the Fine Arts Commission in itself insures contacts and relations which prove informing and helpful. So much so, that any trip made by him in behalf of the commission almost invariably results in an incidental increase of our collections. This is true of each trip to New York, for instance, and was true of the trip to Europe made for the War Department last spring. (See inclosed copy of my letter to Representative Wason, May 15, 1921.) In the latter case purchases for us rather than gifts resulted, but they required negotiations in London.

In addition to the solicitation of gift material, there is also the task of inspecting material offered for purchase, and the promotion of relations with other institutions with which we exchange or cooperate in service.

As a net result of the above more personal collections of historical importance have been added to our manuscript division during his incumbency than during any similar period preceding. A glance at my last three annual reports indicates this. If you will scan the 60 pages of these describing accessions of manuscripts, you will note collection after collection whose acquisition has been due largely to his active initiative.

In these interests the chief of our manuscripts division might well spend at least half of his time "in the field."

During the past year Mr. Moore spent but 112 days, of which 65 went to the trip abroad and only 15 to annual leave. (See dates appended.)

During each year preceding the absences were less. One to the Pacific coast in 1920, though partly personal and debitable to annual leave, included certain addresses at universities descriptive of the Library and its aims and likely to benefit it.

The expense to it, on the other hand, of such trips as he has taken has been trifling—in the fiscal year 1919 only $46.05; in 1920, $120.27; in 1921, $107.89. [The dates and itineraries are annually reported by me to Congress and referred to your committee.] I have reason to believe that whatever the expense to the Government of any trips that he has taken, he has been, like the rest of us, out of pocket for expenses not chargeable.

The salary of the position is only $3,000. If I knew of a man who could bring to the service the unique experience and qualities which has Mr. Moore, I know of none who could be secured in his place at less than double that sum.

It is the only compensation he draws from the Government, his service as chairman of the commission being purely honorary.

He is, in fact, one of the men, of whom my staff includes several, whose interest seems to lie primarily in doing a scholarly public service for its own sake.

The decisions of the Commission [of Fine Arts] inevitably induce some criticisms and antagonisms. Mr. Moore had expressed to me concern lest these might incidentally embarrass the Library. But I overcame these scruples in the conviction that if the public interest required the commission at all, and him at the head of it, it was an obvious economy that he should be resident in Washington, and that so long as the Library was also getting its full value from his services, and a greater value than would be had from any other man available, my duty to it was clearly fulfilled.

Faithfully, yours,

HERBERT PUTNAM, Librarian.
